There was an ordinance of the San Francisco board of health requiring that all persons found sleeping or lodging in an apartment of less than the required dimensions should be punished on conviction by fine or imprisonment, it being notorious that the Chinese population of San Francisco was the only part of its population that used apartments of such small dimensions. Then there was a regulation adopted by the board of health for the government of prisons, that every person who was committed under that ordinance and did not pay his fine should have his hair cut to within an inch of the top of his head.

That great Justice, reciting that ordinance, said: "This affects the Chinese. It is notorious that the cutting off the queue from a man of that race and of that religious faith involves to his mind degradation in this world and punishment and suffering in the next. You need not tell me that this is a municipal ordinance or a local regulation for the government of the prisons of California. It is a cruel and unusual punishment when applied to this poor people."

Mr. President, that eminent jurist has many titles to the affection of his countrymen. He helped in his youth to keep a great State, the queen of the Pacific, in her allegiance, and so was an important factor in saving the Union. He was placed upon the bench by the choice of Abraham Lincoln. For thirty years he has rendered an illustrious service to the cause of State rights under the Constitution, as my friends on the other side understand them, in which, if not without a peer, he is at least without a superior. He has taken part in all the great judgment of the great constitutional period of our jurisprudence for thirty years.

But if I were a kinsman or near friend of Mr. Justice Field I should care to put nothing upon his monument except a representation of him as delivering that judgment, by which he interposed the shield of the authority of the Constitution of the United States against that outrage upon that poor and degraded people of an alien race and an alien religion, against whom the passion of that whole coast and of the whole American people was directed.

Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in regard to the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], but I see I am taxing the patience of the Senate too long, and I will finish what I have to say in the morning.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope the Senator will conclude to-day.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator from Massachusetts will yield, I move an adjournment.

Mr. HOAR. I prefer to go on to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 17, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

CUSTODY OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that authority to consider, decide, and settle each and all matters pertaining to the custody, care, repair, and preservation of public buildings, be vested in the Secretary of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid befor the House a communication from the president of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, transmitting the names of stockholders, the amount of stock held by each, and the receipts and disbursements of the company for the year ending December 31, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were severally read twice and referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 3629) to extend to the North Pacific Ocean the provisions of the statutes for the protection of fur seals and other fur-bearing animals—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs;

A bill (S. 3670) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Lang—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and

A bill (S. 2265) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri, for to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. DANIELL, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HALLOWELL, for this day.

JOHN SCOTT.

Mr. GREENLEAF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9359) for the relief of John Scott.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. GREENLEAF. I ask that the report, which explains the bill very fully, be now read.

The report (by Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island) was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. L. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex., asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. SAWYER, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. IRBY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

It also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 4844) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to school district numbered 12, of Kittery, Me., a portion of Fort McClary military reservation, in exchange for other land; and

A bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Elisha Brown.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1674) incorporating the Society of American Florists; and

A bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, 4,000 copies of the compilation entitled "Senate Privileges and Elections," prepared by the Committee on Privileges and Elections under resolution of the Senate passed February 28, 1891, said work to be bound in two volumes, the first to contain all Senate election cases to date, and the second to contain all matter pertaining to Senate privileges, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 for the compiler.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to William W. Watson, of Walker County, Ga., when the Speaker signed the same.

ADOLPH LOSCHMIDT.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (S. 1131) for the relief of Adolph Loschmidt.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read subject to objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. KILGORE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to consume further time. I object.

HEIRS OF HENRY A. SHADEL AND OTHERS.

Mr. ENOCHS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following bills: H. R. 5603, a bill for the relief of the heirs of Henry A. Shadel, deceased; H. R. 5604, a bill for the relief of James Forgey; H. R. 5605, a bill for the relief of the estate of Edwin E. Saunders, deceased; H. R. 8375, a bill for the relief of the estate of Theodore J. Gillett, deceased; H. R. 5607, a bill for the relief of W. T. Scoville and John Kouns, surviving partners of George L. Kouns, deceased; H. R. 5608, a bill for the relief of Ammon McLaughlin, and H. R. 7300, for the relief of the heirs of Dudley D. Smith, deceased, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act of Congress to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. I object, and demand the regular order.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas claims amounting to many millions of dollars growing out of the late war for the suppression of the rebellion have been and are now pending before Congress, the Executive Departments and the Court of Claims; and

Whereas it has been asserted in the public press, and charged upon the floor of this House, that many of the claims of this character, some of doubtful validity, have been allowed and paid, while others of equally doubtful validity have been allowed, but not paid: Therefore

Resolved, That the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy, and the Attorney-General, be directed to report to this House, with as little delay as possible, the number, amount, and particulars of claims growing either directly or indirectly out of the late war for the suppression of the rebellion pending before said Departments, respectively, and the Court of Claims.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, having considered the same, respectfully report it back to the House and recommend its passage, with the following amendments, namely:

Insert after the word "particulars" the words "including the place of origin and whether presented by States or individuals."

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, several of my colleagues on the committee, as well as myself, desire to submit a few remarks on this subject, and I would like to inquire whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who introduced the resolution, or any one for him, desires any time in its consideration?

Mr. BURROWS. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that will depend somewhat on the observations made by himself and his colleagues. I see the committee recommend that the resolution be adopted, but I will be able to notify the gentleman as to what time I shall need after hearing his remarks and those of his colleagues.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I then yield twenty-five minutes of my time to my colleague [Mr. ENLOE].

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, addressing myself to this resolution, I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk an extract from the message of the President of the United States submitted to the present session of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

The aggregate of claims pending against the Government in the Court of Claims is enormous. Claims to the amount of nearly $400,000,000 for the taking of or injury to the property of persons claiming to be loyal during the war are now before that court for examination. When to these are added the Indian depredation claims and the French spoliation claims an aggregate is reached that is indeed startling. In the defense of all these cases the Government is at great disadvantage. The claimants have preserved their evidence, whereas the agents of the Government are sent into the field to rummage for what they can find. This difficulty is peculiarly great where the fact to be established is the disloyalty of the claimant during the war. If this great threat against our revenues is to have no other check certainly Congress should supply the Department of Justice with appropriations sufficiently liberal to secure the best legal talent in the defense of these claims and to pursue its vague search for evidence effectively.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, this statement, coming as it does from the President of the United States in an official message to Congress, is certainly worthy of the consideration of the country and of this House. The statement is a most remarkable one, in view of the fact that it is not based upon any official records or upon any facts to be found in any of the departments of the Government, or in the Court of Claims. We should not be astonished, and I was not particularly astonished, at some statements made upon this subject while the campaign was in progress, because it was not expected that the average campaign speaker would be very accurate in dealing with facts. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], in an interview or statement furnished to the press while the campaign was pending, stated that the amount of these claims reported from the Committee on War Claims at the first session of this Congress was about $70,000,000.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me to say so, I will state to him that I am indebted for my figures to the clerk of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. ENLOE. I do not know where the gentleman got his information, but I want to say that the gentleman's information does not seem to have been very accurate. I am satisfied that he intended to state, as nearly as he ascertained it, the truth in regard to this matter; but the difficulty was that he did not take the trouble to get it from the proper source. I think he is mistaken about the clerk of the Committee on War Claims having furnished that information to him.

Mr. REED. The information was furnished to me by the clerk of the Committee on War Claims at my request, and I thought that was a sound authority.

Mr. ENLOE. I am not questioning the gentleman's statement, only his memory. I will leave that between him and the clerk of the Committee on War Claims; but the clerk of the Committee on War Claims had no authority for furnishing any such statement, and it is not supported by the facts.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, seems to have been looking for information upon this subject, and he published in the Appendix to the proceedings of the first session of this Congress a posthumous speech. It was written for campaign purposes, I suppose, and extensively circulated all over the United States. It was quoted in various newspapers of the United States, and upon the authority of these gentlemen the argument was made upon every stump in this country that the Treasury was likely to be bankrupted by Southern war claims. I now send up the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], and ask to have it read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS.

Fourth. Twenty-seven years after the close of the late civil war the remarkable spectacle is presented of the Private Calendar of the House of Representatives being loaded down with bills favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims, while several bills are on the Union Calendar reported from that committee, the first being a bill looking to the payment of claims for use and occupation of church and school buildings and grounds during the late rebellion by the Government all through the Southern States.

It is impossible to give the exact figures of the amounts involved in these claims, but after a careful examination of the subject by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP] he asserts that the amount involved in bills favorably reported and on the Union and Private Calendars exceeds $100,000,000, while the amount unreported, including bills for the refund of the cotton tax (amounting to $60,000,000), exceeds the sum of $500,000,000. Of the 9,727 bills introduced in the House during the present session over 2,000 are war claims, of which number 878 have been favorably reported, and but for the active hostility of the Republican members of the House a very considerable number of these would have been passed. The Republican party has given a chance to the loyal men of the South to present their claims, and it is the judgment of experienced officers of the Treasury and War Departments that all proper claims of this class have been paid and that nine-tenths of the cases pending have been rejected heretofore on account of disloyalty.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] quotes as his authority the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP], and states that he gets this information from him after he has made a most careful investigation of the subject. Now the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], between them, have succeeded in running the aggregate up above five hundred millions. I suppose that this was sent to the country in advance of the campaign, from a leading member of the Committee on Appropriations in this House, and from a gentleman of distinction on this floor, with the impression that wherever that was quoted by a Republican campaign speaker on the stump it would carry the weight of truth and conviction to the minds, at least, of the Republicans hearing it.

Mr. Speaker, the only misfortune about that statement is that it is not consonant with the truth and is not based upon any fact or official record of these claims. Neither the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] nor the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] nor the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP], it seems, thought it worth while to look to the public records to ascertain what were the facts in regard to these measures, because the facts would not subserve the exigencies of a political campaign. But why the President of the United States should repeat it is more remarkable than these campaign declarations of gentlemen made upon the floor of the House.

I shall not in this connection address myself to the misrepresentations of the Committee on War Claims. I will leave it to the chairman of the committee [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] to make a statement that will completely refute the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] in regard to the work of that committee. I want to call attention in this connection to the report of the Attorney-General, which I suppose is the official document that the President had in mind, if he had any, when he made that statement in his message to Congress. I will ask to have read from the Clerk's desk an extract from the report of the Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. Cotton, who, as the representative of the Department of Justice, has charge of the defense of the Government against these claims. It is found in the report of the Attorney-General for the year 1891.

Bowman act.—From 1884 to March 3, 1891, cases under the Bowman act were annually docketed as follows:

1887	786
1888	4,562	Total	8,503
Pending November 1, 1891			7,393

The amount claimed cannot be stated with accuracy, as in many instances no sum is mentioned in the petition. Former reports of the Attorneys-General have estimated it as $400,000,000.

Mr. ENLOE. To show how much importance was attached to this political ghost of the late Confederacy at that time, and how much value the Attorney-General of the United States gave to the loose statement of his imaginative assistant, I will quote all he said on the subject in his report to the President in 1891. The Attorney-General said, by way of comment on the business of the Court of Claims: "There are now pending in that court under the same jurisdiction 1,194 suits, and under the Bowman act 7,393."

I will now invite your attention to the report of the Attorney-General for 1892 on the same subject. The Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. Cotton, does not report his "cock-and-bull story" of the year before about $400,000,000 of Southern war claims, but contents himself with a statement of facts borne out by the records of the Court of Claims. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOWMAN ACT.

Under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, the court acted during the year on 248 cases, claiming $2,583,939.41, findings which have been or will be reported to Congress. Of this number 75 cases, claiming $356,611.51, were dismissed by the court, 68 because claimants or those they represent were disloyal, and 7 for other causes.

In 15 cases, claiming $869,189.41, findings favorable to the United States on the merits have been filed by the court. In 158 cases, claiming $1,358,138.49, findings favorable to claimants were filed for $485,546.36.

Mr. ENLOE. This statement shows two things: First, that the findings represent a very small percentage of the amount claimed; second, that the Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. Cotton, does not think it is necessary to report his former unauthorized and unwarranted statement in regard to the danger to the Treasury from imaginary Southern war claims amounting to $400,000,000. The campaign was over and a change had come over the spirit of his dreams. He had no doubt learned from investigation that there was no truth in the statement of the amount of these claims, and he had learned from his experience that only about 7 per cent of these claims were allowed when tried before the Court of Claims.

The Attorney-General and the President, it seems, disregarded this last report, and after the election in which the Administration was overturned, and when there could be no creditable motive that I can conceive for making such a statement, they went back to the false statement made by the Assistant Attorney-General in 1891, and make that the basis for misrepresenting loyal claimants who reside in Southern States.

This four hundred million dollar threat against the Treasury originated in the Department of Justice and in the brain of Mr. Cotton, or else the President borrowed it from the campaign material furnished by the distinguished gentlemen on this floor, who have been juggling with the facts and figures on this subject.

The first act passed on the subject of war claims was the act of July 4, 1864.

The first section denied jurisdiction to the Court of Claims over such claims. The second made the Quartermaster-General's Office the place for the settlement of the claims for quartermaster stores. The third made the Commissary-General's Office the place for the settlement of claims for commissary supplies. Only claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion could be passed on by the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General.

On June 18, 1866 (14 Stat., 360), Congress extended the act of July 4, 1864, to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, in West Virginia.

On July 28, 1866 (14 Stat., 370), Congress extended the act of July 4, 1864, to the loyal citizens of Tennessee.

Congress afterward (14 Stat., 397) extended the act of July 4, 1864, to the entire State of West Virginia.

Claimants furnished their testimony by ex parte affidavits and any vouchers they might have received.

The Government took its proof by means of special agents, who inquired secretly and so reported, it not being until the act of June 13, 1880 (21 Stat., 586), that claimants or their attorneys were allowed to be present and cross-examine witnesses before special agents.

Claimants and their attorneys were denied access to the reports of the agents of the Quartermaster-General, as such reports were held to be confidential, their contents not to be disclosed. This practice continued for sixteen years.

As for the Commissary-General, no law was passed to allow him special agents, and consequently he did not investigate the claims by means of such agents. He acted on only such claims as were supported by vouchers or affidavits furnished by officials.

The following extract is from his report of 1878: "It will * * * be impracticable to properly investigate the claims presented under the act of July 4, 1864, unless an appropriation be made for the employment and transportation of officers and agents to investigate the claims."

Under this act there were filed 53,505 claims.

Amount claimed	$38,084,066.55
Amount paid to claimants	6,010,275.43
Amount disallowed	32,073,791.12

The next act on the subject was the act of March 3, 1871, creating the Southern Claims Commission.

This Commission was given jurisdiction over claims for stores and supplies of loyal citizens in the States that had been declared in insurrection. This without regard to the act of July 4, 1864.

The original act creating the Commission declared that all claims not presented to the Commission before March 4, 1873, should be forever barred. Time for filing limited to March 3, 1873, by act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., 577).

The life of the Commission was fixed by this act at two years, but Congress extended it from time to time.

On June 15, 1878 (20 Stat., 566), Congress declared that the Commission should expire on March 10, 1880, and it did so expire.

On June 15, 1878, Congress limited the time for claimants filing evidence in chief and submitting their claims to March 10, 1879, but it allowed them to take testimony in rebuttal after that date.

On June 23, 1879 (21 Stat., 29), Congress required the special agents of the Commission to give notice to and opportunity for claimants being present at the taking of testimony by said agents on behalf of the Commission; but the act was not of any benefit to claimants, owing to the near approach of the end of the Commission, and because the claims in which claimants had filed their evidence before March 10, 1879, had been nearly all disposed of.

There were filed under this act 22,298 claims. Of this number 5,250 were forever barred under the act of June 15, 1878.

Of the 16,991 claims in which evidence has been taken about 150 have been rejected for want of jurisdiction—chiefly claims for rent and the use of real estate, which the Commission held not to be "stores and supplies" within the meaning of the act establishing the Commission.

The amount of claims filed under this act was	$60,258,150.44
Amount rejected or disallowed	55,621,229.75

On account of the arbitrary and secret methods pursued by the War Department in taking proof, and the manifest injustice of many of the decisions in the War Department and the Southern Claims Commission, Congress passed the Bowman act, authorizing Congress to send to the Court of Claims for a new trial disallowed claims filed before the War Department or the Southern Claims Commission which had not been barred by the statute of limitations.

Since the passage of the Bowman act Congress has appropriated, to pay claims found due claimants under that act by the Court of Claims, the following sums:

Fiftieth Congress	$119,510.75
Fifty-first Congress	573,763.30
Total	693,274.05

A part of this was suspended and not paid. Since that time the court has reported, under the Bowman act, as due claimants to date, $686,842.43.

These findings represent about 7 per cent of the amount claimed.

Let us calculate it on this basis and we will find that this must have disposed of over $18,000,000 of these claims. Add the $32,073,791.12 rejected by the War Department to the $55,621,229.73 and deduct $18,000,000 finally disposed of in the Court of Claims, and we have left as a possible claim against the Treasury from this source $69,695,020.85. Take 7 per cent of that, the usual percentage of these claims allowed by the Court of Claims, and we get the approximate possible charge against the Treasury of a little less than $5,000,000.

I would like to call the attention of the President and the Attorney-General to the difference between four hundred millions of dollars of claims and seventy-two millions, with a possible liability of five millions of dollars. The President, mark you, says: "Claims to the amount of nearly four hundred millions of dollars for the taking of or injury to the property of persons claiming to be loyal during the war are now before that court for examination."

The President certainly did not even read the guess of Mr. Cotton made in 1891, but possibly relied on the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General must have relied on the figures of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], with a discount of 20 per cent on account of the campaign impending at the time his statement was made.

All of these claims ever filed against the Government before the War Department and before the Southern Claims Commission, as I have shown, amounted to only a little over $98,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. That is for stores and supplies.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes. Of course, after deducting all payments made and claims barred, it is still impossible to tell the exact amount that would be allowed by the Court of Claims if all these claims were referred, but as I have stated, judging from the usual percentage of these claims allowed by the court, it could not greatly exceed $5,000,000.

But these gentlemen say that the cotton tax of sixty-eight millions is included. That is a Southern claim growing out of the war, and I think a just one. I believe that tax was illegally collected and ought to be refunded to the people who paid it in the various States.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will permit me a suggestion, that is not strictly a war claim. The bulk of the tax, nearly the whole of it, was collected after the war.

Mr. ENLOE. I accept the correction, but that tax is embraced in this calculation which has been made and circulated for campaign purposes.

Mr. OATES. The claim for a refund of that tax rests entirely on the proposition that the law under which it was collected was unconstitutional, and therefore no law.

Mr. ENLOE. Exactly. The only question involved is the constitutionality of the law. It does not involve the question of loyalty. It stands on the same footing as any other claim where money has been paid into the Treasury under an unconstitutional law.

Another measure which has been much misrepresented, and like all the rest greatly exaggerated, is the bill which I introduced, and which is now on the Calendar, to pay for the use and occupation of church and school buildings by the United States Army during the war. That item in this wonderful juggling with figures is, I am told, charged up as involving at least $100,000,000, enough to pay pensions a little over six months. The Quartermaster-General, in a letter to the Committee on War

Claims of this House on this subject, written March 28, 1890, says:

A list of the church claims which have been filed in this office is herewith submitted, giving the name, locality, and amount of each claim (so far as stated) and the action taken thereon. It appears that 234 of these claims have been filed. Ninety-seven of these, aggregating $102,270.29 (so far as stated), have been paid or recommended for payment, in whole or in part, and 137 claims, aggregating (so far as stated) $247,797.38, have been disallowed or not paid, the cause of disallowance being stated on the accompanying list.

So it seems that the number of church claims filed and disallowed or unacted upon is 137, involving $247,797.38.

The War Department without any specific instructions, and so far as I have been able to learn without any authority of Congress, adjudicated and settled ninety-seven of these claims, involving the payment of $102,270.29.

I will quote the balance of the letter of the Quartermaster-General on the subject. He continues:

In the consideration of these claims it was found that a considerable number were presented from States and districts declared to be in insurrection during the war of the rebellion. They were precluded from favorable consideration by the President's proclamation of July 1, 1862, and by subsequent legislation of Congress. (See act of Congress, Public No. 33, of 1867.)

It was the custom of this Department to place churches in the same condition as when they were taken possession of by the United States, natural wear and tear excepted, or allow a reasonable amount in money in lieu of such repairs. No general instruction for the payment of such claims appears to have been given, but each claim was decided on its merits. This practice, however, had the approval of the Secretary of War, as such cases were submitted to and approved by him from time to time. Up to 1874 it was uniformly held by this office that no rent should be paid for churches, there being no law authorizing such payment. On March 20, 1874, the claim of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, of Washington, D. C., for rent, stated at $2,250, was referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for settlement, having been recommended by Assistant Judge-Advocate-General Dunn and approved by the Secretary of War. A number of other claims for rent of churches were paid subsequently by the direction and approval of the Secretary of War.

Very respectfully,

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

It seems that the allowance of this class of claims was a matter entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of War. Claims were allowed and paid in Kentucky, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, New York, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington, D. C., Ohio, and Missouri. For some unexplained reason the settlement of these claims was discontinued. They never amounted to more than $350,000, and if school buildings were included the whole amount which would be allowed would not exceed $1,000,000. I would like to emphasize the fact that the difference between $100,000,000 and $1,000,000 is worthy of some consideration in this connection.

The right of the Southern church and school boards to compensation for use and occupation of their property during the war rests upon the rules which govern all civilized nations in time of war, and bind them to protect the property of religious and educational institutions from injury or destruction.

There is no question of loyalty involved in these claims, but they are based upon the broader principles of civilization, and that was the only law that could have warranted the War Department in adjudicating and paying those claims which were paid.

In addition to this I should mention the fund in the Treasury known as "the captured and abandoned property fund." I am informed that this fund amounts to about $10,000,000. By the decision of our courts this fund belongs to citizens of the United States whose property was illegally seized and sold by the United States and the money turned into the Treasury.

Congress, with its usual disregard of the rights of private claimants, refuses to pass any law to allow these claimants to go into our own courts and sue for the recovery of this money, and at the same time refuses to pay any part of it to those claimants who come before Congress and furnish the proof from the Government records that the Government holds in this fund the money derived from the proceeds of the illegal sales of their property.

This is setting an example of robbery, bare and simple, and of dishonesty which would put a private citizen in the penitentiary. Now, I think I have covered all classes of Southern war claims except a comparatively small number of claims for rent and occupation of private property which are pending before Congress, and a few claims for the torts of the Government.

It will be seen that if all the war claims were paid in full, and the $68,000,000 cotton tax, and the $1,000,000 for churches and schools, and the $10,000,000 for captured and abandoned property, it would all amount to only about $150,000,000. Not as much as we pay for pensions each year. Of the amount which will go or could go to the Court of Claims it is not probable that over $5,000,000 will ever be allowed, and not over $10,000,000 even if we double the percentages of allowances in such cases; so that the largest probable amount that would ever be paid on war claims would be between $84,000,000 and $89,000,000.

The Committee on War Claims has reported bills this Congress which in the aggregate would not involve over $12,000,000, and the chairman of the committee, who has thoroughly investigated the character of these claims, states that about two-thirds of them are from Northern or loyal States. These bills are mostly for claims embraced in the figures I have before given, and I only refer to them to show that these claims are not as alleged by the President and his informants, strictly Southern war claims. An examination of the omnibus bill now pending, embracing the findings of the Court of Claims on claims for stores and supplies, will also disclose the fact that other than Southern States are interested in these claims.

The purpose of these campaign statements made before and since the election is to create a prejudice in the minds of the people against claims coming from the Southern States. The purpose is to deny to those people an opportunity to have their claims heard before the courts or before Congress, or at least to so prejudice the minds of members of Congress that appropriations can not be had to pay the judgments that may be obtained through the courts.

As I before stated the Court of Claims was created to pass upon these claims because it was evident that on account of the secret methods pursued in the War Department and the unfairness of the Southern Claims Commission many claimants were denied justice and could obtain it only by coming to Congress. That court was clothed only with jurisdiction over the claims of loyal citizens, but it seems that these gentlemen want to make it a crime for a man in the South to have been loyal during the war. Although he goes into their own court, composed of Republican judges, with Republicans representing the Government, and charged with the defense, with all the records and archives, and all the machinery of the Government at their command still these gentlemen object to and refuse to stand by the judgments of this court of their own creation whenever the findings are favorable to the claimant.

They say that these claims are old and stale, and that therefore they should not be paid. They have blocked the way and stopped these claims, a large number of them for the last thirty years, and now they turn around and make the objection to their payment that they are "old" and "stale." After they have denied a hearing for thirty years they have the hardihood to say that if they were just they would have been paid before this time. The Republican party seeks to make their own fault the crime of these claimants. It may be good politics in a certain sense, but it is not honest.

I know there are some people who think that a man who lives in the South and was loyal during the war ought not to be paid anything; but I am astonished that a Republican should take that position, and I am astonished that a Democrat who was himself loyal to the Government during the war should take that position. In view of the liberal spirit which the Government has manifested in these matters, I am astonished that any honest man should object to paying the claim of any citizens which is justly due.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not here to speak in this matter for votes, because I believe that, as a general rule, these claimants have voted the Republican ticket. They were loyal to the Government during the war, and most of them have been loyal to the Republican party since; but I would not be surprised, in view of what the President has said, and what distinguished gentlemen on the other side here have said, if this class of people in the South, these Republicans, who have claims, should turn away from the Republican party and, in view of this juggling with figures, should say, in the language of Macbeth:

> And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
> That palter with us in a double sense;
> That keep the word of promise to our ear,
> And break it to our hope.

I hope that these people will turn away from the Republican party and will look to the Democratic party for justice, because that is the only party in this country that is not sectional and that is willing to give justice to every citizen of every State in the Union.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Michigan how much time he desires to use now.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Certainly; but if the gentleman desires to occupy any considerable length of time, it would be better that he should be recognized in his own hour.

Mr. BURROWS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will be recognized in my own right.

In the resolution which I presented and which the Committee on War Claims has very properly reported back with a favorable recommendation I see nothing to lay the foundation for the debate which has just taken place. The very object of the resolution was to settle, if possible, by official data a controversy as to the character of the claims pending before the various Departments for damages incurred or supplies furnished by citizens of the country during the late rebellion. It was with a view of settling that controversy and for no other purpose that I introduced this resolution; and I see no reason why the gentleman from Tennessee should have taken occasion at this time upon this resolution to enter into a general discussion of Southern war claims. I shall not follow him in that debate. I simply seek by this resolution to get at the facts.

The gentleman has stated, however, that it was a very serious thing for the President of the United States to make the charge in his late message that a large number of claims were pending in the office of the Attorney-General; and he seemed to criticise the President for making that statement. I suppose the President based the statement upon the following, which I read from the report of the Attorney-General for this year:

> Under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, 248 cases were disposed of during the year; the aggregate claims covered by said cases being $2,583,939.41. In 158 of these cases findings were made against the Government, and for an aggregate sum of $485,546.36. The claims of this class growing out of the alleged taking of supplies and other property during the war are assuming enormous proportions. They already aggregate nearly $400,000,000, and the Department has reliable information that a multitude of additional claims, aggregating very large sums, are being prepared to be filed and pushed against the Treasury. That a very large proportion of these claims have no just foundation either in fact or law, being presented by persons or the representatives of persons who were not loyal to the Government during the war, is every day made clearer in the evidence evolved in their defense.
> In numerous cases where testimony has been produced of the entire loyalty of claimants of the Union during the war, by the discovery of documentary evidence, such as election returns on the vote for secession, vouchers for supplies furnished to the Confederate government, enlistment rolls, registry of Confederate bonds, etc., the attorneys of the Government have been able to demonstrate the disloyalty of claimants and thus defeat the claims. But of course such evidence can be found only in exceptional cases, and unless Congress shall put some new barrier between the Treasury and these claims it is impossible to predict the amount the Government may be called upon to pay thereon. Ordinarily a statute of limitations bars claims resting on parol evidence after six years. Why, with all the temptations to fraud and perjury, a different rule should apply to these claims is not apparent.

This is the statement embraced in the official report of the Attorney-General, upon which statement, I suppose, is based the language of the President's message to which the gentleman from Tennessee has called attention and which he has seen fit to criticise. Now, it was with a view of ascertaining the nature and character of these claims, and in order that the House and the country might be informed in relation to them, that I offered this resolution, and I am thankful to the committee for having reported it back with a favorable recommendation.

I do not desire to enter into any discussion in the line pursued by the gentleman from Tennessee. That is entirely foreign to this controversy. If I desired to follow the gentleman's example I might exhibit the Calendar of this House, by which it will appear that for the first thirty or forty pages there is scarcely a report except from the Committee on War Claims. These reports cover cases that can not be referred to the Court of Claims under the existing law. I might say that the Southern Claims Commission, to which the gentleman has referred and which he has criticized, was open for nine years. It was organized in 1871, when the facts upon which these claims rest were fresh in the minds of the people, and was open to every loyal claimant for nine years.

Before that Commission claimants could produce their witnesses. These claims, which are referred to the Court of Claims, are generally claims which were disallowed by that Commission because they were not meritorious and in the opinion of the Commission ought not to be paid.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman mean to say that the great majority of claims referred by this House to the Court of Claims are claims which were referred to the Southern Claims Commission under the act creating it?

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no; they are not referred under that act but under the Bowman act. But the Court of Claims does not take jurisdiction of any cases unless it was before this Southern Claims Commission. If they have not been before that Commission they are barred. If, however, the claim has been presented to the Southern Claims Commission or to the Quartermaster-General or to the Commissary-General, then the Court of Claims holds that the claim is still pending and is not barred. These claims, therefore, are all of them claims which have been rejected either by the Commissary Department or the Quartermaster's Department or by the Court of Claims.

But, as I said before, I do not care to enter into that question. I have, however, here a statement from the Treasury Department showing the amount that has been paid upon claims of this character, and I find that there has been paid for captured and abandoned property taken $10,613,037.11.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman claim that claims arising under the captured and abandoned property act are a part of the war claims which have been referred under the Bowman act?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not. I find further that upon "claims of loyal citizens for supplies furnished during the rebellion," there has been paid $4,636,920.69; for salaries and expenses of Southern Claims Commission, $398,999.52.

Mr. ENLOE. Is it right to charge up the salaries to this account?

Mr. BURROWS. I am simply giving the amounts expended; I am not charging anything. I am giving the amounts expended as stated by the Treasury Department in the adjudication of these claims. I find further that on claims for quartermaster's stores and commissary supplies there were paid $2,954,635.44; for stores and supplies taken by the army—Bowman act cases paid on appropriations and findings of Court of Claims—$372,710.85; and the amount of the appropriation, I understand was $500,000.

Mr. ENLOE. I was going to ask the gentleman from Michigan if in his judgment the cost or expense of these agents of the Quartermaster-General's Office and the Commissary Department, who have been examining these matters for fifteen or sixteen years, ought not to be embraced? Whether it might not be just as well to put in all of these, as the other charges to which he refers?

Mr. BURROWS. I think not.

Mr. ENLOE. It is just as properly chargeable to this part of the expenditure as the salaries of the commissioners.

Mr. BURROWS. And I was only alluding to it to show the amount which had been expended already in this direction.

Now, the object of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, is to settle this controversy finally, as it has been agitated in the press and throughout the country. Proper claims presented by citizens of unquestioned loyalty anywhere in the Southern States ought to be paid. There is no question about that. Claims of persons who were clearly disloyal to the Government during the war ought not to be paid. That is the whole question, and the House and the country ought not to have that question obscured by any other issue.

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him another question, I would like to know if he believes that the claim of a claimant who has already established his right by proof in the Court of Claims ought to be paid?

Mr. BURROWS. Not if it appears from evidence outside, as in the Confederate archives, that the Court of Claims was mistaken as to the question of loyalty.

Mr. ENLOE. Well, where it does not so appear?

Mr. BURROWS. I think if the Court of Claims finds that a claimant was loyal and there is no controversy about the merits of the claim, then there exists no reason why the claim should not be paid. But I have been informed this morning that cases referred to the Court of Claims and favorably reported have been recommitted to the court and, on reëxamination, have been reversed; that the previous report of the court was entirely erroneous and subsequent testimony showed that the claimant was disloyal.

Mr. ENLOE. Let me ask if that did not arise under a former administration and this is an effort to correct it?

Mr. BURROWS. What has that to do with the resolution?

Mr. ENLOE. Only this, that it helps to elucidate the matter and show your attitude.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee can not possibly put me in a false attitude. I have already said that loyal claimants ought to be paid, but when a case under the Bowman act is reported to the court to ascertain the facts and the question of loyalty is made a jurisdictional question, if the court reports that the party was loyal, so far as that question goes the opinion of the court, perhaps, should be taken by the House as final. I know of no reason why it should not be.

But at the same time I wish to say distinctly that I am not in favor of putting through the House, under a suspension of the rules, a bill embodying some two hundred claims reported by the Committee on War Claims because they happen to be reported from a court, without disclosing in a single case the finding of the court, except as to the general fact that the parties were loyal, but not disclosing the amount, the testimony on which it was founded, or whether it is justly due and ought to be paid.

Mr. ENLOE. As the gentleman is going into that question, let me make this inquiry: If it is not a fact that the court has furnished in each case a printed slip showing the findings of the court and the fact of the loyalty of the claimant?

Mr. BURROWS. Well, that is a matter which may possibly come up at a later period during the day.

Mr. ENLOE. And I think it better to wait until we do reach it.

Mr. BURROWS. If the gentleman himself had adopted that course in the debate there would be considerably more force in his suggestion.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say in regard to this resolution. It is simply to arrive at the information so that we may act understandingly hereafter.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer, if the gentleman desires to consume any more time, that he take it now; if not, I beg the Speaker to notify me when I have reached the consumption of thirty minutes of my time, though I do not think I will occupy that much. I would very much prefer, though, that the gentleman would consume the balance of his time now, to which he is entitled.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not propose to say anything further in regard to the resolution, but possibly some other gentleman on the floor might like to be heard.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. We have the close, and I would like the gentleman from Michigan, having our whole case now, to say what he desires to say or use such time as he may wish before I proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the gentleman had better proceed now. It is more than probable that nothing further will be said on this subject.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Then I shall call the previous question at the close of my few remarks.

Mr. BURROWS. Very well.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. The resolution which has just been reported favorably is designed to obtain full, clear, and accurate information in relation to what are commonly known as war claims against the National Government. The language of the original resolution is very broad and comprehensive, and the amendments proposed by the committee are intended to still further enlarge the scope and effectiveness of the inquiry. This is a movement in the right direction, for there is no subject which ever engages the attention of this House or that of the press of the country on which there is such a general lack of information or such gross and inexcusable misrepresentation and exaggeration. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] who introduced the resolution probably wants to take some measures or make some statements on the question, and therefore very properly calls for official and reliable data on which to base his action. If all members who have discussed the matter on the floor of the House or in the newspapers had observed the same precaution to ascertain the facts before they made their utterances my colleagues and myself would not have been required, in justice to the laborious committee of which we are a part, to take up the time of the House in the statements which we propose to make.

In a speech which purports to have been delivered in the House on August 5, 1892, in the expiring hours of the last session, by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], and which was printed in the RECORD on August 9, he used the following language:

SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS.

Twenty-seven years after the close of the late civil war the remarkable spectacle is presented of the Private Calendar of the House of Representatives being loaded down with bills favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims, while several bills are on the Union Calendar reported from that committee, the first being a bill looking to the payment of claims for use and occupation of church and school buildings and grounds during the late rebellion by the Government all through the Southern States.

It is impossible to give the exact figures of the amounts involved in these claims, but after a careful examination of the subject by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP] he asserts that the amount involved in bills favorably reported and on the Union and Private Calendars exceeds $100,000,000, while the amount unreported, including bills for the refund of the cotton tax (amounting to $60,000,000), exceeds the sum of $500,000,000. Of the 9,727 bills introduced in the House during the present session over 2,000 are war claims, of which number 878 have been favorably reported, and but for the active hostility of the Republican members of the House a very considerable number of these would have been passed.

The distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], in an elaborate review of the proceedings of the last session, published over his signature in the New York Press and other papers on August 6, 1892, made the following statement:

The House Committee on War Claims have reported in favor of more than $70,000,000 worth of claims for damages caused by the devastation of the war.

The New York Tribune, in a lengthy and much more exact account of the work of the House during the same period, declares that the bills reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims during the last session exceeded $8,000,000.

That two such prominent leaders as the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Maine should only vary $30,000,000 in their statements on the subject made in the torrid heat of such a campaign as they had on hand and in such weather, might be disregarded, for $30,000,000 is a small matter in campaign statistics, but that they should both exceed the sober estimate of the greatest organ of their party, the one by $92,000,000 and the other by $62,000,000, would justify an inquiry into the source of their data and the motives of their utterances. Neither of the two smaller estimates were ever repeated during the campaign, but the larger one was given a publicity only limited by the capacity of the political machine. The first time I saw it was in the organ of the Republican party published in my district by a former member and Clerk of this House. The next I saw was a repetition in a paper away out in California, the comment of which on the matter I send up to the desk to have read:

SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS—WHAT MIGHT BE EXPECTED WITH A DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

The War Claims Committee of the House of Representatives, of which Mr. BELTZHOOVER is chairman, made a remarkable record during the late session of Congress, says the Gettysburg (Pa.), Star and Sentinel. We commend this account of it to the attention of our readers. It is given by Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON of Iowa, in his speech published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 9, 1892.

This quotation from the speech of the gentleman from Iowa contains three distinct propositions, all of which are unfounded:

First. That the War Claims Committee reported favorably 878 bills.

Second. That the amount which those bills involved exceeded $100,000,000.

Third. That these bills were for Southern war claims.

What are the facts?

First. All the bills reported by the War Claims Committee, including a considerable number of duplicates for the same claim, only number 793, instead of 878; so that whoever ran over the Calendar for the gentleman from Iowa was a very bad counter.

Second. The amount claimed in all the bills reported favorably by the War Claims Committee is only $16,781,001.31, and does not involve in money over $12,000,000, counting everything, instead of more than $100,000,000.

Third. Instead of the claims involved in the bills they reported favorably being Southern war claims, more than two-thirds are from loyal Republican Northern States.

Let me state more specifically how these amounts involved in these bills is ascertained:

Of the 793 bills reported, 424 recommended direct appropriations and 369 are requested to be sent to the Court of Claims under what is known as the Tucker act.

The 424 bills involve direct appropriations of $11,305,998.49; of this amount $7,659,066.37 are for claims from the Northern States; $3,633,586.78 are for claims from the Southern States, and $13,345.38 are for Mexican and Revolutionary claims.

Of the 369 bills reported to be sent to the Court of Claims 355 (all but 14) state the amounts claimed, which aggregate $5,265,002.82. The 14 bills which do not state the amount claimed, when estimated at the average of all the remaining 779 bills, aggregate $210,000, which is far beyond the actual claim in all human probability. The gross sum therefore claimed by all these bills with this estimate is $5,475,002.82.

These last 369 bills, it must be remembered, are to be sent to the Court of Claims only for a finding of the facts in each case, which are to be reported back to this House, and do not involve a dollar of appropriation, except what may be made by some future Congress; but taking them as involving in money all they claim, the gross aggregate of all the bills favorably reported is only $16,781,001.31, instead of over $100,000,000.

This amount is the largest that could possibly be involved if every dollar mentioned in the bills were approved by the Court of Claims and this House and passed into an appropriation.

It is just, however, to say that there are two insuperable obstacles in the way of their reference to the Court of Claims, one of which wipes them all out and the other of which practically does so.

First. The Tucker act, under which, in conformity with the custom of the last House as well as this, such bills are referred to the Court of Claims, expressly excludes war claims, and every solitary report must fall the moment it is reached on the Calendar.

Second. The history of these war claims before the Court of Claims during the last quarter of a century shows indisputably that only 7 per cent of the amount that go there are allowed, while 93 per cent are refused and forever barred. This is a fact we have an undoubted right to rely upon in estimating how much is involved in these bills, for if they should go to the Court of Claims and pass the usual ordeal, as they must, they could not involve more than $350,000, which, with the $11,305,998 recommended directly for appropriation, would only make $11,655,998. It adds considerably to the audacity of the criticism made upon the present War Claims Committee by the gentlemen from Maine and Iowa, when it is remembered that more that nineteen-twentieths of the bills reported by them were also reported by the War Claims Committee of the last Congress.

This is a specific and conclusive answer to the charge of inconsiderate and extravagant action on the part of the present War Claims Committee in reporting bills for the consideration of the House. All the facts involved in this statement could have been easily obtained from the clerk of the committee by the bare asking for them upon a few days' notice.

There is no reason, however, why the gentlemen from Maine or Iowa, or any other person should have made such extravagant and unfounded assertions. If they had consulted the statutes on the subject, and the action of the courts and commissions and the public records of the House, they would have found that there were inexorable limitations on the amount of war claims which can be sent to the Court of Claims by the House, and a mere counting of the amount fixed in the bills reported would have given the sum beyond which the amount of both those reported and those referred could not go. They would have found that by no possibility could the whole amount have exceeded $50,000,000.

The bills which are reported favorably and make direct appropriations are entered on the Calendar and are found in the files of the House. Any one without going near the War Claims Committee could have found that they were 424 in number and claimed $11,305,998.49.

The war claims which can by any possibility be sent to the Court of Claims by the House for adjudication of the facts under existing law are circumscribed and limited and fixed as clearly as human legislation can do it.

There are three acts on the subject. The first is the act of July 4, 1864, under which claims are authorized for stores and supplies taken and furnished for the use of the Army during the war of the rebellion in States not in insurrection. (See 300 A, Revised Statutes.)

Under section 3 of the act of March 3, 1879, all claims not filed under the said act of July 4, 1864, prior to January 1, 1880, are forever barred.

The claims filed under this act of 1864 in the Quartermaster-General's Office, prior to January 1, 1880, were in number, 53,505; amount, $38,084,066.55; allowed and paid, $6,010,275.43; disallowed, $32,073,791.12.

The second is the act of March 3, 1871, commonly called the Southern Claims Commission act, under which the commissioners were authorized and empowered to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of claims of citizens in the States in insurrection against the United States, who remained loyal during the war, for stores and supplies taken or furnished during the rebellion for the use of the Army of the United States (16 Stat. at Large, 524). The powers of this Commission were not judicial but advisory to Congress and exercised in aid of that body. The claims filed before the Southern Claims Commission, under this law, amounted to $60,258,150.44, of which amount there were allowed and paid $4,636,920.69, and disallowed $55,621,229.13. This Commission expired on March 10, 1880.

We have therefore two kinds of rejected claims which were finally disallowed and barred in the beginning of the year 1880. The claims rejected by the Quartermaster-General were from the loyal States. The claims rejected by the Southern Claims Commission were from the disloyal States. The two amounts aggregated $87,695,268.87. This is the high-water mark of all war claims which were ever in any way payable or adjudicable under any general law. After the tribunals before which they were filed from time to time and were pending for years had closed and declined longer to hear the claimants, they began to assail Congress for relief. This assault on Congress occasioned the third act, of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, under which jurisdiction was given to the Court of Claims (1) over all claims that have been submitted to and disallowed by the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General under the first act, to wit, July 4, 1864 (2) and over all claims submitted to, and disallowed by, the Southern Claims Commission except those barred by not having the evidence in them filed in compliance with law, and except those paid in part.

This act gives the committees of either House the right to refer these claims for stores and supplies to the Court of Claims for investigation and report on the facts.

In this investigation the affirmative proof of loyalty is a jurisdictional fact, and where loyalty is not proven it is forever barred and reported to Congress.

Under the Tucker act of March 3, 1887, war claims are expressly excluded, and it therefore gives Congress no authority to refer them to the Court of Claims or to pass upon them except in the general power which they have under the Constitution as to all claims.

The only war claims, therefore, which can be sent under the law to the Court of Claims are those provided for by the Bowman act, which aggregated in 1880 the sum of $87,695,268.87, and of which all but $40,000,000 have been finally disposed of since that time.

If, therefore, the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress had sent to the Court of Claims every claim in existence which is referable to that court under the law, the amount could not have exceeded $40,000,000, which added to the amount in the bills they have reported carrying direct appropriations would have aggregated only $51,000,000, and really involved a sum vastly less; for if they had referred the whole $40,000,000 it would not have been within the range of human probabilities that in view of the past more than 7 per cent would have been allowed, which is only $2,800,000, which added to the $11,300,000 makes only $14,100,000.

Instead, however, of the War Claims Committee having referred all these outstanding claims which are referable, they have in fact reported but a small part, 369, and which, in fact, claim only $5,500,000, and involve, in fact, only $380,000, making the total amount involved in all the bills reported less than $12,000,000.

The assertion, therefore, that the present War Claims Committee have reported favorably bills for Southern war claims which involve more than $100,000,000 is, on all the facts as well as the law, wholly untrue, and could only have been made through a most reckless disregard of the simplest search for the truth, or for the purpose of serving the desperate fortunes of a dying cause in its last extremity.

Unless some gentleman desires to occupy the remaining time, I will call the previous question on the resolution and the amendment.

The previous question was ordered, the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was then adopted.

On motion of Mr. BELTZHOOVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ARKANSAS SWAMP-LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9072) to finally adjust and settle the claims of Arkansas and other States under the swamp-land grants, and for other purposes. The bill was under consideration on the last suspension day.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read what took place on that occasion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands was called.

Mr. McRAE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to call up, move to suspend the rules, and pass the bill (H. R. 9072) to finally adjust and settle the claims of Arkansas and other States under the swamp-land grants, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows.

The SPEAKER. After the reading of the bill a second was demanded, and the House then adjourned.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to make a slight modification of the bill, by striking out the words "otherwise disposed of" where they occur, and inserting "located with warrants or scrip."

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be again read, so that we may understand the effect of the proposed modification.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill as proposed to be modified was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the State of Arkansas shall relinquish, release, and quitclaim to the United States all her claims and demands against the United States for the 5 per cent fund allowances under the act approved June 23, 1836, for keeping prisoners under the executive order of February 5, 1867, for a portion of the distribution fund under the act approved September 4, 1841, for indemnity under the acts approved March 2, 1855, March 3, 1857, and under this act, and for all swamp and overflowed lands under the act approved September 28, 1850, not heretofore approved to the State, and all other claims of whatever kind or nature, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in consideration of said relinquishment, release, and quitclaim of said claims, demands, and lands, require the Treasurer of the United States to cancel and deliver to the governor of the said State of Arkansas all the bonds and coupons issued by the said State now in the possession of the said Treasurer and owned or held in trust by the United States, as a full and final compromise and settlement of accounts between the said State and United States.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the proper officers of the Departments of the Interior and of the Treasury, as soon as practicable, to adjust and settle the claims of each of the other States against the United States for all lands which have been or may hereafter be sold or located with warrants or scrip that were included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands to such States.

SEC. 3. That for all of said lands in any State which were sold for cash the said State shall have credit for the full amount of the purchase money received by the United States, and the same shall be paid over to the proper officer of said State; and for all of said lands in any State located with warrants or scrip, and for which indemnity has not heretofore been allowed, such State shall have indemnity in cash, the amount thereof to be limited to the price at which the lands were held at the date of their disposal by the United States, but not to exceed $1.25 per acre, the said indemnity to be paid as herein provided in the cases where lands were sold for cash: Provided, however, That under no circumstances shall more than $2,000,000 be paid under the provisions of this act for lands sold or located with warrants or scrip since March 3, 1857.

SEC. 4. That as soon as practicable after the expiration of the time limited by this act for the filing of claims thereunder, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall ascertain and determine by States the amount of cash indemnity due for lands actually swamp and overflowed within the meaning of the swamp-land grant, and disposed of since March 3, 1857, and shall allot the $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, among the several swamp-land States pro rata: Provided, That the cost of examining and adjusting tracts claimed, but found not to be swamp or overflowed lands, shall be taxed to and be paid by the State, parish, county, district, or individual presenting the fraudulent or erroneous claim.

SEC. 5. That the agent appointed by the Department of the Interior to investigate claims under this and prior acts shall have the power to administer oaths and take affidavits of witnesses, both on behalf of the State and of the United States, and witnesses swearing falsely before them shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction, be punished as now prescribed by law.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, when adjustments and allowances are made by him under this act, report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount ascertained to be due from the United States to such State on account of lands sold or located with warrants or scrip, and a description of the lands for which such indemnity is allowed, with the names of the persons to whom sold or patented, and the date the same was sold or patented; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount or amounts so allowed and reported by the Secretary of the Interior over to the proper officer of the State.

SEC. 7. That the acceptance by any State, through its Legislature or its authorized representative, of indemnity for any of the lands sold or located with warrants or scrip, therein, shall be deemed a relinquishment and waiver of all its right, title, and interest in and to such lands in place and an acknowledgment and confirmation of the title thereto in the grantees of the United States.

SEC. 8. That all claims for land or other indemnity under the swamp-land laws or under this act shall be forever barred, unless presented to the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year after filing in the proper local land office of a copy of the officially approved township plat of the survey of the township in which said lands may be situated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] proposes to modify the bill. The gentleman will state in what particular.

Mr. MCRAE. The bill was read as now modified.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the modification may be made before the motion is seconded, not afterward. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has demanded a second. That demand was made when the bill was up before.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think we had better have a vote.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. MCRAE and Mr. DINGLEY.

Pending the announcement of the vote by tellers,

The SPEAKER said: Gentlemen will please come forward and vote. A quorum has not yet voted.

Mr. MCRAE. The point has not been made that no quorum voted.

Mr. TRACEY. I make the point.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not make the point of no quorum.

Mr. LODGE. I make it.

The tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 17.

Accordingly a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to control the time in favor of the proposition, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to control the time against it.

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] desires to occupy his time he can do so now.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the proper thing is to hear from the affirmative first.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, the main features of this bill have been discussed several times. Nearly the whole of the 20th of last month was spent in its discussion. I have now modified the bill so as to cover, I believe, the last objection that has been made with any force against it.

An objection was urged by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and others to the language "otherwise disposed of." It was insisted that this was so broad that it would cover lands that ought not to be covered, such as homesteads and grants that had been made to the States. We now provide against that by striking out those words "otherwise disposed of," wherever they appear in the bill and inserting the words "located with warrants or scrip."

The general administrative features of the bill have been substantially approved by the Department. Secretary Noble, in his last report, used the following language with reference to these grants, which language I propose to read to the House:

For more than a decade the Government has, at great expense, employed special agents to examine lands selected in the manner indicated by the States and counties, upon which land or cash indemnity has been claimed. Notwithstanding the great expense incurred, it does not appear that the task is nearing completion. Under the law as it is the work seems interminable. The Department is without authority to prescribe any rule barring these claims by limitation. As long as agents can be secured with the powerful incentive of a very large contingent fee to stimulate their efforts claims will continue to be presented, unless Congress passes a law fixing a date beyond which such claims shall not be recognized by the Government. Unless such an act is passed, the present force of examiners in the field and the clerical force in the General Land Office employed on swamp-land indemnity must be continued from year to year for an indefinite period of time.

While a statute of limitation as to the time for selecting swamp land in place might not stand the test of judicial scrutiny, I am satisfied that Congress has the power to pass a statute of limitation with reference to indemnity, whether in land or in cash.

Considering the fact that about thirty-five years have passed during which these cash and land-indemnity claims might have been presented, it appears that the period of three years more would be ample time within which all legitimate claims could be filed. I therefore earnestly urge that this matter be presented to Congress, with the recommendation that an act be passed forever barring all claims for cash, lands, or other indemnity under the swamp-land laws after three years from the passage of the act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have made the limitation one year instead of three. We have given the Department the power to subpœna witnesses and to administer oaths. It gives all the power that it is safe to confer upon an executive department. We have fixed the limitation at the shortest possible time that would be reasonable, and we have not extended the grant. Instead of giving lands in place of those erroneously disposed of since 1857, we propose to give money indemnity and confirm the title of the purchasers of those lands by giving the States to which the grants were made the purchase money received, not exceeding, however, $1.25 per acre. It seems to me that with this concession now made there should be no further objection to it. I have made this modification after conference with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]; and while he has not stated that he will support the bill with his vote, he has stated that the words stricken out have been the principal cause of his opposition to it in the past. That is the only one in which there is any force.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] give us the effect of the amendment that was offered this morning?

Mr. MCRAE. The effect of the amendment will be to deny to the States indemnity for the land disposed of under the homestead or timber-culture laws, or by any other grants to States for railroads or other purposes; in other words, it limits the indemnity to only such lands as were sold or located with warrants or scrip issued by the Department. If swamp lands were otherwise disposed of by the United States, no indemnity would be given by this bill.

The bill as originally introduced and reported allowed indemnity for all the swamp lands erroneously sold or otherwise disposed of, in any manner whatever.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What effect would it have on that class of men who might have warrants issued to soldiers for services?

Mr. MCRAE. Those are land warrants.

Mr. MCMILLIN. They are land warrants, but your exceptions do not exclude them.

Mr. MCRAE. Certainly not and should not; and the act of 1857 did not exclude such. As modified it adopts the principle of the act of 1857. Where that act gave lieu lands or dry lands for lands located with warrants or scrip this would give $1.25 per acre.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Does the amendment that you have made exclude accounting for swamp lands sold by act of Congress after they have been granted to the several States?

Mr. MCRAE. No, sir; it does not. If sold or located with warrants or scrip they must be accounted for.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Then I understand you to state that it only includes those located by land warrant or scrip.

Mr. MCRAE. You misunderstood me. Indemnity is given for those and for such as may have been sold. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HERMANN. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I understand that the bill originally contained a clause confirming the title and giving indemnity for land occupied under the homestead law; and I now understand that clause, as agreed upon between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Arkansas, is omitted from the bill, and that there is no indemnity for land taken up under the homestead law.

Mr. MCRAE. This will give no indemnity for any lands taken under the homestead law or the timber-culture act. It must be for lands sold or located on with warrants or scrip.

Mr. HERMANN. Then this bill retains the provision which it did originally, confirming the title of these claimants who attained their land under the homestead act?

Mr. MCRAE. It does.

Mr. HERMANN. But it does not allow any indemnity.

Mr. MCRAE. It does not allow any indemnity for homesteads. While I think personally indemnity should be given for such, I am so anxious that the other provisions of the bill should be enacted that I have made this concession in the spirit of compromise and in hope that as now modified the bill would meet no further opposition.

Mr. HERMANN. It will, I understand, confirm the title of those who have claims of settlement made under that provision?

Mr. MCRAE. I think so.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the gentleman makes his reservation. I see that under this bill the Government relinquishes certain claims it has against the State of Arkansas. Now, if that settlement is to be made with regard to Arkansas, what consideration is there to be given to the other States to correspond with that proposed to be given to the State of Arkansas?

Mr. MCRAE. The consideration is the money the United States has received for lands which it had previously granted to the States. The money is in the United States Treasury, and honestly belongs to the States. This bill makes provision for paying that money to the States, after submitting the question of the error to the Interior Department.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But, you make one rule, as I understand the bill from hasty reading, for Arkansas, and another for the other States.

Mr. McRAE. The State of Arkansas owes the Government a large amount of money, and on account of that indebtedness she has not been able to get the indemnity or any other money due her. We compromise and settle all accounts with her without any money.

Mr. McMILLIN. How much money does the State of Arkansas owe the Government?

Mr. McRAE. Something over $700,000 of principal.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then Arkansas gets $700,000 by this?

Mr. McRAE. And gives the United States more than that sum. Arkansas has a claim for nearly a million acres of land—not admitted by the Department, of course; a claim of $265,000 on account of the 5 per cent money, and nearly $400,000 for land and money indemnity. She is willing to surrender all these claims and make a final settlement and give a quitclaim of all lands or claims whatever against the United States for the surrender of her bonds.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the claim that Arkansas makes is in a great measure the question under consideration in this bill, is it not?

Mr. McRAE. All the swamp-land States are interested in it. But there is no objection, as I understand, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the Arkansas feature of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it is not a question of what the gentleman from Indiana may be satisfied with, but a question of what will be satisfactory to the members of this House. I know the gentleman from Indiana is equitably disposed.

Mr. McRAE. I am trying to get the gentleman himself to be equitable to Arkansas. She yields whatever claims she has against the United States under this settlement. I know that she does not owe the Government more than is due her on all these old matters, but she is perfectly willing to make this settlement.

Mr. BUSHNELL. So far as I understand, this simply allows her to offset her claim against the Government and have it settled.

Mr. McRAE. Yes; there is no money to be paid to Arkansas. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman sits down I would like to ask how much money will probably be covered by this bill?

Mr. McRAE. I think it will probably be about $1,500,000. The bill limits it to $2,000,000 for lands disposed of since 1857.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it only limits it with respect to certain operations of this bill. The gentleman does not mean to say that the ultimate amount to be drawn from the Treasury, if this bill should pass and the principle of it should be adopted, is what he has stated.

Mr. McRAE. So far as this bill is concerned, I think that would be the limit.

Mr. DINGLEY. But does it not adopt a principle which would draw from the Treasury a great many times a million and a half?

Mr. McRAE. I think not. Under the act of 1857 indemnity was given for lands disposed of up to that time. Now, this bill simply extends that principle up to date and fixes a time beyond which no more claims can be made, and to compensate for lands disposed of since that time I do not believe more than a million dollars will be required.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is aware that the gentleman from Indiana [Judge HOLMAN], who is very thoroughly acquainted with all these land matters, has given it as his opinion that the amount which would be ultimately drawn from the Treasury under the principle sought to be adopted in this bill would be at least $15,000,000.

Mr. McRAE. I do not understand that the gentleman from Indiana makes any such statement as that. I have never heard any such statement made by him.

Mr. DINGLEY. Did not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] state here in the House that the amount would be at least $15,000,000?

Mr. McRAE. I think he said he had been informed by some other person that under the provisions of another bill relating to this subject that a large sum of money would be required. The statement was untrue, but was made upon another bill then pending allowing indemnity for homesteads, timber-culture grants, and otherwise. No such criticism has been made of this bill. It would be a very violent presumption to say that the United States Government would deliberately make erroneous sales of swamp lands to any such area as the gentleman suggests. I do not believe that it has done it. To believe so is an impeachment of the integrity and capacity of the Land Office. I have no idea that any such extensive errors have been committed. But if true the reason is so much stronger for this bill. The main purpose is to correct admitted errors made by the Department.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in the House, and I yield him five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word, Mr. Speaker. The striking out of the words "otherwise disposed of" eliminates from this bill land grants and grants for canals, railroads, and so on. The terms "warrants" and "scrip" are retained in the bill, and lands so located are to be provided for. I told the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] that we had had a great deal of controversy about this measure for a number of years extending far back; that I had always been opposed to it, and that the terms "otherwise disposed of" in his bill was one of the provisions to which I had special objection. He said he would modify that, and he has done so. I told him, however, that I could not support the bill in its present form, but that I did not propose to continue the fight on the floor of the House, because I had so often said all that I had to say on this subject that I did not feel justified in occupying further time. I will state, however, that the Land Office has always estimated that if we should depart from the principle of settlement established by the act of 1857——

Mr. McRAE. This bill maintains that principle. The words used are the very language of that act.

Mr. HOLMAN. The officials of the Land Office have held, I say, that if we should abandon that principle it would be impossible to tell what would be the ultimate amount required to satisfy these claims.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the opinion of the gentleman from Indiana as to the amount that will be required to meet the claims that will be made under the principle of this bill if all of them are settled?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, either the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the chief of the swamp lands division has told me within the last few years that the amount required would not be less than about $19,000,000. The modification made by the gentleman from Arkansas does, as a matter of course, affect land grants made to railroads, canals, and other such purposes. To what extent that modification goes I can not say, but it does affect such grants.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it leaves the homestead settlements and all that still inoperative.

Mr. McRAE. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, if the gentleman from Arkansas is correct, that may affect the matter somewhat; still I do not think a measure like this ought to pass except on the advice of the Secretary of the Interior. The House has heard read two letters, one from the present Commissioner of the Land Office and one from the last Commissioner, as to the operations of this measure.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to state that not only the present Land Commissioner but the Land Commissioner under the administration of President Cleveland declared against the policy of passing a bill of this kind.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; and sent very elaborate letters to the House.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is mistaken on that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Their objection was not to the passage of this bill, but to the measure then under consideration. They were in favor of following the precedent of the act of 1837, which this bill follows. It proposes to settle the business in accordance with that act.

Mr. McMILLIN. The report which was read in the course of the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas who is in charge of the bill recommends, as I understood it, the placing of the bar of the statute of limitations against even the filing of these claims——

Mr. McRAE. And we have done so.

Mr. McMILLIN. No; we propose to pay them. If it is right to pay them, it is wrong to put a bar even of one year upon them. If these claims are just, we can not afford to refuse payment of them and we ought not to do so; and if they are unjust we ought not to allow them to come in even for an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. The act of 1837 was always understood to be a finality of legislation on this subject.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. This bill gives all claims an opportunity for settlement before it raises the proposed bar.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to occupy any time on this subject, but in view of the statement of my friend from Arkansas I wish to say that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior as read by him concerning these claims is that they be barred. This bill does not look to me like a bar. Under the pretense of carrying out that recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior we are proposing that for a year these claims be allowed and be paid. The position I take is that if it is right to pay them it is wrong to bar them at the expiration of a year. Justice is justice, and it should be meted out without regard to whether the claims be presented within a year or not.

Furthermore, as to the extent of these claims, no man in this House can begin to tell the amount that will be required under the principle of this bill. I believe the bill limits the amount that can be paid out of the Treasury in settlement of these claims thereunder to $2,000,000; but we all know that if this policy be entered upon at all those States that are cut off for the present, States that may not have their accounts in as good condition for early settlement as those of the State of Arkansas, will come later and will urge in their behalf the additional claim that they have helped to pay similar claims for other people.

Again, Mr. Speaker, under this bill we are undertaking to settle a system of complicated accounts with the State of Arkansas and to do this upon a suspension of the rules, without the right to amend the amounts named in those accounts, and without any specific statement in regard to the matter except the general statement made by my able friend from Arkansas as to the lump sum of the amounts. It is proposed to surrender, in lieu of the portion of the State of Arkansas, $700,000. As I gather from a hasty reading of the bill, this surrender of claims due to the Government is in addition to the $2,000,000 provided for in the bill.

Now if this policy is to be entered upon, and the open accounts between the Government and the State of Arkansas are to be settled, involving more than a million dollars—$700,000 on the one side, and, as my friend from Arkansas says, more than $700,000 on the other side, is it not well that we should know exactly what we are doing? Who knows the state of the accounts of the State of Arkansas? Do you, my friend? Do you? Do you? [Turning to different members of the House.] Does any gentleman on this floor who is called upon to vote to surrender the claims of the Government against Arkansas, know their condition or what the equities of the case are? If we owe Arkansas more than she owes us, let us pay every dollar and not cause her to lose one cent. I would do her full justice.

Now the Secretary of the Interior having recommended that a bar be interposed, we are tearing down the bar. The Secretary of the Interior having recommended that these claims should not be filed for payment, we are providing for their filing and payment. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if this is to be done, it ought to be done in some more painstaking way than we are able to adopt now, when even the right to amend is cut off, and the right of discussion is limited to fifteen minutes on each side. Let us take this measure up regularly; amend it wherein it is defective; correct it wherein it would do injustice either to the Government or to the States concerned, and thus pass it.

If I were assured of the justice of these demands I would be the last man in the world to refuse their payment; but the very fact that the lands have been entered for homesteads and other purposes than as swamp lands goes far to prove that these are not swamp lands. Why, sir, in the State of Florida alone—and I can speak of that State without disparaging anybody, because no one here has made any statement concerning it—a friend of mine from the State of Tennessee, Maj. Akers, was appointed under Mr. Cleveland's Administration a special agent of the Government to investigate land claims, land titles, and land entries in the State of Florida and other States. Going into that State, he found in one place, as I now remember, 400,000 acres set apart as swamp lands; and yet upon that tract there was not a single lake or a single swamp. While making the investigation, he slept there in midwinter on blankets in the open air and on the ground—in the alleged swamp.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman from Tennessee know in what part of the State of Florida that was?

Mr. McMILLIN. He told me, but I have forgotten. I think in the lower part of the State.

Mr. MALLORY. And subsequent investigation shows that it was subject to overflow.

Mr. McMILLIN. But he said it was very dry in the winter when he was there.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if he has not discovered by the report that the State of Arkansas has, as to the matter of her accounting, adopted the field notes of the United States Government itself?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have stated that every dollar due to Arkansas should be paid, and I am for paying it. But when we come to settle that sum we ought to know what we are doing, especially when we are applying a principal in the settlement which will open the door to untold and unknown liabilities.

Mr. TERRY. If the gentleman had read the report he would have seen that his fears are entirely groundless.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman mistakes me entirely if he supposes I would fail to pay his State and every other State every dollar due them from the Government. I would ascertain what this is and then pay that last dollar, not pleading the statute of limitations against one cent of it. We are too great and rich not to be entirely just.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McRAE. I prefer that the gentleman should use his time now, as I have the right to close the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has five minutes, and there are five minutes remaining to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which is being pressed through the House of Representatives under a suspension of the rules, to my mind is the worst piece of legislation which has come before the American Congress during the time I have had the honor of being a member of this body.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has ably presented some of the objections to the bill. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I have no doubt, will state further serious objections to its enactment, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has mildly interposed objections to its passage.

Mr. Speaker, this is an attorney's bill; a bill of the lobby; a bill which perhaps as far as the State of Arkansas is concerned might serve a just purpose in settling these claims, but the State of Arkansas has not gone about the movement in a creditable manner. It is sought here by a log-rolling and omnibus bill presented in the House to settle claims which perhaps properly should be adjusted; but we know, those of us who have paid some attention to the matter, that a lobby has been working in the interest of this bill; that attorneys are to receive percentages from the different States on the amounts paid to them by the General Government, and not only that, but even the small counties in the States have made arrangements with attorneys to give them a certain percentage of the amount collected when the money comes to hand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TRACEY. I can not; I have but two minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The gentleman has been arraigning my State in regard to its action in this matter. Now I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. PEEL. Let the gentleman state who it is that is to receive this percentage from Arkansas.

Mr. TRACEY. I have not stated that the gentleman's State had not a just claim. I only said——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. But if the gentleman will pardon me, he said that the State of Arkansas had not gone about the movement in a creditable manner to collect its claim. Does the gentleman mean to say that the business provided for in this bill is not all of the same class and character, or that there is a discrimination in the bill?

Mr. TRACEY. I say that it may be all of the same class and character. That I do not know; but I do know that it is seeking, under the pretence of settling a claim of the State of Arkansas, to throw down the bar of the statute of limitations and open up a principle which will result in the Government of the United States being forced to pay nearer fifty millions of dollars than fifteen millions; and therefore that the bill ought not to be passed, that more time should be given to its consideration, and that it should be thoroughly and fully discussed and understood before the vote even is taken upon it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes remaining I can only call the attention of the House to two or three important facts. First, it is conceded on all sides that the principle which is involved in this bill, if adopted by passing this measure, will cause an ultimate expenditure from the Treasury of the United States in round numbers of at least $15,000,000—possibly a slightly less amount, but certainly a very large amount of money. The limitation in this bill is $2,000,000; but the principle having been once settled, it must be applied to all of the cases that remain to be adjudicated.

It seems to me, in the first place, that a bill involving so large an amount of money ought not to be passed by the House except after full consideration and in a manner in which it can be thoroughly understood and be open to amendment. We are considering it now under a suspension of the rules with a very limited debate upon it, and no opportunity to offer an amendment; and even if in its general features the bill was sound and safe, the House ought to insist that it should not be passed in this way, but in a manner to admit of the adoption of amendments in order to preserve the interests of the Government.

In the second place, it is to be borne in mind that the Commissioner of the Land Office under President Cleveland's Administration, as well as the Commissioner under the present Administration, Governor Stone, of Iowa, in communications have both expressed themselves as opposed to the passage of this measure; and in communications which have been printed in the RECORD have given at length the reasons for their objections.

Under this state of facts it seems to me impolitic and unwise in the highest degree to attempt to pass such a bill as this under a suspension of the rules. Without entering at all, in the brief time at my disposal, into the discussion of the merits of the bill, I simply say that for these two reasons alone, if none others existed, the House ought to refuse to pass this bill to-day under a suspension of the rules, when no sufficient examination can be given to it, when no amendment is in order, and when the present Commissioner of the Land Office under both President Cleveland and President Harrison have advised against its passage.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I have tried for six or seven years to have the swamp-land grants adjusted. I have met every reasonable objection that has been made against the bills proposed by me for the adjustment of these old grants. As objections have been presented, I have made concessions, until I supposed that there would be no further objection raised. I have met every one that can be fairly and honestly raised. The amendment that I made this morning, eliminating all lands for which indemnity is to be allowed except those that were sold or located with warrants or scrip, thus following the principle laid down in the act of 1857. There is no extension of the grant, no new grant, no enlargement of it. There is the adoption of no new rule for the Department, except to give it more power to prevent frauds, if there is danger of such.

As to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY], that this is a lobbyist bill, I denounce it as untrue in fact. It is an unmanly and unwarranted attack upon a just measure, one which the gentleman knows nothing about. His opposition must have been inspired by some one who is interested in the defeat of this bill rather than a desire to do justice to the States interested. His State is not interested, and his assaults on Arkansas are unworthy the State he represents. I say, Mr. Speaker, that there never has been a more righteous measure presented to this House. It has often before been misrepresented as it has been to-day. It deals with the settlement of old grants made forty years ago, that unfortunately apply to some of the Southern States. I stand here as one of the representatives of Arkansas and that section of the Union, insisting, not that we should have more than our sister States, but the same rights accorded others. That much we are entitled to have.

I stand here to repel the assaults that have been made to-day upon the good name of Arkansas. They are cowardly. The Treasury officials year after year hold up the Southern States as defaulting States, and at the same time, so far as Arkansas is concerned, refuse to pay her the money that is due her. The gentleman from New York rises in his place and says that we have not come in the proper way. We have come in an open, honest way, and we ask only fair dealing. It was made the duty of the officers to adjust this old grant. They have never done it. They have our money. They will not pay it, and yet they insist that we shall pay these bonds.

Arkansas will not pay them until the Government settles with her. She has yielded at least $500,000 more than she gets in this bill if she could get as fair a settlement as some of the Northern States have had. But as the young and growing State that she is, hopeful of the future, she is willing to go forth in the struggle with these things behind her, and let swamp-land grants, 5 per cent funds, and everything else be things of the past, if the United States will give up her bonds and free her of this debt, long since honestly paid.

Mr. TRACEY. Have you asked for a settlement of the Arkansas claims?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly we have. I myself have walked at least 50 miles in trying to get the Departments to adjust this matter. I have a volume of correspondence with them. They answer, nothing can be done without legislation. You say there shall be no legislation. When we get a day for the consideration of this bill it is wasted in filibustering. When we make a motion, as we have to-day, to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it is demanded that there should be discussion and reckless misrepresentations are indulged in against it. Gentlemen, will you trifle with the rights of fifteen States, rights which rest upon solemn grants made by the Congress of the United States, in this way? I appeal to you to do justice by these Southern swamp-land States, and Northern States as well.

The bill has been discussed in every Congress since I have been here. It is a just measure. It is not a measure of the lobby or agents. I introduced it in the first Congress of which I was a member, and I am ready to defend it and I assume all responsibility for its presence here. The bill has been modified from time to time to meet the reasonable objections which have been made to it. I have incorporated in the report a quotation from the report of the late Commissioner of the Land Office, and there is nothing in any criticism that has been made of prior bills that will fairly apply to the pending bill. I have challenged other gentlemen to make any criticism upon it. They have failed to meet me upon that platform. They can not do so, and resort to misrepresentations.

There is not a single criticism that has ever come from the Interior Department on other bills that will apply to this bill as it is now. It is an honest bill. It does not involve more than it pretends to involve. When gentlemen have asserted that it involves fifteen millions or twenty millions of dollars, we have met that by limiting it to what I believe is sufficient, and the sum was suggested by the Commissioner of the Land Office.

But still parrot-like gentlemen repeat that it will take a very large amount.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is familiar with the measure, and he has told the House that the modification made this morning removed the principal objection that he had heretofore urged against the bill. It was the principal objection that has been urged by the Department. His own State of Indiana has been receiving money under the present law since I have been in Congress. The late Governor Gray secured as much, I believe, as $17,000. I hope the bill will pass, and I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber to support it, and pay no attention to the statements of those who have unjustly assailed it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 86, not voting 111; as follows:

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present he would vote for this bill.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to have a recapitulation of the vote at the proper time because there are some errors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have a recapitulation of the vote.

The Clerk proceeded to recapitulate the vote.

Mr. TRACEY. I withdraw my request for a recapitulation.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. WHITING with Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota.

Mr. CADMUS with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. SANFORD.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. CARUTH with Mr. VINCENT A. TAYLOR.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. RAINES.

Mr. SHIVELY with Mr. GRISWOLD.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. BERGEN.

For this day:

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. DURBOROW with Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. HITT.

Mr. CABLE with Mr. HULL.

Mr. CAUSEY with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. MOORE with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

On this bill:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. DIXON.

On this vote:

Mr. BACON with Mr. REED.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is absent on account of sickness in his family. I should like to have him excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 132, the nays 86. Two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the rules are not suspended, and the motion is lost.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE OF THE PEOPLE.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Members of Congress, to move to suspend the rules, and pass the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Resolved, etc. (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, and in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected from the State at large, by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the Legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the Legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution."

Mr. LODGE. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to act as tellers.

After some time spent in the count

Mr. REED said: Would it be in order to move a call of the House, there being no quorum?

The SPEAKER. It would. There are three short.

Mr. REED. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LODGE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 122.

Mr. REED. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CHIPMAN and Mr. REED were appointed.

Tellers took their places.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to demand the yeas and nays now?

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays on what?

Mr. CHIPMAN. On the motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Then I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. Why not have tellers? That will consume more time, and that ought to commend itself to this House. [Laughter.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 6, nays 186, not voting 137; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced, for the rest of this day:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. OWENS with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. HARRIES with Mr. CURTIS.

Mr. OATES with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. HAYNES of Ohio with Mr. CHARLES W. STONE.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, be excused for the rest of this day, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of members voting.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I renew the demand for a second.

The tellers having resumed their places, the House again divided; and there were—ayes 168, noes 2; so a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] to control the time in favor of the motion, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to control the time against it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CHIPMAN. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think, in the first place, that a constitutional amendment of the gravity and importance of this one should be put through under a suspension of the rules with only fifteen minutes' debate on each side, the House having had before only one day's discussion of it at the close of the last session. Moreover, this amendment, while proposing to alter the method of choosing Senators of the United States by referring the choice to the people—a proposition upon which I believe the members of the committee were entirely agreed—goes still further, and proposes to take from the Congress of the United States a power which was given to it by the framers of the Constitution, and given to it, as I think, with a wise purpose.

The Constitution of the United States confers upon the Congress the power of regulating the time and manner of choosing Senators, or of altering the State regulations, except as to the place of choosing. That clause in the Constitution was put in to insure, so far as possible, that every State should be represented in the Senate and that that body should not be crippled or reduced to inaction by a refusal of the State Legislatures to elect Senators.

This proposition of amendment not only alters the method of electing Senators, conferring that power upon the people instead of upon the State Legislatures—a proposition as to which, I believe, there is a very general consensus of opinion—but it makes this other great radical change, a change which it seems to me might increase the dangers of deadlocks, of confusion, of lack of validity in the body, far beyond anything that can now exist, and we have already enough difficulties of that sort.

It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, in the few moments that are allotted to this measure, to enter into any thorough discussion of it. I simply desire to point out to the House that this proposed constitutional amendment is not a mere proposition to give the election of Senators to the people, but that it proposes to change entirely the power of Congress in regard to that subject, a power which has existed from the formation of the Government, which has never been abused, and against which there has never been one word of complaint.

Such a grave and far-reaching addition to the original proposition can not, I think, be properly considered in the few moments allotted to this discussion, and I merely desire now to call the attention of the House to what this amendment purports to do. There was an amendment offered, which is printed with the joint resolution, restoring the old language of the Constitution; but under the rules of the House on suspension day we can not even vote upon that amendment. I reserve the balance of my time. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken: and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution was passed.

ADELICIA CHEATHAM, DECEASED.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Claims to call up the bill (S. 43) for the relief of the personal representatives of Adelicia Cheatham, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the personal representatives of Adelicia Cheatham, deceased, the sum of $32,074, with interest from October 29, 1868, in full discharge of all claims for money illegally assessed on the 10th of May, 1867, and again on the 15th of March, 1868, by the assessor for the fifth collection district of the State of Tennessee, under the internal-revenue law of the 30th of June, 1864, chapter 173, on crops of cotton raised in Louisiana during the years 1861 and 1862.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BUNN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I object. I think we ought to ascertain whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. BURROWS and Mr. BUNN were appointed to act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes none.

Mr. BURROWS. No quorum.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HOOKER of New York: A bill (H. R. 10206) to ratify and confirm an agreement made between the Seneca Nation of Indians and William B. Barker—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: A bill (H. R. 10211) to suspend during the first year of each Presidential term all civil-service laws, rules, and regulations in so far as they do or might restrict or interfere with the free exercise by the President or heads of Departments of the power to remove or appoint officers or employés of the Government—to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. WEADOCK: A bill (H. R. 10212) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract for the improvement of Petoskey Harbor, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HARVEY: A bill (H. R. 10213) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CAMINETTI: A joint resolution (H. Res. 188) providing for examination of the navigable waters of the river system tributary to the Bay of San Francisco, State of California, with a view to permanent improvement for the purposes of commerce and navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HEMPHILL: A joint resolution (H. Res. 181) to appropriate $5,000 to clear the Potomac River of ice—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri: A concurrent resolution providing for the printing of House Report, No. 1960, being a compilation of the labor laws of the various States and Territories and the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. ARNOLD: A bill (H. R. 10214) to correct the military record of the Scott County Battalion of Missouri Home Guards—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request): A bill (H. R. 10215) for the relief of John M. Cluly—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BOWMAN: A bill (H. R. 10216) to correct the military record of Jacob Cheout—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 10217) for the relief of Peter Cook, of Lonoke County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COX of New York: A bill (H. R. 10218) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Landon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIS: A bill (H. R. 10219) for the relief of Nancy Gates—to the Committee on War Claims.

By CHARLES W. STONE: A bill (H. R. 10220) granting a pension to G. D. Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VAN HORN: A bill (H. R. 10221) for the relief of William Alvord—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 10222) for the relief of the estate of John R. Bigelow—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of Wisconsin and Wyoming at the elections held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governors of those States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the 13th instant relative to the disbursement of the appropriation of the $2,500,000 of souvenir coins in aid of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. WILSON, referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select), and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented memorials of the Presbyterian Church of Media, Pa.; of the Second Presbyterian Church of Bridgeport, Pa.; of the Presbyterian Church of Doylestown, Pa.; of the Mariners' Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, Pa.; of the Macalester Memorial Presbyterian Church of Torresdale, Pa., and of the pastor, elders, and deacons of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Charity, Kans., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. KYLE presented the petition of J. W. Ryan and other citizens of Sturgis, S. Dak., praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PETTIGREW presented memorials of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Mitchell, of the Young Men's Christian Association of Davison County, and of H. J. Johnson and other citizens of Salem, all in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, and praying that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of Thomas Carr and other citizens of Faulkton, of M. O. Thompson and other citizens of Sioux Falls, and of John R. Weeks and other citizens of Yankton, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. ALDRICH presented a petition numerously signed by bankers and merchants of Providence, R. I., praying that the purchase of silver under the act of July 14, 1890, be discontinued; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAWYER presented petitions of the Bankers' Association of Superior, Wis., and of the Merchants' Association of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a petition of State and county officers of Oregon, praying for an extension of time for settlers to make proof and payment for forfeited railroad lands, the same subject-matter upon which I presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon on yesterday. As I intend this morning to report a bill granting this extension, and hope to secure its immediate consideration, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of J. B. Luse and sundry other citizens of Marshfield, Oregon, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. FELTON presented a petition of the Legislature of California, praying for the passage of House bill 9286 creating the California débris commission, and regulating hydraulic mining in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. VEST presented the memorial of P. F. Tomlinson and other citizens of Sedalia, Mo., remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. QUAY presented memorials of the Wylie Memorial Presbyterian Congregation of Philadelphia; of the Ministerial Association of Harrisburg; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Sharon; of the United Presbyterian Church of Claysville; of the Methodist Episcopal Congregation of New Bedford, and of the Chestnut Level Congregation, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Merchant Tailors' Exchange of Beaver Valley, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill 8535 limiting the free entry of wearing apparel of foreign manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DUBOIS presented a petition of 42 citizens of Silver City, Idaho, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HISCOCK presented the petition of Hermann Esser and other citizens of New York City, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition expressing the wish that the World's Fair be opened on Sunday, it being "a petition of citizens of the State of Missouri, chiefly residents and citizens of Kansas City, Mo." This is what is upon the back of the petition, and I found it upon my desk. Upon a very casual observation I see that it is signed by citizens of Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Indiana, Ohio, Massachusetts, New York, California, Texas, Wisconsin, Michigan, New Mexico Territory, and one citizen of China—a "heathen Chinee." As I stated, the petition prays for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on the Sabbath. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Quadro Centennial (Select).

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of citizens of Olivette, Central, and Strattman, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the quiet opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Thomas J. Cole, pastor of Trinity Church, E. L. Stuart, H. D. Helham, A. Friedberg, and 40 other citizens of Portland, Oregon, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of W. B. Steele and 90 other citizens of Portland, Oregon, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MILLS presented a memorial of 15 citizens of Hailettsville, Tex., praying for a repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centenial (Select).

He also presented a petition of citizens of Fort Worth, Tex., praying for the passage of legislation opening up the Cherokee Strip to settlement; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 119) extending the powers of the United States Government Exhibit Board, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3459) to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to a portion of the Pyramid Lake Reservation, in Nevada, and to the entire Walker River Reservation in said State, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

SETTLERS ON FORFEITED RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 3581) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads and for other purposes." The bill is indorsed by every member of the committee. It relates to the matter of extending for settlers upon forfeited railroad lands the time in which to pay for their lands. It will only affect those who by misfortune and the failure of crops have been unable to meet the requirements and pay for their lands by the 3d of February next, and merely extends the time until the 1st of January, 1894, as proposed to be amended, to give them an opportunity to secure another crop. The bill is unanimously reported, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the correspondence which I have attached to the brief report. I ask that the bill be taken up for present consideration. I do not think any one will object to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. To what lands does the bill relate?

Mr. DOLPH. The bill relates simply to people who had purchased lands of the railroad company and gone upon them, but owing to the failure of crops some of them were unable to pay for their lands in the time prescribed.

Mr. HOAR. In what State?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] intends to offer an amendment confining the bill to the State of Oregon or to the railroad lands from Wallula, Wash., to Portland, Oregon, to which I have no objection; but I do not like to ask for that myself.

Mr. HOAR. Is it proposed to be a general law?

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be read and it will be explained.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. When does the time expire?

Mr. DOLPH. The time expires the 3d of February. Nobody will object to the bill when it is read. Let it be read.

The bill was read, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was in line 9, after the word "section," to strike out the words "at any time within four years from the passage of said act," and insert "to January 1, 1894;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section to January 1, 1894.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment extends the time for a portion of the settlers on the land from September next until the 1st of January, and for others from either February or March next to the 1st of January in either case a part of the year. As stated in the memorial of the Oregon Legislature there was an entire failure of the crop in that section last year and the people have had to borrow money even to get seed to reseed their land. The object is to give the settlers the advantage of another crop to save their land.

Mr. HALE. Is the bill limited to the State of Oregon?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Louisiana proposes to offer an amendment to limit it.

Mr. WHITE. I have not yet prepared the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. If it is desired I will state the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is first upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. After the word "act" in line 7 I propose to insert:

Upon the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company between Wallula, Wash., and Portland, Oregon.

The object is to limit the bill if that is the desire. I did not like to ask for the passage of a special act. If the Senator from Louisiana offers that amendment I will consent to it.

Mr. WHITE. I offer that as an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back with amendments the bill (S. 3423) for the repeal of certain parts of the act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1890. I ask to have it read.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read in full and the amendments in full.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1890, as directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, from time to time, silver bullion to the aggregate amount of 4,500,000 ounces, or so much thereof as may be offered in each month, at the market price thereof, and to issue in payment for such purchases of silver bullion Treasury notes of the Udited States, is hereby repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1893: Provided, That this act shall not in any way affect or impair or change the legal qualities, redemption, or use of the Treasury notes issued under said act.

Mr. PLATT. What are the amendments?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the Secretary read the amendments proposed by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, after the word "ninety," strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Is hereby repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1894.

Insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That upon any deposit already or hereafter made of any United States bonds bearing interest in the manner required by law, any national banking association having made or making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered, and countersigned as provided by law, not exceeding in the whole amount the par value of the bonds deposited: Provided, That at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued to any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE LANDS.

Mr. HUNTON. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 121) authorizing payment, under the act of August 30, 1890, to the State of Virginia, upon the assent of the governor, heretofore given, till adjournment of next session of the Legislature thereof, to report it back with a favorable recommendation, and I am further instructed by the committee to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The preamble recites that the recent Legislature of Virginia, through a misunderstanding with the Department of the Interior, adjourned without giving the assent required by the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862."

The joint resolution provides that payments from the appropriation of the act may continue to be made to the State of Virginia, upon the assent of the governor, heretofore given, till the adjournment of the next regular session of the Legislature of the State.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF ICE IN POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a joint resolution making an appropriation of $5,000 for the clearing of the Potomac River of ice, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 135) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to hire boats for the purpose of clearing the Potomac River of ice within the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT BRIDGER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CAREY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3643) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Bridger abandoned military reservation, in the State of Wyoming, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to make subject to disposal, under the homestead law only, all public lands now remaining undisposed of within the abandoned military reservation in the State of Wyoming known as the Fort Bridger military reservation. Actual occupants thereon upon the 1st day of July, 1892, shall have the preference right to make one entry, not exceeding one quarter-section, under existing laws, if qualified, which shall include their respective improvements. Any of such lands as are occupied for town-site purposes and any of the lands that may be shown to be valuable for coal or minerals shall be disposed of as now provided for lands subject to entry and sale under the town-site, coal, or mineral-land laws, respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAIL BOXES.

Mr. SAWYER. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I report back favorably without amendment the bill

(S. 3580) to amend the proviso to be found in connection with the free-delivery service, page 569, twenty-fourth volume, Statutes at Large; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the proviso in chapter 388, act of March 3, 1887, so as to read:

Provided, That no boxes for the collection of mail matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours, or a railroad station, and that the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to declare by official order that the chutes connected with mail boxes that are attached to any chute or device which may be approved by him are a part of said receiving boxes and under the exclusive care and custody of the Post-Office Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1292) to remit the penalties of the light-house steamer Pansy.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 71) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to continue the report on wages by Joseph D. Weeks; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to William M. Watson, of Walker County, Ga.; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3732) to amend the act approved June 8, 1880, relating to the pay of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3733) to empower Robert Adger and others to bring suit in the Court of Claims for rent alleged to be due them; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 136) providing for the disposition of arrears of pay and bounty due the estates of deceased colored soldiers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Mrs. Susan A. Shelby be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EMPLOYMENT OF PINKERTON MEN.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate the Facts in Relation to the Employment of Armed Bodies of Men for Private Purposes be authorized to continue during the present session the inquiries directed by resolution of the Senate of August 2, 1892, with all the powers conferred by said resolution.

ARTESIAN WELL AND IRRIGATION MACHINERY.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to submit to the Senate as early as practicable the report on artesian well and irrigation machinery now in course of preparation under his direction, the expense of completing said report to be paid out of the money appropriated in the act of July 5, 1892: "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect information as to the best modes of agriculture by irrigation, $6,000."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 71) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to continue the report on wages by Joseph D. Weeks, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

BRIDGES IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. GORDON. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee. I think there will be no objection to the bill whatever, and it is a very important and pressing matter.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to object to the bill. I merely wish to say that as there was an understanding we would vote on the McGarrahan bill during the morning hour, I hope Senators will not interfere with that order. After this bill is disposed of I shall ask to have the McGarrahan bill taken up.

Mr. VEST. There is nothing in the bill that will give rise to any debate. It is an ordinary bridge bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill called up by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

After reading, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the McGarrahan bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes consideration of the bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] desires to occupy a brief time this morning. He wishes about fifteen minutes on the question he was discussing yesterday. If he will not exceed that time, I am willing to have the pending bill informally laid aside to allow him to proceed, with the understanding that at the expiration of that time I may submit some remarks upon the McGarrahan bill prior to its submission to a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be laid aside informally for fifteen minutes, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I am under renewed obligations to my friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] for his goodness. I shall not occupy nor ask to occupy more than fifteen minutes this morning. I shall then ask the Senate to-morrow morning to permit me to conclude my remarks.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 96) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to limit the office of President to one term for each incumbent.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, to propose an amendment to the Constitution is to assume a responsibility that is justified only by the existence of a public need which the present Constitution does not at all or does not fairly or well provide for. The regard which we have for the Constitution is our measure of its adequacy for the great work it was intended to accomplish. As a chart for statesmen and lawgivers it is supremely useful, but its provisions are not too sacred to be modified. It is one of the tenets of our political creed—one that we believe and one that we teach our children to believe, that whenever any form of government does not secure and protect the rights of the people, it may properly be abolished and a new government instituted with its powers organized as shall seem most likely to effect the safety and happiness of the people.

The same doctrine applies with equal force to the amendment of constitutions and laws. Whenever a change in the fundamental law becomes necessary in the furtherance of justice, to give greater or better effect to existing provisions, or to more effectually secure any of the rights which the original instrument was intended and expected to secure, the change ought to be made and made as soon as practicable.

The history of that part of the Constitution which provides for the election of the President and the Vice-President involves much of interest to us at the present. The universal feeling among the people when the convention to frame a constitution was called is clearly expressed in the preamble to the document as it was finally adopted:

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

It was intended to organize a government which should derive all its functions directly from the people. Upon that proposition there was no difference of opinion, either among the people at large or among the members of the convention. Divisions appeared only in matters of detail when providing means to secure a fair representation of the citizen in the conduct of public affairs and a faithful obedience to the popular will in the execution of the laws.

The divisions arose out of peculiar conditions and beliefs of the time. Each of the States had its own laws, traditions, and customs; their separate independence had been acknowledged by the British King in solemn treaty, and in their relations with one another and with foreign governments they possessed all the functions of sovereign nations. Naturally, therefore, when they came to organize a Federal government which, for general purposes should represent all of them, public men jealously guarded the rights of their own States so that nothing not absolutely necessary for the proper exercise of national functions should be surrendered. This local loyalty was conspicuously exhibited at every stage of the convention's proceedings. It was actively operative in the discussion of methods to be adopted in the choice of the first officer of the Republic.

Statesmen of that day had much regard for the common people, yet, in their opinion, there were some things upon which it was not safe to trust the operation of men's whims and prejudices through voting separately. This was held to be true especially in relation to grave matters of public concern which ought to be subjected to intelligent thought and careful study—as, for example, the selection of persons to exercise great and important public trusts.

It was because of this common belief among leaders of public opinion that the new Constitution was made to provide that while members of the national House of Representatives might be selected by the people themselves voting directly—the same people and in the same manner that elects members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, they should not be permitted to vote directly for United States Senators, who shall be chosen by the Legislatures of the several States, nor for the President and the Vice-President, who must be selected by electors appointed in such manner as the State Legislatures shall direct.

It was believed by members of the convention that the average man could impress himself upon public affairs through the agency of men more learned than himself—men of larger experience and wider view, better than he could by operating directly through his vote.

It was because of that belief that the electoral system was invented.

The convention which framed the Constitution of the United States was organized at Philadelphia on the 25th day of May, 1787, with delegates from nine States present, and on the 29th day of the same month Mr. Edmund Randolph, of Virginia, submitted a draft of fifteen resolutions which embodied the ideas of the Virginia delegates touching the organization of a new government. The seventh resolution, to be found in Elliott's Debates, page 128, was as follows:

7. Resolved, That a national executive be instituted, to be chosen by the National Legislature for the term of ——; to receive punctually, at stated times, a fixed compensation for the services rendered, in which no increase or diminution shall be made so as to affect the magistracy existing at the time of increase or diminution, and to be ineligible a second time, and that besides a general authority to execute the national laws, it ought to enjoy the executive rights vested in Congress by the Confederation.

On the same day Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, presented "a draft of a federal government which he had prepared," of which draft Article 8 provided:

The executive power of the United States shall be vested in a President of the United States of America, which shall be his style, and his title shall be His Excellency. He shall be elected for —— years, and shall be reëligible.

On the 9th day of June Mr. Gerry, of Massachusetts, moved—

That the national Executive should be elected by the executives of the States, whose proportion of votes should be the same with that allowed to the States in the election of the Senate.

This motion was lost by a vote of 9 to 1, Delaware dividing.

The drafts of Randolph and Pinckney having been considered in "Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union," on the 13th day of June Mr. Gorham, of Massachusetts, chairman, reported a series of resolutions, of which No. 9 reads as follows:

Resolved, That a national Executive be instituted, to consist of a single person; to be chosen by the National Legislature, for the term of seven years; with powers to carry into execution the national laws, to appoint two offices in cases not otherwise provided for, to be ineligible a second time, and to be removable on impeachment and conviction of malpractices or neglect of duty; to receive a fixed stipend by which he may be compensated for the devotion of his time to the public service, to be paid out of the National Treasury.

On the 15th day of June, William Patterson, of New Jersey, submitted a "plan" which had received favorable consideration from "several of the deputations," he said. Of his plan the fourth resolution was:

Resolved, That the United States in Congress be authorized to elect a Federal Executive, to consist of —— persons; to continue in office for the term of —— years; to receive punctually, at stated times, a fixed compensation for their services, in which no increase nor diminution shall be made so as to affect the persons composing the Executive at the time of such increase or diminution; to be paid out of the Federal Treasury; to be incapable of holding any other office or appointment during their time of service, and for —— years thereafter; to be ineligible a second time, and removable by Congress on application by a majority of the executives of the several States.

On the 18th day of June, Alexander Hamilton, of New York, submitted a sketch containing his views. The first sentence of the fourth paragraph expresses his idea concerning the election of the President. It reads as follows:

IV. The supreme executive authority of the United States to be vested in a governor, to be elected to serve during good behavior; the election to be made by electors chosen by the people in the election districts aforesaid.

Mr. President, the fifteen minutes which were given to me through the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa have expired. Again expressing my appreciation of the courtesy, I shall ask the Senate to-morrow morning, at the conclusion of the morning business, to permit me to conclude my remarks.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill which was set for consideration this morning, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the passage of the pending bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. I feel that I have some familiar knowledge of the facts and evidence involved in this case. As chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress, it became my duty to conduct, with that committee, an examination of the so-called McGarrahan case. We devoted considerable time to the investigation and the examination of the case, giving to all parties who applied the privilege of being heard and of introducing testimony. At the conclusion of the hearing I was, by direction of the committee, instructed to prepare a report, which I did, which report was presented with the approval of the committee to the House, accompanied by a bill. Upon discussion there the report was approved, and the bill was passed.

I do not wish to take up unnecessarily the time of the Senate in the discussion of this question, for I prefer action to consumption of time, and in order that I may place what I have to say within as limited compass as possible I shall read a part of the report to which I have referred. I will also state that, while I shall not read the entire report, I shall ask to have leave to incorporate it entirely in my remarks. From the report I read as follows:

[Report No. 33, Fortieth Congress, second session.]

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, made the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of William McGarrahan, respectfully submit the following report:

The history of this case is composed of such a multitude of circumstances, spread over a period extending from the year 1844 to the present time, that to give it in detail would be to present a report so voluminous as to defeat the very object contemplated by the House in submitting it to the committee—that of information to its members.

It has, therefore, been deemed advisable to exhibit leading and controlling facts rather than minute and unimportant particulars.

The effort has been to give the present paper a synoptical rather than argumental character, as it is believed a plain but abbreviated narrative will be sufficient to satisfy all inquirers that the bill herewith reported should pass.

An impartial statement of the facts and of prominent proceedings is, in the judgment of the committee, all that is needed to show that Mr. McGarrahan is entitled to the relief he seeks, and to the land in question, as described in his original memorial, presented to the House during the Thirty-ninth Congress.

In the year 1844, Manuel Micheltorena, the then governor of Upper California, in accordance with a Mexican custom to confer lands upon deserving officials and citizens, granted to Vincent P. Gomez a tract of land then, it would seem, considered almost valueless, and situate in the present counties of Fresno and Monterey, State of California. The property was then and is now known as "Panoche Grande Rancho."

The making of this grant has been denied, and this denial constitutes the principal ground from which has sprung the prolonged and exhausting litigation in the case, extending over a period of more than thirteen years.

The proof of the existence of the grant is satisfactory. It is found mainly in the following facts:

I. The deposition of José Castro, who filled the office of political chief of California, and was prefect and commanding general, which states that Gomez, with whom he was well acquainted, desired him (Castro) to inform him (Gomez) of a suitable place to petition for or secure, and that he recommended the Panoche Grande.

II. The petition of Gomez to Governor Micheltorena, March 13, 1844, requesting a grant of the rancho.

III. A marginal entry made by the governor, March 14, 1844, on the petition of Gomez, that the proper secretary should cause the necessary investigations to be made and make report.

IV. A declaration of the same date, by Manuel Jimino, the secretary, that the petition of Gomez had been transmitted to the first justice of San Juan, in order that he should report what would be just in the matter.

V. The report of the justice, dated March 20, 1844, stating that the land was vacant, and that there was no reason why the same should not be granted.

VI. A map of the land, filed in pursuance of the justice's report.

VII. The affidavit of Valentine Gajiola, employed in the Presidial Company of Monterey in 1848, showing that Gomez applied to him to make a map of the ranche; exhibited to him the title paper duly executed, and that he made the map as desired.

VIII. The deposition of José Abrigo, the head of the commissary department, and resident in Monterey, proving that Gomez was a clerk in his office, and that, in 1845, he (Gomez) showed him a title to the land named, together with a map of the property; that the papers were signed by the governor and secretary, and that he was well acquainted with the signatures of these officers, having often seen them write; that the archives in which these papers were passed into the possession of the American Army July 7, 1846.

IX. The testimony of Abrigo, Dr. James L. Ord, a surgeon in the United States Army, and others, proving the destruction of the archives in Monterey, and the fact that such destruction is generally admitted.

X. The deposition of Oscar De Grandé Barque, stating that Gomez, in 1845, showed him title papers for the rancho, and proposed a sale of the land to him.

XI. The affidavit of J. Marno Bonilla, secretary of the superior tribunal of justice in Monterey, stating that Gomez in 1841, applied to him for stamped paper, to be used in procuring a title to lands; and that in 1845, he saw memoranda of grants of land, among which was the Panoche Grande to Gomez.

XII. The affidavit of Matias Moreno, secretary of the State of Upper California, stating that, in 1846, he knew Gomez had obtained a grant for Panoche Grande, and that he saw the grant.

XIII. The affidavits of Maricio Gonzales, José Fernandez, Gabriel de la Torre, Joaquin S. Escamilla, and others, tending to prove the existence of the grant.

XIV. The statement of E. L. Goold, esq., before the Judiciary Committee, that he believed the petition of Gomez was a genuine document, and that he based his opinion on his knowledge of the facts and circumstances connected with the case of said Gomez against the United States, which involved the validity of the grant upon which this case is based. Mr. Goold was of counsel in said case in opposition to the grant, and appeared as a witness before the committee on behalf of the opposing parties.

XV. The grant by Governor Micheltorena, in the year 1844, to Don Julian Ursua, of the tract known as the rancho "La Panoche de San Juan and Los Carrisalitos," wherein the tract is described as being bounded on the south by the mine of "Los Aguilas" and "La Panoche Grande."

XVI. Statement of Henry D. Cooke, esq., that when when he was in California, in the years 1847-'48-'49, it was common report that Gomez had received a grant of a rancho near San Juan from the Mexican Government.

XVII. In 1845 the board of land commissioners, at the hearing on the evidence, as required by the laws of the United States, decided that Gomez had given satisfactory proof of the existence and loss of the grant.

1. In the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, entered into between the United States and Mexico, February 2, 1848, it was provided that property of every kind belonging to Mexicans should be inviolably respected, and that the United States should pass such laws as would give effect to the different stipulations of the treaty, and always thereafter regularly enforce them. This feature was introduced to secure all landed and other interests that might in any way be affected by a change of jurisdiction over the territory embraced in the treaty (Stats. at Large, vol. 9, pp. 229-231).

2. The law contemplated was passed March 3, 1851 (United States Statutes at Large, vol. 9, p. 631), creating a board of land commissioners, and declaring, among other things, "that each and every person claiming lands in California, by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government, shall present the same to the said commissioners when sitting at a board, together with such documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses as the said claimant relies upon in support of such claim; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners, when the case is ready for hearing, to proceed promptly to examine the same upon such evidence, and upon the evidence produced in behalf of the United States, and to decide upon the validity of the said claim, and within thirty days after the said decision is rendered to certify the same, with the reasons on which it is founded, to the district attorney of the United States in and for the district in which such decision shall be rendered" (sec. 8).

3. February 9, 1853, Gomez, in accordance with the provision of the act of March 3, 1851, presented his petition to the board of land commissioners, praying a confirmation of his claim to the Rancho Panoche Grande.

4. The board, having fully heard the evidence of the grant, decided that the claimant had given satisfactory proof of the existence and loss of the grant, but had failed entirely to offer any proof whatever going to show that he ever occupied, improved, or cultivated any part of the land, or that any one ever did for him, or that he ever saw the land; and on the ground of nonoccupany decided the grant invalid.

5. In the case of Fremont vs. The United States (17 Howard, 542), decided at December term, 1854, the Supreme Court of the United States held that, in the case of Mexican land grants, omission to take possession of the land did not of itself forfeit the right or grant. Had this determination preceded the action of the board of land commissioners the grant to Gomez would certainly have been pronounced valid, as the board decided against the grant on the ground that the grantee had not entered upon and possessed himself of the land granted.

6. The decision of the board of land commissioners made an appeal necessary, which was accordingly taken by Gomez, and June 15, 1857, the district court for the southern district of California confirmed his claim, and a decree to that effect was pronounced. But through what is claimed to have been a clerical mistake, and which the party asserts was unobserved for some months, the decree was for 3 leagues of land instead of 4, as claimed and as proved by the deposition of José Abrigo, used before the board of land commissioners, and in the court, to have been comprised in the grant, and was unsigned by the judge.

7. Thus, as Gomez, his counsel, and all interested might well have supposed, the question of title was settled, subject, of course, to the right of appeal. The records of the district court presenting Gomez as owner of the rancho in accordance with the finding of the board of land commissioners, the decree of the said district court, and the decision of the highest court in the Fremont case, Mr. McGarrahan, December 22, 1857, bought the property from Gomez, in good faith, and for a valuable consideration.

8. The alleged error in the quantity of land stated in the decree of June 5, 1857, being discovered, an application was made to the court to correct it, whereupon, February 8, 1858, an amended decree was entered nunc pro tunc (that is, as of June 5, 1857), covering the 4 leagues, and duly signed.

9. About the time Mr. McGarrahan purchased from Gomez some persons, having prospected the land, discovered mineral deposits (a fact unknown to Mr. McGarrahan when he purchased), and, finding it had been sold by Gomez, they, as "squatters," took possession of and held it, as they still hold it, either in person or by assignees, cognizant of the facts, and without title.

10. March 15, 1858, the United States appealed from the decree of the district court, as it seems was their practice to do in all cases adjudicated against them, and on July 8, 1858, thirteen months after the final decree of confirmation, a motion was made by special counsel of the United States in the case, as it seems, without notice to the claimant, to have the decree opened.

11. Mr. McGarrahan, having been advised that the appeal to the Supreme Court had been taken by the Government, without examination as to its merits, in accordance with the uniform practice, made application through counsel to Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, the then Attorney-General (a certified transcript of the case being presented to him), to have him examine the case and determine whether he would persist in the appeal.

12. After a full argument before the Attorney-General, that officer directed that the appeal should be docketed and dismissed; and on January 31, 1859, it was so entered upon the books of his office and upon the records of the Supreme Court. Whereupon, in March, 1859, the Supreme Court issued its mandate, which ordered and decreed the docketing and dismissal of the appeal entered in the Supreme Court, and commanded that "such proceedings be had in said case as, according to right and justice and the laws of the United States, ought to be had."

13. The said mandate was filed in the district court May 4, 1859, whereupon the court ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said mandate should be carried into effect, and that the said Gomez proceed under the decree of the court as under a final decree.

The effect of this was to perfect the title to said rancho in Mr. McGarrahan, as the grantee of Mr. Gomez.

At this stage of the case the most vigilant lawyer consulted by client—

I make this as a legal proposition, and let anyone question it who may—

At this stage of the case the most vigilant lawyer consulted by client, and required to examine records, could have given no other opinion upon the state of the records than that a fee-simple interest in the rancho was vested in Mr. McGarrahan.

From this time the parties occupying the property, without title or rightful claim, resorted to divers expedients to defeat McGarrahan's title; accordingly the "squatter's" interest, so called, which vested in the New Idria Mining Company, appealed to controlling officers of the Government. This is shown by the following facts:

1. A consultation between Mr. E. L. Goold, counsel for the "squatters" upon the property alluded to, and the Attorney-General, and immediately thereafter that officer making a motion in the Supreme Court to recall the mandate before spoken of on the ground of fraud and want of jurisdiction.

2. The alleged fraud was declared to consist in the fact that a conveyance of an undivided half interest in the property had been made by Gomez to Pacificus Ord, then representing the United States as district attorney, and that he had consented to the propriety of the original decree of June 5, 1857.

3. It is shown that Mr. Ord, after his appointment to the office he held, not only revealed to the Government the fact that he was interested in the claim, but requested the Government to employ other counsel to attend to its interests.

4. This the Government did not do; the consequence of which was that Mr. Ord, at the time of the original decree, having no evidence militating against the validity of the grant, acquiesced in its confirmation; and, so far as this committee can discover, the representation then made by Mr. Ord was in accordance with facts.

5. At this point in the proceedings it appeared that some influence, unknown to the committee, had caused the file marks and indorsements on the final order of the district court, made in obedience to the mandate of the Supreme Court, to be erased from the record, as well as the filing of the mandate itself. This seems to have been done on the 18th of January, 1860, more than eight months after the order had been filed. It also appears that certain entries in the books of the Attorney-General's Office respecting the original appeal in this case, and the action of the Government in other appeals, embraced in the same order, were not known to the court or to McGarrahan's counsel in time for them to avail themselves of the benefits thereof, on the hearing of the case in the Supreme Court, on motion by the Attorney-General to revoke the mandate. It will be remembered that it was upon the conclusive evidence of his order that the Supreme Court had directed the proper entry to be made upon their record, and that their mandate was issued.

6. This failure to disclose the facts to the court, by the Government, undoubtedly had much to do in securing the order of the Supreme Court revoking their mandate of 1859, and which order was strangely withheld until June, 1862, when it was filed by the present claimant for the purpose of again lodging jurisdiction of the case in the court below.

7. But in the mean time (March 21, 1861) the district court annulled its original decree. This extraordinary action on the part of the court seems to have been taken without notice, either to the claimant or his known counsel, and in the absence of both.

8. As soon as this condition of things was ascertained, an application was made to the court to restore the decree, and, upon full hearing, the order, as requested, was made on the 4th August, 1862.

9. Thus matters rested until the 25th August, 1862, when the then district attorney, contrary to express stipulations, entered into between himself and the counsel for the claimant, in their absence, and without notice, obtained an order of appeal to the Supreme Court.

10. The impropriety of this proceeding is made apparent for the reason that, in order to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction, a citation should have been first issued, signed by the judges, served on the claimant, and from return made, with proof of service.

11. The law is very clear upon this point; the acts of 1789 and 1803, which regulate appeals (the appeal not having been taken in open court at the June term in 1857, when the original decree was pronounced, nor at the December term in 1857, when the decree was entered nunc pro tunc, or, in other words, within five years, as directed by the statutes), demanded a notice to the opposite party, and the proceeding was therefore clearly wrong. The court, upon a full hearing, reached this determination, and accordingly decided, December 4, 1862, that the appeal allowed August 25, 1862, be vacated and set aside, and that an appeal on behalf of the United States to the Supreme Court be denied.

Here, for the second time, the record evidenced a perfect title in the claimant.

It having been twice judicially determined by the action of the courts that Mr. McGarrahan was the legal owner of the Rancho Panoche Grande, the aggressors upon his rights resorted to a new line of action.

1. As seen, after nine years of litigation, Mr. McGarrahan, the present claimant, succeeded in acquiring two distinct confirmations of his title. It was then, in accordance with the act of Congress of June, 1862, he applied to the United States surveyor-general of California for a survey of the said tract of land, and which officer caused the survey to be made and approved September 11, 1862. This survey was transmitted immediately thereafter to the General Land Office, and a patent for the property was demanded.

2. Here, again, he was confronted by the New Idria Mining Company, before referred to. The Secretary of the Interior at that time (Hon. Caleb B. Smith), after argument in the case, ordered the patent to issue.

Thus, again, for the third time, the title to the Panoche Grande was found to be in Mr. McGarrahan. Some unknown cause delayed the execution of this order, and the patent was not issued. This neglect, or refusal, was persisted in throughout the remainder of Mr. Secretary Smith's term. The matter was then brought to the notice of Mr. Usher, the new Secretary, before whom it was again argued, and by whom a patent was directed to be issued. Neither the order of Mr. Smith nor Mr. Usher was obeyed, for some reason not yet divulged or ascertained.

For the fourth time the title of Gomez and his grantee was decided to be good and available in law. A request was then made by the claimant of President Lincoln that he would make an examination of the case and determine it upon its merits. This he consented to do. Printed briefs were laid before him; and, upon full consideration of all the facts and circumstances, he directed the Secretary of the Interior to cause a patent to be issued to Mr. McGarrahan. And thus, for the fifth time, Mr. McGarrahan was declared to be entitled to the property or rancho and that neither the United States nor any other person had lawful claim to the same.

In accordance with this order of the President of the United States to the Secretary of the Interior, a patent was actually made out, but, for reasons not fully explained, never delivered to him for signature.

But, Mr. President, that was a mistake, as I shall show as I proceed further in my remarks.

To recapitulate:

1. The proof of a legal grant from the Mexican Government to Gomez and the transfer of title to McGarrahan are clearly and indisputably shown.
2. The district court of the United States for the southern district of California confirmed the grant.
3. The Attorney-General of the United States declared the title to the lands to be in Mr. McGarrahan, and caused an entry to that effect to be made on the books of his office and in the Supreme Court.
4. Hon. Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior, after examination and consideration of the case, ordered a patent to be issued to Mr. McGarrahan.
5. Mr. Usher, the successor in office of Mr. Smith, similarly decided.
6. Mr. Lincoln, after inquiry, decided the grant to be genuine, and that a patent should be issued to Mr. McGarrahan.

From the time when the district court pronounced its decree of confirmation (June 5, 1857) and the President's action on the case (in the fall of 1863), it will be observed, over six years had elapsed, and in consequence of the lapse of time an appeal could not be had according to law, unless something should appear to avoid the limitation.

I shall not read further from the report at this time, but I ask that the remainder of it may be incorporated in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

The remainder of the report submitted by Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress, is as follows:

In December, 1863, a paper, purporting to be a transcript of proceedings as they appeared on the records of the district court, was prepared in the Attorney-General's Office in Washington, D. C., forwarded to the district attorney in California, certified by him out of his district, without comparison with the record and merely from memory, and from which transcript were omitted material parts of the record, and returned to Washington.

Upon the transcript thus made up the case was again brought before the Supreme Court, which being discovered by the claimant, a motion was made to strike off the appeal, which was refused, although it, as it seems to the committee, was out of time, and the transcript had been made up without reference to the actual records of the district court.

Notwithstanding the Supreme Court refused to strike off the appeal taken in the manner indicated, a new transcript was obtained, 1865, from the clerk of the district court, and filed at December term, 1865, eight years and a half after the decree of the district court confirming the title was first pronounced, and more than three years after the period had elapsed within which the law allowed an appeal to be taken in the case, unless some exception takes it out of the limitation. Upon this appeal the Supreme Court, in March, 1886, decided the case against the claimant, and thus matters now stand.

The committee have bestowed a great deal of time and labor upon this case in order to arrive at its real facts and merits. The claimant and the parties resisting his claim have been heard patiently and at great length.

In presenting the conclusion at which the committee have arrived they do not wish to be understood as undertaking to review and reverse the action of the Supreme Court relative to the case. Under and by virtue of the right of petition the claimant has presented his case to Congress, and the House of Representatiues directed this committee to inquire into the grounds of his complaint. This has been done. Many facts have been presented to the committee which were not placed before the court. Additional evidence has been submitted and circumstances disclosed which have induced your committee to conclude that the relief prayed for by Mr. McGarrahan ought to be extended to him, and this may very readily be done. The title to the land claimed, and which he asks that he may be allowed to purchase, is now vested in the Government of the United States, and it is merely a question whether he shall be permitted to secure that which, in the judgment of your committee, he acquired title to by virtue of the Mexican grant aforesaid, or it shall fall into the hands of a corporation known as the New Idria Mining Company, which has been resisting his claim for years and paying the expenses of the efforts of said company out of the proceeds of the mines, the title of which rests in the United States.

It is clear that McGarrahan purchased the property in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, when it was regarded as of but little value. His interests have been attacked and his title resisted nominally by the United States, but really by the New Idria Mining Company. The name of the United States, their officers and money have been used to resist his claim, and all to the end that this property, valuable as it now undoubtedly is, may pass into the hands of parties who are wholly unknown to the records of the proceedings had in the courts of the United States respecting the title to the land in question through all its years of transit from the board of land commissioners to and through the Supreme Court of the United States.

The company aforesaid placed before the committee a memorial, in which the case is stated as follows:

"The real parties who contested the grant were your memorialists, for against them only were the efforts of the owners of the 'Panoche Grande rancho' directed. For the New Idria mines, and for the fruits of the labor of those who have developed them, the owners of the 'Panoche Grande' are now seeking Congressional interference in their behalf. It may well be doubted whether the 'Panoche Grande' would ever have been heard of in the district court of the United States or in Congress but for the hope of robbing your memorialists of the fruits of their years of labor and vast expenditures of money."

This extract shows that the United States have no interest as between these parties beyond that of preserving its faith as pledged in the treaty made between this Government and that of Mexico. And as to the allegation of robbery, etc., made by said company, it may be remarked that one of its stockholders, of large interest, testified before the committee that after paying all of the expenses of said company, including every outlay, a balance would be left in its treasury on account stated.

The precedents are numerous where the Congress has afforded redress in cases of an analogous character. The following are referred to:

I. The Soscol act, 12 U. S. Stats., page 808.
II. The Bolsa de Jomales act, 13 U. S. Stats., page 136.
III. Ex-Mission San José act, 13 U. S. Stats., page 534.
IV. Laguna de Santos Calle act, 13 U. S. Stats., page 372.
V. Baron de Bastrop act, 9 U. S. Stats., page 597.

In addition to which we have the act of June 21, 1860, and the act of March 1, 1861.

In view of all the facts developed in the case and believing that justice and equity demand that the relief prayed for by the claimant be extended to him, the committee recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

Mr. WILSON. The bill which was reported by the committee at the time when the report from which I have read was made, recognizing McGarrahan's right, provided that he should be allowed to purchase the entire grant at the price of a dollar and a quarter per acre; but after the report had been made it was discovered that President Lincoln had in fact executed the patent, that it was in fact examined and recorded in the Interior Department, and that thereby the title to McGarrahan was absolutely complete. That, however, was not known at the time the report was prepared and the House in the Fortieth Congress acted upon the case. It was because of the absence of knowledge of that fact, that the committee at that time reported the bill in the form which I have indicated.

That was in order to give a remedy to McGarrahan, which we were satisfied he was entitled to, and yet, at the same time, to avoid a seeming reflection upon the judicial and executive departments of the Government. Had we known, however, the fact to which I refer and which was afterwards discovered, that the patent had in fact been executed and recorded, the report would have been entirely different. In that case nothing would have been required from McGarrahan in respect of a payment to the Government of the United States for any interest in that land, for the patent having been executed, recorded, and examined, as the testimony taken before other committees in other Congresses explicitly, definitely, and unquestionably demonstrates, the title in McGarrahan would have been complete and he need not have been involved in this long contention running through so many years. Not only the courts of the States, but the Supreme Court of the United States in many cases have settled the doctrine that the execution and recording of a patent convey title to the grantee. I shall not consume time in reading many authorities, but I will read a paragraph from 12 Otto, in the case of the United States vs. Schurz, in which the court say:

We are of the opinion that when, upon the decision of the proper office that the citizen has become entitled to a patent for a portion of the public lands, such a patent made out in that office is signed by the President, sealed with the seal of the General Land Office, countersigned by the recorder of the Land Office, and duly recorded in the record book kept for that purpose, it becomes a solemn public act of the Government of the United States, and needs no further delivery or other authentication to make it perfect and valid. In such a case the title to the land conveyed passes by matter of record to the grantee, and the delivery which is required when a deed is made by a private individual is not necessary to give effect to the granting clause of the instrument.

That is the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to patents duly executed and recorded respecting public lands of the United States. I would say here that I should think that Senators, especially those who come from Western States, would hesitate before they would vote against this bill, which is only a recognition of that doctrine, and thereby establish a legislative precedent which will put in jeopardy thousands and tens of thousands of titles scattered all through the Western region. Any man now residing on a piece of land which he obtained from the Government, for which a patent may have been issued but who has not received his patent, may well tremble if Congress is going to declare that a patent not delivered conveys no title. It is not the doctrine of the law, either in State or nation. The execution of a patent, its examination and record, makes the title absolutely complete in the grantee.

It may be said that there has been contention about this matter. So there has been; but the evidence taken before various committees of Congress in respect of the execution of this patent, the testimony of the secretary of the President for the execution of land patents, and the testimony in respect of the records of the Interior Department show that the patent was recorded. More than that, the testimony shows that some person had invaded the files of the Interior Department and removed from the patents there on file the sheet which contained the signature of the President by his secretary for the execution of land patents.

Mr. President, I do not wish to establish a precedent which will tend to further acts of that kind, either when the record itself or the proof itself shows that this patent was executed and was properly recorded and examined.

I do not, as I have said, desire to occupy the time of this body, as the understanding has been that there shall be a vote on this bill this morning; but I wish to call the attention of Senators who have been particularly anxious not to reflect on the Supreme Court nor to reflect upon the Executive Departments to the fact that they now have an opportunity to do a just thing to a wronged man, and to do it, not by casting reflection on those Departments, but by justifying those Departments in order that their acts may have full legal significance and force.

There is no question about the statement I have made of the execution of the patent, of its recording, and of the title being vested. It may be said, "If that is so, why do you not then depend upon some other remedy?" The committee has taken in this case the most proper and conservative course imaginable.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me a moment?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] yesterday, with very proper encomiums upon his ability, referred to the fact that my late colleague in this body, Mr. McDonald, made a report adverse to Mr. McGarrahan's claim. I think it would not be right if I did not state a subsequent circumstance. Mr. McDonald, after leaving this body, when the bill now pending was submitted to him, authorized my colleague [Mr. TURPIE], who is not now in his seat, but who has authorized me to make this statement, to say that he would support any bill of this kind if he were again a member of this body, and give to this claimant a right to go into a court of our own creation and prove what he is entitled to, if he is entitled to anything.

I think it due to Mr. McDonald's memory to make that statement. I should not have done so but for the fact that he was cited as against this claim by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask whether the Senator's late colleague would agree to a section in this bill which confines the court to and compels it to receive as evidence all the matters that would come up to determine the case?

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized to say that my late colleague, Mr. McDonald, looked at this bill, examined it for what there was in it, and then said to my present colleague [Mr. TURPIE] and Mr. McGarrahan together that a measure of that kind would receive his support if he were here a member of this body. I have a memorandum to that effect in my desk now.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, as I remarked before the interruption, to give this the position of a conservative course, in view of the principles of law, we might say that there is justice in asking to have this case reviewed on the ground of newly discovered evidence. This is often done, even where cases have been tried in the courts and decided; and in this case the newly discovered evidence, after the report from which I have been reading was made, was that which discloses the execution of the patent, its recording, and the perfection of the title of McGarrahan.

But, as intimated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], might it not be dangerous to accept the kind of evidence to which he referred yesterday, although now his question would seem to include all other evidence? I suggest to him, however, in answer to the objection which might at least be inferred from his remarks yesterday that there was evidence to be taken according to the provisions of this bill of a doubtful character, that the evidence provided for in this case is testimony and depositions in courts and the action of the several departments of the Government. This is rendered necessary in some cases because of the death of the persons who gave the testimony; but the testimony which they gave, which is preserved in the records of courts and departments, was all furnished under the sanctions and securities of the law. Therefore it is entirely right that this case, having passed through these long and tedious years, shall go to the courts; and that is what the bill provides.

The first section of the bill refers this case again to the courts. It is to go to the Court of Private Land Claims, with the right of the Government to appeal to the Supreme Court. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont and to other Senators who have been seeking to defend the action of the Supreme Court of the United States, that I see no way clearer for reaching that defense than to give the Supreme Court of the United States, either by appeal by the Government or appeal by McGarrahan, an opportunity to review this case in respect of all of its features, part of which were not known to the court when it acted before.

Mr. President, I have my own convictions, thoroughly grounded, because of my own personal and, I believe, thoroughly honest investigation of this case. I have no more doubt about the propriety and justice of giving this opportunity to McGarrahan to have his case determined by the courts, in view of all the facts which have been developed, than I have of my right to address the Senate on the case.

I may say, in connection with the remarks which the Senator from Vermont made yesterday, that the line of authoritative opinion in the State of Vermont is not one of unbroken character. The Senator had a very distinguished and able predecessor in this body—I refer to Judge Poland—and he at one time joined in a report on the McGarrahan case. The old question of part of the grant having been conveyed to others being involved in the case at that time, Judge Poland said in the concluding paragraph of the report submitted by him:

> We therefore recommend that the grant to so much of the "Panoche Grande Rancho" as has not been patented to others, or not covered by preemption or homestead claims under existing laws, be perfected in McGarrahan, and that as to so much as has been patented or covered by homestead or preëmption rights, he be entitled to scrip; and we ask that we be permitted to offer a bill to that effect as an amendment to the report of the committee.

Of course if that eminent lawyer, the predecessor of the Senator from Vermont, had not been thoroughly convinced that the title was in McGarrahan he never would have joined in a recommendation of that kind, nor would he have asked that for the part of the land which had passed by grant to other persons McGarrahan should be granted an equal amount in scrip of the United States which could be located on other lands.

Mr. MORRILL. I will only say, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. If it were a question of personality, I might refer to scores of men of equal judicial learning with the gentleman the Senator has cited who have been always against the claim.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I think it would be somewhat troublesome for the Senator from Vermont to name scores of men of equal talent and ability with Judge Poland who have always denied McGarrahan's right to this land; but I referred to him in order to show that from the Green Mountain State there had not been an unbroken line of testimony in respect of the question of the invalidity of this grant.

There has been much said concerning this case to which I do not care to refer. The Senator from Vermont yesterday read extracts from letters, as I find in the RECORD, and heard him read part of them, which Mr. McGarrahan had written, to which exception might be taken. I wonder if the Senator from Vermont is not the only man living who never wrote a letter which he would not be perfectly free to have published? I expect that most men have written some letters of that kind.

Mr. MORRILL. But in this case there are seven hundred of them.

Mr. WILSON. There is another branch of this case, as I was about to mention, and that is that the committee before whom these letters were placed—at least a part of that committee—did not give that full faith and credit to them which seems to have been intimated yesterday by the Senator from Vermont. Not only that, but the fact exists—and can be proved if necessary—that not only were letters before that committee, but the committee had letters in which there had been interpolations made by parties who were at enmity with the man for whose relief this bill is pending. It is not at all a straight, clear case; it is not at all clear sky from which nothing but beautiful stars shine.

I say here, with the knowledge I have of this case, that I do not hesitate to put myself on record in favor of the passage of the bill notwithstanding the Presidents veto, because from my knowledge and examination of it I have a deep-rooted, honest conviction that it is right, and that Mr. McGarrahan should be allowed to go into court and let the court have an opportunity to review all the grounds, a part of which never has been before them.

Mr. President, I am quite willing, as there was an understanding that there should be a vote taken to-day on this bill, to yield the floor that the vote may be taken.

Mr. POWER. I desire to ask the Senator how long he has had knowledge of this case?

Mr. WILSON. The first connection I had with the case was, I believe, in the Fortieth Congress. I submitted from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives at that time the report from which I have read this morning.

Mr. POWER. And the Senator has followed the case all the way through?

Mr. WILSON. I have examined the reports of the various committees and the action of Congress, especially since the case has been pending here I have gone over the ground. I have known more or less of the case from the time to which I refer on down, and I must repeat here that I have no hesitation whatever in giving my vote in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. POWER. From your actual knowledge?

Mr. WILSON. From my actual knowledge, and from an elaborate and conscientious examination of the case.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I came into the Senate without any opinions in regard to this claim. I have listened to the arguments of its supporters with the greatest interest; and it appears to me that they have carefully avoided what I deem is the most material part of the bill, at least that part which gives me the most difficulty.

It is obvious that the bill legalizes evidence which will insure an award against the United States. I think I can see that the bill formulates a state of facts which will make it the duty of the court to allow the claim of McGarrahan. I observe the bill carefully removes out of the way a large number of judicial decisions or findings which will be conclusive against the claimant if they stand. So the bill first removes out of the way every legal obstruction to his claim and formulates evidence which will insure an award in his favor.

What is done by the bill is only done against the United States. The bill provides:

That no finding or judgment of the said court in favor of said William McGarrahan or his heirs or legal representatives or assigns, or patent to be issued under authority of such findings, and judgment shall be held to take from the present holders any portion of said tract of land so described which has been heretofore disposed of by the United States.

In order, then, to escape the imputation of injustice as against adverse claimants, the rules of evidence are limited to proceedings against the United States, and the bill confirms all the adverse claims in the hands of private individuals. McGarrahan, therefore, is relieved from the counter contest of adverse claimants in any court or place. Under this bill it is not the interest of anybody to dispute his claim, because all adverse claimants are satisfied by the confirmation of their titles.

The effect of the bill, therefore, is to give to McGarrahan whatever he may claim against the United States. It satisfies adverse holders, who would, if there was recovery, also share the fortunes of the United States.

That may be reasonable enough, but there is a fourth section of the bill, that I have heard nobody defend, which provides:

That if the court shall adjudge in favor of said William McGarrahan as provided in section 3, the United States shall indemnify the said William McGarrahan for such portion of land as may have been heretofore and may hereafter be disposed of by the United States.

That might be reasonable in some aspects of the case; the United States might give him other lands or make other locations if it saw proper, but that is not satisfactory to McGarrahan. The section then provides that the United States shall also indemnify him—for any mineral or valuable substance whatever extracted from said lands by any person or corporation other than the said William McGarrahan, and if the said court shall find that the said William McGarrahan is or was entitled in law or equity to the minerals or valuable substances on, in, or under said lands—

it is made the duty of the court to ascertain the value, and the United States is required to pay.

Senators who support this bill insist that McGarrahan shall have justice. I favor that; but I have heard no one defend this attempt to make the United States not only the warrantor, with the ordinary and usual liability of a warrantor, but to make the United States responsible for every trespass and every outrage committed upon the rights of McGarrahan. I have heard no one defend that; and to me the proposition is monstrous.

But that is not all. No one has undertaken to tell us what the amount of the liability which the United States assumes will aggregate? I have heard it said—my ignorance of the true facts may furnish an apology for what I am about to say—that the minerals removed from the land claimed to be embraced in the original grant, amount in value to twenty or thirty million dollars. I do not know how much it would be, and Senators who favor this bill have been exceedingly reluctant to tell us what they mean by it. The honorable Senator from Iowa, who seems to have been the nursing father of this bill, surely can tell us how much liability he expects to impose upon the United States as the consequence of this provision of the bill if it passes.

Mr. WILSON. In response to the Senator, I will state that I can not tell him how much in dollars and cents the Government will be required to pay in the event that McGarrahan should have his title sustained by the court as the first section of the bill provides; but I can say that, if he is entitled to the property, somebody ought to respond in damages to him for the despoilment of that property.

Mr. PALMER. I grant that.

Mr. WILSON. And that, inasmuch as he can not sue the real trespassers upon the property for the reason that the statute of limitations runs in that case, and the Government of the United States might try its remedy in that way, because the statute of limitations never does run against the Government, I think it but right, proper, and just to say that the amount of the damages which the court may find Mr. McGarrahan is entitled to ought not to be the controlling element here, but whether he is entitled to damages, and, if so, the whole volume of them to be determined by the same principle of law. That is a sufficient answer to the proposition.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, this bill proposes to establish a special rule of law in favor of this claimant, which applies to no other case. I recollect an instance within a hundred miles of where the honorable Senator from Iowa lives, of a farmer in Warren County, Ill., who lost a valuable tract of land under such circumstances as these; and when his entry was adjudged to be void he quietly pocketed his losses. No remedy was possible for him. This bill creates a special rule of liability in favor of McGarrahan. Why should it be done? What are his claims upon the American people that ten or twenty or thirty or forty million dollars shall be paid to him as the result of a special rule of liability created for his special purposes? I do not remember from the reading of the correspondence yesterday that he has any such devotion to the interests of the United States as would make it the duty of the Government to interfere in his behalf.

Special legislation is always dangerous. It would be reasonable to remove obstructions and allow this man to assert his claim by the rules of evidence which apply to every other case, such rules as I could invoke and the other 65,000,000 people in this country could invoke, but for William McGarrahan special rules of evidence are proposed to be established for determining the liability of the Government.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Illinois will allow me to suggest that the amount of damages ascertained by the court is not conclusive upon the Government. The Government can protect itself against any unlawful or excessive finding of damages by the court by the exercise of the power of appropriation, which is reserved in the bill.

Mr. PALMER. I grant that; but why place the Government or Congress in the position of questioning the finding of a court?

Mr. PUGH. That is precisely the position the Government has placed itself in in the matter of the French spoliation claims.

Mr. PALMER. It may be.

Mr. PUGH. The power is expressly reserved. The finding by the court of the amount of damages for those spoliations is not conclusive upon the Government, but is reserved to Congress for its own exercise in making the appropriation.

Mr. PALMER. I grant that the Government, being the trustee of a fund, may rightfully retain the ultimate determination through any of its Departments of the amount to be paid to an individual; but here is a special rule of liability created for the special benefit of a single individual, a rule that has no possible application for the benefit of any other citizen of the Republic. Then we are told that if the finding of the court shall be excessive, Congress may control that by way of appropriation. I am not willing to part with the present power of controlling that question.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me a moment?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know that I understand the Senator from Illinois in the statement that a rule is here made different from that which applies in other cases. As I understand this case, a court is created by ourselves for the settlement of claims against the Government by persons who think they have rights which ought to be enforced, and in the phraseology of the bill as I hear it read, it states that Mr. McGarrahan may recover what he is entitled to.

I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois whether he would not be in favor of any man recovering what he proves in a court he is entitled to under any rule, whether it is a new rule or an old rule, whether it applies to him alone or to anybody else? The phrase "entitled to" is a very powerful agency in that connection. I must say that I am in favor of allowing any American citizen to go into a court of our own creation and prove what he is entitled to and then give it to him. That is all there is in this bill to my mind. If he proves that he is entitled to anything, let him have it. If he does not, let him go hence without day.

Mr. PALMER. Under the law McGarrahan has no claim against the United States for anything specified in the fourth section of the bill; that is to say, McGarrahan as against the United States has no right to compensation for minerals or valuable substances removed from that land.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would not interrupt the Senator further, but he is stating that McGarrahan has no right to compensation. I am not going to question it, but would it be safe to assume that the court would not find the fact if he is not entitled to these rights? And if he is not entitled to them he will not get them.

Mr. PALMER. I will state to the Senator that if the bill did not make it the imperative duty of the court to allow it there would be something in that proposition. The bill does not refer the question to the court as to McGarrahan's rights.

Recurring to that portion of the bill which is the subject of immediate discussion between the Senator from Indiana and myself, I begin with section 4:

SEC. 4. That if the court shall adjudge in favor of said William McGarrahan as provided in section three, the United States shall indemnity the said William McGarrahan for such portion of land as may have been heretofore and may hereafter be disposed of by the United States within the aforesaid boundaries and for the use and occupation of the same, and for any mineral or valuable substance whatever extracted from said lands by any person or corporation other than the said William McGarrahan—

Now follows this clause:

And if the said court shall find that the said William McGarrahan is or was entitled in law or equity to the minerals or valuable substances on, in, or under said lands; and to that end it is hereby made the duty of said court to ascertain the value of such portion of said lands so disposed of, or to be disposed of, and of the use and occupation thereof, and of the minerals or other valuable substances so extracted, less the value of improvements, if any, made upon said lands and the cost of mining and extraction of said minerals and valuable substances; and said court shall render judgment against the United States and in favor of the said William McGarrahan for the amount so ascertained.

His right to these substances will depend upon the title he may establish. It is a remarkable fact that although the bill affirms the title of all those who have patents from the Government it authorizes an investigation as to the whole tract, and if the title is found to be in McGarrahan, as has been claimed, to the whole tract, then if he has a right against anybody for the removal of the valuable substances that right may be enforced against the United States.

I conclude what I have to say by asserting that nothing is more manifestly unjust than this provision of the bill. It is not necessary in order to secure to him his rights. He has his remedy against those who may have wronged him as others have. There is no instance that I know of where the United States has assumed the responsibilities of trespassers or of wrongdoers upon the land of a citizen. I know of no case of that sort, and it is not necessary. Indeed, this clause of the bill seems to be more valuable than the subject of the original controversy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The Secretary will read the title of the bill now under consideration.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having originated in the Senate, the question is, Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States?

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the second section of the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFEICER. The Secretary will read the second section.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That upon the trial of questions or issues arising on the hearing of said petition herein provided for the said court shall receive as evidence of said grant and boundaries thereof the original expediente presented by the said Gomez to the said Governor Manuel Micheltorena, and the diseño or map accompanying same, or a copy thereof, the depositions and other evidence produced before said Board of Land Commissioners, or copies thereof, and all depositions, proofs, testimony, or affidavits taken before any circuit or district court of the United States, in the State of California, or the clerks of such courts, or any commissioner appointed by said courts, or before any notary public, or before any committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, or of any map or record of any department of the Government of the United States, or of any act of Congress through which the aforesaid boundaries set forth in said expediente and the title to the said lands can be shown protected, and established, or of any oral or written testimony or deposition or copies thereof, concerning said record touching said grant from said Governor Manuel Micheltorena to said Vicente P. Gomez, or any patent or record of a patent for any portion of said lands in any of the departments of the Government signed by the President of the United States or by his private secretary authorized to sign land patents, or of any record of a patent having the signature of the President of the United States thereto, and other lawful evidence concerning the rights of the parties before the court.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose that before the vote is taken the message of the President will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Vermont that the message has once been read.

Mr. TELLER. It has been read.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it should be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator who has the unfinished business in charge if he will allow it to be informally laid aside until we can take the vote on the pending bill? It will take only a few moments.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the unfinished business will be laid aside and the Senate will proceed with the consideration of Senate bill 1958. The question is, Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the objections of the President? The vote will be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, as I intend to vote for the bill, I merely wish to say that I shall vote for it with the understanding, so far as I am concerned, that I shall not vote for any appropriation under it unless it be such as commends itself to my judgment. I do not regard the passage of the bill as binding upon me to vote for an appropriation, but the judgment of the court is to be simply persuasive upon me.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the reading of the message of the President of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. It has been read.

Mr. MORRILL. It has not been read to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message of the President of the United States transmitting his objections to the bill under consideration will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, the bill (S. 1958) entitled "An act to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes."

This bill came to me on the 20th instant, at a time when very many other bills were submitted for my consideration, and it has not been possible for me to make such an examination of the history of Mr. McGarrahan's claim as would be necessary to form an intelligent judgment as to its merits and just extent. It is quite possible that he has been wronged and that he has a claim for some reparation from the Government. I can not, however, think that this bill proceeds upon a just basis. It provides that Mr. McGarrahan shall file his claim as the assignee of Gomez in the Court of Private Land Claims for the lands described in the title; and that if the court establishes the grant to Gomez it shall be confirmed to McGarrahan.

No evidence that he is the assignee of Gomez is, I think, required by the bill, which assumes that fact, instead of submitting it to the court. If the claim is established it is provided, in substance, that all lands, part of said grant, which have been conveyed by the Government or are in the occupancy of actual settlers, or "upon which there are any smelting or reduction works, or the lands claimed in connection with such reduction or smelting works," shall be excepted from the patent which the Secretary of the Interior is directed to issue to McGarrahan. By this provision the title of the New Idria Mining Company, which has long contested with McGarrahan the title to a large part of this property, is established and that company is relieved from any responsibility to account for the profits made in mining. On the other hand, the United States waives all benefit of judicial proceedings which have resulted in its favor and gives Mr. McGarrahan an opportunity de novo to try all such questions; and the decision, if in his favor, is not only to restore to him all the lands yet undisposed of, but the United States assumes to pay him the value of the lands appropriated by others, and of their use for all these years, and to account to him for all profits that have been made by the New Idria Mining Company or anyone else in quicksilver or other mining.

This seems to me to be wholly inadmissible. The amount involved must be enormously large, though at present incapable of any accurate estimate. If the title of the New Idria Company has been established by final decrees of court, placing that title beyond question, and that company beyond any call to respond for use and profits, why should the Government of the United States, waiving in its behalf these decrees which would protect it also, assume a responsibility to account for the value of the lands and for their use and for the net value of minerals extracted by that company or others? It will be noticed in the quotation I have made from the act that this company is allowed to take all the land it may claim, but at the expense of the United States, not of Mr. McGarrahan.

The bill is so framed as to give full protection to the New Idria Mining Company to the full extent of its largest claim, while throwing upon the United States a responsibility which that company should bear if the title of Mr. McGarrahan is established.

The United States provided a proper tribunal for the trial of claims founded upon Mexican grants. This claim was there tried, and if fraud affected the judgment it is not, I think, chargeable to the Government—the contest was chiefly between rival claimants. In this state of the case it would seem that if the United States consents to open the litigation and to wipe out all judicial findings and decrees, that a less exacting measure of damages than that proposed in the bill should be agreed on.

It is not my purpose, as I have intimated, to express the opinion that Mr. McGarrahan is entitled to no relief. It seems to me, however, clear that he is not entitled to the relief given by this bill, and that it does not adequately protect the interests of the United States.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 23, 1892.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FELTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS]. By agreement that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and I vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired upon this question with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. If the Senator from Colorado were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when Mr. PASCO'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is absent at his home with the leave of the Senate. He is opposed to the bill, and is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. If my colleague were present he would vote in favor of sustaining the President's veto.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and also with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. If they were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY (after having voted in the negative). At the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I have agreed to pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], and therefore withdraw my vote. I should vote "nay" if the Senator from Georgia were here.

Mr. PLATT. My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent from the city and is paired generally with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I am not advised how my colleague would vote on this question.

Mr. HISCOCK. On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I understand he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], as stated by his colleague [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. TELLER. I wish to announce some pairs. The Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I believe all the other pairs have been announced.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Blodgett,	Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Teller,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Kyle,	Vance,
Butler,	George,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Call,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Washburn,
Carey,	Gordon,	Peffer,	Wilson.
Chandler,	Gorman,	Pettigrew,
Coke,	Hansbrough,	Power,
Dawes,	Hunton,	Pugh,

NAYS—18.

Allison,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Platt,	Walthall,
Dixon,	McMillan,	Sawyer,	White.
Dolph,	Mills,	Sherman,
Frye,	Morrill,	Stewart,

NOT VOTING—40.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Ransom,
Allen,	Daniel,	Irby,	Sanders,
Bate,	Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Shoup,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Squire,
Blackburn,	Felton,	Manderson,	Stanford,

Cockrell,	Hawley,	Proctor,	Warren,
Colquitt,	Hill,	Quay,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two-thirds not having voted in favor of the passage of the bill, it does not pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2625) to provide for the punishment of offenses on the high seas; and

A bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. L. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States in the House of Representatives, February 8, 1893, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], on which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I had yesterday concluded what I then wished to say upon the bill as it came from the other House, but I wish to make one additional brief observation.

It is said by the friends of the bill that Chief Justice Marshall said if you can tax you can destroy; that therefore you can not tax an instrumentality of State sovereignty; therefore the advocates of this measure say that wherever in the whole range of legislative power you have the constitutional right to tax it follows from that argument of the Chief Justice that you have the constitutional right to destroy.

But, Mr. President, this argument from power to right is an argument which confounds not only all constitutional and all legislative but all moral distinction. Wherever it is admitted, either in legislation or in the personal conduct of the individual, it is destructive of all restraint and of all moral responsibility. The Supreme Court of the United States, like all other judicial tribunals, has the power to decide a cause wrong, and no human being can interfere with it; and therefore, according to this argument, wherever a particular fancied good might be accomplished, the judges themselves may recognize in their judicial conduct the power to make a decision clearly against law.

The power to pass just laws involves the power to pass unjust laws; and therefore, according to this doctrine, which the Chief Justice interposed as a shield against the destruction of the sovereignty of the Union by the States, we may sweep out of existence by one measure the entire sovereignty of the States. This confounding of power and right is a confounding of all moral distinctions, and opening the door to every exercise of a usurped legislative authority which can be supposed.

I undertook to put some illustrations of the degree to which the argument of the advocates of this bill would lead them in legislation if we admit their premises. But you can not find a better or a clearer illustration than the bill itself affords. Up to a late hour yesterday afternoon, the bill as it passed the House of Representatives contained a provision under which every farmer who let a farm at halves or who hired a farm at halves, every laborer who took a portion of the crop he raised and contracted for one in advance for his pay, was to be a criminal and to be sent to the penitentiary.

The Senator from Minnesota gave notice of an amendment, which I think was adopted, to the bill during that difficulty on a suggestion which had been made to him in private. Of course, the framers of the bill did not intend that. Of course, the advocates of the bill on this floor did not intend that. It is one of those inadvertencies which in framing a new and comprehensive measure are almost always found in the work of the original framers, and one of those things which make the system of debate in the Senate without restraint so valuable to the country.

But the fact remains that these gentlemen have framed and are now advocating and want us to pass a bill which, if it can be defended at all on constitutional principles, must be defended by an assertion that if in any time of delusion or folly it shall seem fit to make an attack on the control of real estate by the owners of the real estate of this country, under any socialistic or other wild notions which may prevail, it is within the constitutional power of the Congress of the United States to turn into a criminal an old farmer who lets to his eldest son the farm where they both dwell and agrees that he and the old woman shall have half of the crop for the use of the land, or a planter who allows a colored laborer to make a crop of cotton on a few acres of his land and agrees that he shall have a third or a half of the crop that he makes; and that because they think it is desirable in some way to secure the prices of the cotton and the wheat crop and the other farm crops of this country from speculators.

Mr. President, one of the honorable Senators yesterday called my attention to an article on Federal taxation of lotteries by Judge Cooley, a very eminent writer on jurisprudence, and a very eminent public officer for whom I, as I am sure all other Senators who do me the honor to listen to me, have the profoundest respect, and I was asked whether I could agree with the doctrine in that article. I have read it again carefully, and I desire to say that I dissent from the proposition of that honorable jurist in toto, from beginning to end.

I do not believe the mere establishment of a lottery in the State of Louisiana and the sale of its tickets there, not sold directly or indirectly out of that State, can be reached by any process outside of the State. We may prohibit, as we have prohibited, their advertisements or their tickets passing through the mails; we may prohibit the sale by an agency of that institution of an interest in it or a ticket in it to a citizen of any other part of the United States. But the lottery on the soil of Louisiana, operating solely upon the citizens of Louisiana, is just as much under the control of Louisiana as the drinking shop in the streets of Boston is under the control of Massachusetts. If Congress has the legislative responsibility over the one it has the legislative responsibility over the other.

I wish to add a sentence from Judge Cooley's article which lies at the foundation of his argument. Judge Cooley is advocating the power of Congress to tax out of existence the Louisiana lottery, supposing that the State of Louisiana proposed to maintain and permit it. This is the sentence which is the foundation of his whole argument. If it be not true the argument fails:

> The motives of those who make our laws—

> if the laws themselves appear upon their face to be within the constitutional power of the law-making body, they are not to be inquired into by dissatisfied parties in the courts, but must conclusively be presumed to have been constitutional and to have had regard to the general good of the people.

Against that proposition I wish to place my most emphatic dissent. I affirm, on the contrary, that there is no presumption, conclusive or otherwise, which prevents the court from declaring that a law, which is in fact passed for an unconstitutional purpose, whatever it may declare on its face, a law which is in fact an usurpation, although Congress may say they are doing it within the exercise of their legitimate authority, or a law which is in fact an oppression, although Congress may say it is not intended to oppress, shall not be set aside upon the fact and not upon the form; and the Supreme Court of the United States have declared that proposition forty times. When they fail to act upon it, the Supreme Court of the United States, as a tribunal empowered to keep the State and the Nation each within its appointed jurisdiction, has become worthless, and may as well be abolished.

How as honest men or as constitutional legislators can we say that this great domain of regulating the private morals or the penal codes of the forty-four States of this country is open to us, so far at least as we can regulate it by making certain actions lawful only on condition that a large and prohibitory tax is paid? If that be within our power in the constitutional sense of the word, it is a part of our constitutional duty; and you can not answer the petition of a temperance party in New England; you can not answer the petition of anybody who wishes to suppress idleness or vagrancy or to punish spendthrifts; you can not answer the petition of any socialist or Populist reformer who demands that all real estate shall go again into the common treasury when the occupant of it dies, or that no man shall leave to his heirs a property of over $1,000, or that no man shall enjoy an income of over $1,000, by the answer that the people of the United States have not committed that question under the Constitution to you. There is a great distinction between constitutional power and constitutional right I agree, but there is not any distinction whatever where a constitutional power exists to do what is right and the constitutional duty to do it.

Mr. President, I wish to make a few observations upon the amendment, or the measure in the nature of an amendment, which is presented to the Senate by the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I wish, however, before I do that, to read one very simple proposition, a truism, which is like reading a part of the multiplication table to the constitutional lawyers who listen to me. But it seems to me that just now it becomes necessary to put some of our friends in mind of it. This is a proposition from the very able work known as Miller on the Constitution of the United States. It consists of lectures on the Constitution by that venerable jurist, delivered shortly before the close of his life. In speaking of the case of The Western Union Telegraph Company vs. Texas, where the court goes into the question of the State's right to levy a tax on what is an instrumentality of national commerce, Judge Miller utters the following sentence:

> It has always been conceded in the discussions in the Supreme Court that with this great body of commerce, consisting of trade between citizens of the same State, Congress could not interfere, and that the Constitution did not affect the power of the State to regulate and control it.

I suppose we all agree to that fundamental proposition to start with in this discussion.

My mind is so constituted that although I have carefully listened to in large part and read entirely the elaborate argument of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I have been able to discover no logical connection between his premises and his conclusions. I have been able to discover no logical connection between the authorities he cites and the principles he tries to establish. What are the cases?

The Senator from Mississippi starts by saying that if a number of gentlemen associate themselves to buy or to sell cotton, or wheat, or pork, or other agricultural products raised, produced, transported, delivered within the limits of a single State, the bargain being between citizens of the same State and contemplating no delivery or transportation outside of its limits, the law of the contract and the law of the payment being the lex loci contractus, and further agree that nobody shall take part in this class of contracts with them in a particular place who does not conform to certain rules, this traffic has an indirect and injurious effect upon the prices of the commodities they deal with when those commodities are sold to go out of the State or out of the country, and therefore Congress may regulate them.

Now, that is his constitutional proposition. How does he undertake to support it? He undertakes to support it by citing the bridge cases and the cases regulating the passage of vessels or vehicles over the great waterways of international or interstate commerce.

Mr. President, it is unnecessary to point out how all those cases arise. In the nature of the case there is a certain conflict, or at any rate a certain adjustment made necessary when the different classes of commerce are using the same way or traveling over the same spot. The smallest creek where the tide ebbs and flows and where a scow drawing two or three feet of water can be pushed by poles by a boatman may be used to transport freight from one State to another. It may be that it is not used once in three years or once in ten years for any such purpose.

But there may cross that navigable way a great railroad, leading into Chicago or New York or Boston or St. Louis, over which a million passengers pass in the course of a month. Of course it would be absurd to say that there is not some authority somewhere which shall determine how much this vast State commerce which crosses the water on the bridge shall be permitted to interfere with the interstate commerce, so insignificant, as I have described. Accordingly the Supreme Court of the United States has very naturally and very justly said that until Congress has acted in the first place the States may make the law under which the State commerce is to pass those points of crossing. That is the first proposition.

The second proposition is that whenever Congress interferes its power to regulate interstate and international commerce is paramount; therefore if the State authorized a bridge and Congress says the bridge must come down, down it must come.

In the third place, Congress may in its regulation of international or interstate commerce declare just how much shall be allowed for the State convenience, which may be a million times that of the international or interstate convenience, and therefore when Congress has said that a bridge at a certain height shall be a nuisance and a bridge at a certain other height shall be no nuisance, the courts will execute the will of Congress, and everybody must submit to it.

Mr. President, how could we live on any other theory than that? Every time a steam ferryboat crosses the East River from one point in the State of New York to another, carrying the people who have been doing business in the city in daytime over the river to sleep, it may meet an ocean steamer on its way out or its way in, and if it did not turn out it would be an obstruction in the path of the ocean commerce. Of course it is proper for Congress to regulate, if it see fit, the action of those vessels.

Now, the Senator from Mississippi undertakes to take that principle, so clear, so reasonable, so essential, and to say that it follows from it that whenever there is an indirect, shadowy, disputable, questionable effect of certain habits of State commerce on commodities which are the subjects of national or interstate commerce, in the first place, the declaration by Congress, whatever the fact may be, is conclusive; and, in the next place, that Congress gets the whole of that matter within the sphere of its jurisdiction.

I can not see, as I said before, any relation whatever between these two propositions. One is physical, direct, certain. The other is the remote, incidental, disputable relation; and no argument can be made from one to the other.

Is it any the less true in determining our powers of constitutional legislation than it is true in all the other transactions of life that the proximate and not the remote cause is to be looked at? If Congress is to go into the domain of remote and incidental causes, as I said in speaking of the other branch of this subject, there is not a transaction of human life that can not be brought within our dominion. If gambling in cotton or wheat in New Orleans or New York belonging to the State affect the price of those articles in the London or Liverpool market, does not the existence of a habit of idleness or intemperance in the raiser of those articles, does not the manner in which the farmer plants his crop, does not the time when the planter sows his cotton, does not his choice of the soil, does not his hiring of his laborers, does not everything which relates to the production or taking to market or the sale of that crop in the State by an even more direct and certain relation affect the price?

Suppose there were a lot of farmers in the State of Iowa who supplied New England with wheat—a clear and unquestioned transaction of interstate commerce. Suppose the Massachusetts farmers undertake to supply themselves and their cattle with the necessary food by substituting Indian corn or rye in all cases, is not the production of rye or Indian corn by Massachusetts or Maine very clearly an operation which diminishes the supply or the demand for the Iowa wheat?

It is no answer to me on the part of the honorable Senator to say that one of these transactions is gambling or immoral and that the other transaction is healthy trade or agriculture or industry. That is not the point. The point is to what the constitutional power of Congress extends, not what Congress may think right or wrong or wise when it is exercising it. If the Senator from Mississippi be right in saying that a habit of gambling in cotton diminishes the fair and honest price in interstate commerce of the cotton raised and sold for that purpose, he must by a still more inevitable logic admit that the raising by State agriculture, the selling in the State something which will supply that market and drive the article into interstate commerce altogether, is equally effective, and therefore equally within the constitutional power of Congress, and the only question then is whether in a particular case we shall exercise it.

I put to the honorable Senator the other day the question whether there were any transactions which in his judgment were obstacles to interstate or international commerce which Congress had a right to treat and legislate for as such obstacles which would not be equally held to be obstacles by the court without such legislation, and he wanted the Senate to look at the RECORD and see if he had not answered my question. With other Senators I have accepted his invitation. I have looked at the RECORD, but I find that he answers me by citing the bridge cases and cases of physical obstruction. The Senator was not debating that class of cases at that moment, and I was not thinking of them at that moment. I was putting a question to the Senator (which he failed to answer, and which I submit he can not answer) relating to immoral contracts, and I——

Mr. GRAY. Will it interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts if I remind him that in the bridge cases, and notably the Wheeling bridge case, the structure was declared by the court to be an obstruction to commerce before Congress had acted upon the subject at all?

Mr. HOAR. That is a very important suggestion.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me just one word?

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish the sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HOAR. I am afraid I shall forget the tail of the sentence the head of which has already gone through the door.

Mr. GEORGE. I just want to put in one word, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. HOAR. I would rather finish the sentence, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to say that my question relates to immoral contracts, contracts either in restraint of trade or establishing monopolies or mingling with the honest commercial transactions some taint of immorality or wrongdoing or fraud. The Senator says this case comes within that class. If it does not come within that class I deny that Congress has a right to get power over it by simply saying that it does. If it does come within that class it will be prohibited by the authority of the court as an obstruction against commerce. No case can be found and no case can be supposed by the ingenuity of the honorable Senator where that will not be true. Now, I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. The remark I desired to make was responsive to the statement made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided in the Wheeling bridge case, independent of any act of Congress, that the Wheeling bridge was an obstruction of commerce. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and particularly of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that in the criticism upon my speech delivered six months ago made by the learned Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], the force of the precedent of that case as claimed by me was attempted to be broken by a statement on the part of the Senator from Wisconsin that Congress had acted prior to the first decision made by the Supreme Court holding the bridge to be a nuisance, and that the subsequent act which legalized the bridge was nothing more than a repeal of a former act by Congress. I want both the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Massachusetts to understand that that was the position taken by the Senator from Wisconsin with a view of breaking the force of the precedent. That, I believe, also is the fact.

Mr. HOAR. When President Lincoln wrote his famous letter of instructions to Gen. Hooker he put in one sentence which I think is quite applicable to our habit of debate in the Senate, and that is, "When you are crossing a river do not let the head of your army get across on one side and have the rear on the other, so that you will be like an ox half way over the fence, where you can not either hook with your horns or kick with your heels." [Laughter.] The Senator from Mississippi is very much in the habit of taking my humble propositions when they are just about half way over the fence and making his attack at that time. I should like to get the ox over, if he will permit me.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I was correcting a statement made by the Senator from Delaware which was accepted by the Senator from Massachusetts as correct. That is all I attempted to do.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Mississippi also says that in Gibbons vs. Ogden it was held, and that is his other great constitutional authority, that the power to regulate foreign or interstate commerce was with Congress, and in Sinnet vs. Davenport, 22 Howard, it was said a statute of a State in conflict with an act of Congress regulating such commerce is void, and therefore—these are his premises—he goes on to say that a contract to deliver an article of purely domestic production by a citizen of a State to a citizen of the same State, made and to be performed in the same State, a transaction confessedly regulated and controlled by the law of the State, the transaction relating to an article which if it be in existence so far as any man can know relates to an article which never will be subject of foreign or domestic commerce at all, and indeed may never be in existence at all, may be regulated by national law, because the existence of such contracts has in some way an effect upon the prices of other articles of the same kind which are or may be subject of foreign or interstate commerce.

Why, Mr. President, I wish to repeat once more, if this proposition can stand, it is true that every bargain or sale in the whole domain of domestic commerce in any State may be regulated by Congress if it have an injurious effect upon the prices of articles of the same class which are sold from one State to another. Is there a pound of beef raised in Iowa, sold in Iowa, consumed in Iowa, the sale and consumption of which has not its effect upon the entire beef market of the world? Is there a bushel of Indian corn raised in Massachusetts and eaten or fed to his cattle by the farmer who raises it which does not just so much save the necessity of the purchase by that farmer of a bushel of Western wheat or rye?

If the butter supply of New York give out to-morrow New York must go for her butter to Canada or to other American States, and therefore according to this logic Congress may regulate and control the sale or the raising of domestic butter in every State of the Union. According to the Senator's understanding this business of dealing in options or futures is a gambling which consists of a mere betting upon the future price which will rule domestic transactions. This immorality, he says, has in some way a demoralizing effect upon persons who are engaged in interstate or international commerce of the same articles. By the same logic I suppose idle habits diminish the production greatly within the States of articles which may become the subject of international commerce, and so Congress may pass laws for the encouragement of industry or suppression of idleness.

Is not the consumption in Iowa of flour raised in Iowa or of beef or of pork raised in Iowa, is not the consumption by factories in Georgia or Alabama of iron or of cotton raised in those States a direct subtraction from the quantity which otherwise they must send abroad for market? So I suppose, according to my friend's constitutional theories, it is a matter of pure discretion how far Congress shall regulate the production of cotton or iron within those States. The Senator thinks the taxing out of existence these practices, as proposed by the original bill, is not only unconstitutional, but extremely shocking to his State's rights theories. But if they so far are matters affecting foreign or interstate commerce, and we have a right to suppress or regulate them, then certainly we have a right to suppress or regulate by every instrumentality which the Constitution has put in our hands, as was expressly decided in Veazie vs. Fenno.

No, Mr. President, thin as is the veil which conceals the usurpation proposed by this bill, the usurpation of the amendment is thinner and more transparent still. The statute of the last Congress known as the antitrust law, is effectual to deal with the whole subject so far as it is within the national jurisdiction. It answers and provides for every object which the Senator from Mississippi has stated so far as the contracts relate to the commerce which is subjected to our authority. The Legislatures of three or four States, agricultural States, States whose farmers control and always have controlled and always will control their legislation, can supply everything that is necessary to suppress anything immoral or a public injury to these contracts.

These Legislatures, every one of them, are controlled by their agricultural interests, and they will listen carefully to the voice of their farmers, and they will supplement that legislation by dealing with all gambling in options or futures in six weeks, if the Senators are right. There is not, in my judgment, the slightest difficulty or the slightest necessity which should tempt us to that gross and dangerous usurpation.

Mr. President, does any Senator believe that if it had been supposed that this doctrine was contained in the grant of legislative powers by the Constitution, it would have received not merely the vote of nine States, but the vote of nine citizens? In my humble opinion you could not have found in the year 1787 nine intelligent men on the continent of America who would have voted for the adoption of the Constitution of the United States if they believed that the doctrine of this bill or this amendment was found in it.

I ask the Secretary to read the first three sections of the trust law of the last Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SECTION 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the habit of forging private notes or State bonds begets a dexterity and a criminal habit which makes the forgery of United States bonds or notes very easy; and the existence of such criminals, rendered dexterous by such practices, makes the value of a Government bond or a Government note or greenback to its holder much less. So I suppose, according to the Senator's logic, we may pass a law punishing the forgery of State securities, and make all counterfeiting penal by act of Congress. Is the foreign commerce of a criminal community as prosperous as that of a moral or a religious community? Let us at once provide for moral lectures and religious instruction, if we can do it without an establishment of religion.

I have not thoroughly mastered the evidence which was given before the Committee on the Judiciary last summer or the statistics upon which the Senator from Mississippi relies. But I confess I am unable to see two things. He says that these operations diminish the price of the articles. I am myself a little doubtful whether the mere diminution of the price of the necessaries of life to the people of the United States is an unmixed evil, and without trenching on the rather tempting domain of discussion which belongs to the tariff, I am a little surprised at finding the Senators who agree with the Senator from Mississippi taking that view. But, in the next place, I can not quite understand how this dealing in futures, optional or not, tends to diminish the legitimate price of the article. Suppose our honored and beloved friend from California [Mr. STANFORD], who is not now in his seat, shall get a race horse which will trot a mile in two minutes, which I believe is a little less than the present record. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] will correct me if I am mistaken.

Mr. VANCE. Two six and a quarter is the present record of fastest time.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend from California offers his race horse for sale for $100,000. I can not exactly understand how it lowers the price of that horse if a hundred men agree with a hundred others that they will get that horse and deliver it each to the other one of the hundred for the sum of $100,000 within three months.

Mr. PLATT. Or any other time.

Mr. HOAR. Or any other time, or any other sum. How the creating a demand, which, whether there is an actual delivery of the article contracted for or not, at least authorizes men to discharge contracts by delivering the article, diminishes the price of that article, my poor Yankee brain can not comprehend. If there be 8,000,000 bales of cotton held by the farmers of the cotton States, the ruling price of which to-day is 8 cents a pound, if that be a reasonable supposition, or 9 cents, and the farmers want to get 9, and as much more as they can when they get ready to put that crop into market, I do not suppose for a thousand men a hundred times to agree that they will deliver tenfold that quantity of cotton to the same number of other men within the next three months at that price is going to make it likely that the price will be lowered.

I suppose that every one of these dealers in futures who has agreed to deliver so much cotton or wheat at a certain price, whether he ever expects to deliver it or not, has the legal right to discharge himself by so doing to the person with whom he contracts. Therefore, how can the price go down very largely unless it goes down on the operation of some other and very different cause than the cause that these fictitious contracts not to be answered and complied with in specie have been made?

The Senator from Mississippi also says that the cost of the brokerage in all these gambling and fictitious sales is paid for out of the cotton crop. You might as well say that every bet at a horse race is paid by the owner of the horse.

Now, this rule causa proxima et remota as applicable to this very subject has been before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. De Witt, 9 Wallace, where the defendant was indicted under a statute which made it a misdemeanor to mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oil except in certain quantities. It was attempted to sustain that law on the ground that the sale of these illuminating oils hindered the sale of other oils which were subject to tax, and that to prohibit them increased the sale of the oils from which the Government derived a revenue. The court say:

This consequence is too remote and too uncertain to warrant us in saying that the prohibition is an appropriate and plainly adapted means for carrying into execution the power of laying and collecting taxes.

In other words, that the means must be appropriate and plainly adapted to carry into execution the power which is regularly conferred.

I have but one other observation to make on the bill at this time. We are told that the farmers of the country demand this measure, and that any party or any public man that shall stand in its way will somehow feel the weight of their displeasure. I do not believe it. Incredulus odi. I disbelieve and hate the notion that the men who struck their axes into the forests of this continent, who subdued the wild beast and the savage, who have laid deep below the frost the foundations of forty-four States, who established this Constitution, with its imperial national powers and its vigorous life pervading every locality, have left successors who can not protect themselves against a few dozen brokers in New York and New Orleans without overthrowing the whole thing and pulling the mighty structure down about our ears.

I do not believe that the whole yeomanry of America have quite yet got into the Farmers' Alliances or are represented in Populist platforms; and I think those of them who have got there are not going to stay there very long. There is still some courage left in the planters of Mississippi and some love of constitutional liberty protected by law in the farmers of Ohio.

The farmers of this country are the class of our citizens most likely to be affected injuriously either by an unconstitutional extension of the taxing power of Congress or by the establishment of the principle that Congress, under the guise of the taxing power, may regulate all their concerns that have hitherto been left to State jurisdiction. There is no class of our fellow-citizens whose opinion is entitled to more respect than the farmers. There is no interest in the Republic which should be more zealously guarded in the making of laws than the interests of agriculture. There are no producers to whom a constant, steady, and safe market is more indispensable than those who till the soil. While all this is true, it is also true that there is no class of American citizens more interested in the securities which the Constitution throws around the exercise of the taxing power or the rights of the States or localities or more interested against unconstitutional legislation in any guise whatever. And if they come frenzied and clamoring for legislation in their fancied interest which is to overthrow these securities I will appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober. I will appeal from the farmer of the present to the farmer of the future and the farmer of the past.

There is no class whom it is less safe to defraud or juggle with. I do not think any person who is trusted with legislative responsibilities or who has for any reason or in any capacity the ear of the farmers of the United States is likely to find it for his advantage in the long run to advocate measures which are sure either to be ineffective or to attempt to cure existing evils by laws which are sure to be pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. The legislation of a half a dozen of the States can easily put an end to all gambling in the products of the soil whenever they see fit.

I believe that every one of these States would obey the expressed will of their farmers in this particular. But to assert the power by Congress to prohibit, under the pretense of a tax, contracts which are made and to be executed in particular States and are purely within the jurisdiction of State legislation, I think would be fraught with infinite mischief if it could be accomplished, and that its accomplishment will be impossible so long as the Supreme Court of the United States retains its authority.

Mr. PLATT obtained the floor.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I understand that the Senator from Delaware desires me to yield to him for a moment, and I do so.

Mr. GRAY. I will claim the indulgence of the Senate for only a moment, in order that I may reply to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in what he assumed to be a correction of an interrogatory remark I made during the progress of the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the Wheeling bridge case. I sent for the books that I might speak by the book. I find, although I had not looked at the cases for a great while, that I was quite right when I said that notably in one instance of a bridge it was declared by the court to be an obstruction to commerce before Congress acted upon the subject. The Senator from Massachusetts said that the Senator from Mississippi had cited a case in which Congress had passed upon the matter of fact as to whether the bridge was an obstruction to commerce, and in that case the court had declared the bridge a nuisance and an obstruction to commerce before any act of Congress had been passed.

I hold in my hand 13 Howard's Reports; and in the case of the State of Pennsylvania vs. The Wheeling Bridge Company, which is a continuation of proceedings that are reported in 9 Howard and again in 11 Howard, I find that the court there declared at the suit of the State of Pennsylvania that the bridge authorized by the Legislature of Virginia was a nuisance, inasmuch as it was an obstruction to the navigation of the Ohio River, and ordered it to be abated as such, giving the defendants a time within which they must either raise the bridge so that vessels of a certain character could go under it or the court would take further order. Afterwards in 18 Howard I find an application to the court that an order of sequestration should be made to carry into effect the judgment of the court declaring the bridge a nuisance, and in that case the court say that inasmuch as since the adjudication of the last case Congress had passed a law declaring the bridge to be a lawful structure they refuse to proceed any further.

That, I believe, is the correct history of the Wheeling bridge matter as it exists in our reports. Perhaps it is not very important, but inasmuch as the Senator from Mississippi, who is generally correct in such matters, and who stated it somewhat hesitatingly, I admit, supposed that I had misstated the situation, I thought it due to him and myself to make this correction.

Mr. GEORGE. I made the statement I did simply to show that the opponents of the bill were at cross-purposes in reference to that particular case, and I stated what I did upon the authority of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. I now read from his speech in criticism of my argument upon that case:

> Moreover, the first judgment—

That is, the first judgment of the Supreme Court declaring the bridge to be a nuisance. I hope the Senator from Delaware will pay attention to the language of the Senator from Wisconsin, who said:

> Moreover, the first judgment had gone upon the ground that a former act of Congress regulating the navigation of the Ohio River was violated by the bridge, which otherwise would have been lawful. This illegality which Congress created, Congress removed, and in the exercise of incontestable authority, further regulated navigation by making it necessary for the largest steam vessels to lower the tops of their smokestacks in order to pass it.

So I am borne out in the extract which I have read by what the Senator from Wisconsin stated, and that was the point of my interruption.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. PLATT. Provided it does not take time.

Mr. VEST. I shall occupy but a minute.

The proposition first advanced by Judge Cooley—I say first advanced by a lawyer of his eminence in the review—startled the entire legal profession throughout the United States. It was answered afterward so successfully by David A. Wells that, for one, I assumed that the question had been settled, and had passed even from the domain of legal argument. Mr. Wells, in his article, which I have but will not read to the Senate, put this question to Judge Cooley, which was never answered and, in my judgment, never will be successfully: "If," he said to this eminent jurist, "your contention be correct that the Congress of the United States can tax out of existence any lottery within any State, what prevents the Congress of the United States from taxing out of existence in any State saloons, opium joints, brothels, and other institutions which they deem deleterious to the public morals?"

If it be answered that Congress has this power, then I should be obliged to any Senator present to tell me what police power is left to the States. If it be answered that Congress has not this power in regard to saloons, opium joints, brothels, and other immoral institutions, then I ask any Senator here to point out the difference between applying the taxing power and police power to a lottery and applying them to a saloon, an opium joint, or a brothel. Until these propositions are answered I submit to intelligent lawyers that this question has passed out of the domain of legitimate argument.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I did not think that I should take part in this discussion for several reasons. I did not believe it possible for the United States Senate to entertain the principle which underlies this bill. Besides, this matter has been so well discussed, so thoroughly presented to the Senate, that it seems like a work of supererogation to continue the argument. I despair of saying anything new, as I despair of finding language to express my opinion of the proposed legislation.

I believe the principle which is contended for by the advocates of this bill, whether represented by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] or the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], is the most dangerous principle to the Republic and to the States, which within my experience in the Senate has ever been announced. I will go further. I believe if the principle announced here is adopted and sustained by the Supreme Court that from that day we may date the decline and ruin of the Republic.

There is another reason why I am tempted to make a few observations upon this bill. I have received a telegram from Connecticut in the following words:

> The antioption bill now pending in the United States Senate will, if it becomes a law, tend to greatly advance the agricultural and legitimate business interests of our country by preventing speculations and gambling in the staple products of life: Therefore,
> Resolved, That the Connecticut farmers in convention assembled, earnestly desiring the enactment of the bill into a law, request of Senators PLATT and HAWLEY that they support this bill by their vote and influence.

Mr. President, I respect the farmers of the State of Connecticut. I understand this resolution was passed, not without opposition, however, in that convention, and that many of the clearest and most level-headed of the farmers of Connecticut ranged themselves in opposition to it; that it was passed without much opportunity for discussion; that, as the phrase is, it was "railroaded" through the convention. As I said, however, I respect the farmers of the State of Connecticut. I respect them too much to believe that they expect me to vote for a measure which I believe to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States, in subversion of the rights of the States, and for a principle which, if carried out to its logical conclusion, will leave us without self-governing States. I have that confidence in the farmers of the State of Connecticut, and therefore I feel it my duty to tell them, as well as the Senate, some of the reasons why I shall not vote for this bill.

The first question which I must ask myself when any measure comes up for consideration is, whether Congress has the constitutional power to pass that measure. I know of no other rule by which a Senator can conscientiously and honestly discharge his duty in the Senate Chamber. We are here sworn to support the Constitution of the United States. Is that an idle oath? Is it taken as a mere matter of form, or is it something binding as well upon our conscience as upon our judgment? To my mind that is a question which I must first answer; and if, when a bill is presented for my action, I am obliged, after careful deliberation, to answer that I can not support the bill without, in my opinion, violating the constitutional powers of Congress, I must vote against it.

When any considerable body of men in my State desire me to vote for a measure, it is my duty to carefully consider that measure so that I may not come hastily to a conclusion in opposition to it; but I trust that there has been given me courage, if I believe a bill to be unconstitutional or an unlawful or illegitimate exercise of the constitutional powers of Congress, to vote against it even if every member of every class in my State requested me to vote for it; and I have confidence enough in my constituents to believe that they would respect my judgment and honor my conclusion.

Mr. President, this bill is defended only upon two grounds when we come to consider whether we have the constitutional power to pass it. The one is, that it may be passed under the taxing power of Congress, and the other is, that it may be passed under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States. To my mind, there is not a shadow of reason to support either of those contentions.

I am by no means a strict constructionist of the Constitution. My whole education, my whole experience in life, the entire tendency of my mind has been toward a liberal construction of the Constitution. Whatever has been necessary to national existence or national advancement, I have tried to find the power for in the Constitution. I have even gone to a length which I know that my friends on the other side of the Chamber would deem going too far; but when it comes to saying that under the clause of the Constitution which permits the use of the taxing power, or the clause of the Constitution which is called the commerce clause, we may invade the States and prohibit or destroy any business or occupation in those States, I must draw the line.

I have never been much of a State-rights man in the popular acceptation of the term, and yet I believe that within the domain of the powers which belong to the States they are as sovereign as the Nation is within the domain of the powers which belong to the General Government, and I believe that the perpetuity of this Republic is to depend upon an observance of the powers which are granted to Congress in the Constitution, and reserved to the States because not therein granted to Congress.

Have we, then, the power to pass this proposed legislation under the taxing clause of the Constitution? It seems to me like arguing a self-evident proposition to prove we have not. I venture to say that no man who was in that Federal convention ever contemplated the day when a claim like this would be made. I venture to say that up to within recent years no man who ever read the Constitution ever supposed that human ingenuity would discover and advocate such a claim as this. It seems to me that we must go back to first principles in the discussion of this case.

The power given to Congress by the Constitution is to "lay and collect taxes," and as the rules of the Public Printing Office do not allow me to italicize words in the RECORD, I wish to lay emphasis upon the word "taxes." They are what Congress is authorized to lay and collect—not authorized to lay penalties, not authorized to confiscate; but Congress is authorized to lay taxes, and nothing else.

What then a tax really is becomes a most important inquiry. What is the meaning of the word? I undertake to say that by no definition ever given of a tax in dictionaries, common or legal, or in decisions of courts in this country, or in the discussion of writers on political economy, has it ever been held that anything can be a "tax" which does not contemplate the raising of revenue for the purpose of government. To call that a tax which is not intended to and which can not raise money is a misnomer in literature, in language, and in law.

I want to elaborate this thought for a moment. I take Webster's Dictionary. Webster defines the word "tax" as a noun as follows:

A charge, especially a pecuniary burden, which is imposed by authority, as a levy of any kind upon property for the support of government.

He defines the verb as follows:

To subject to paying a tax or taxes; to impose or assess upon; to lay a burden upon; especially to exact money for the support of government.

When you take the whole of a thing do you lay a charge upon it? When you prohibit a business, do you lay a charge or a burden upon it? When you destroy it, do you levy a contribution upon it?

I go to another dictionary, the Century Dictionary:

The general meaning of the word is a "charge" or "burden." Specifically an "enforced proportional contribution levied on persons, property, and income, either by the government of the State for the support of the government, and for all its public or governmental needs, or by local authority for general municipal purposes."

These are the two great dictionaries of the country. I turn to Bouvier's Law Dictionary, and I find a tax defined as—

A contribution imposed by government on individuals for the service of the State.

Cooley on Taxation says:

Taxes are the enforced proportional contributions from persons and property levied by the State by virtue of its sovereignty for the support of government and for all public needs. The State demands and receives them from the subjects of taxation within its jurisdiction, that it may be enabled to carry into effect its mandates and perform its manifold purposes; and the citizen pays from his property the portion demanded in order that by means thereof he may be secured in the benefits of organization.

Blackwell, in his Treatise on Tax Titles, says:

Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by legislative power of the State on persons and property,

For what? To destroy things? To prohibit things? To raise the price of products to the farmers? No; but—to raise money for public purposes.

Desty, a recent writer and accepted authority on taxation, in the opening of his work, defining a tax, lays down this concise and comprehensive definition, and supports it by reference to probably fifty decided cases:

In its most comprehensive sense, a tax is a burden or charge imposed by legislative authority upon persons or property within the territorial jurisdiction of the power which imposes it, to raise money for public uses, or to accomplish some governmental end, or to defray the necessary expenses in administering the Government. Taxes are the enforced proportional contributions, and within constitutional limits the arbitrary exactions of the Government for its support and use, taken from the substance of the people, and to the making and enforcing of which their assent individually is not required. In a more restricted sense, they are revenue collected from the people for objects in which they are interested, and contributed for things useful and conducive to their welfare.

Perhaps no better definition of a tax was ever given than was given by Mr. Justice Field, of the Supreme Court of the United States, when chief justice of the Supreme Court of California, concise, comprehensive, incisive, taken from the case of Perry vs. Washburn, 20 California. He defines a tax thus:

A tax is a charge upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes.

Almost equally good is the definition given by Judge Agnew in Hilbish vs. Catherman, 64 Pennsylvania State Reports, 154:

What are taxes but the revenue collected from the people for objects in which they are interested—the contributions of the people for things useful and conducive to their welfare?

Burroughs on Taxation, under the head of "Foundation of Taxing Power," says:

Government implies functionaries and expenditures. How shall these be maintained? Evidently by the contributions of all, for all are interested. Government may, therefore, rightfully claim a share of all that labor and capital have created. The aggregate of all sums collected is called revenue; the system by which it is collected is called taxation. The basis of all taxation is political necessity; without taxes there can be no revenue; without revenue there can be no regular government. In theory, the taxpayer receives a compensation for the taxes paid in protection the government affords; but the foundation of the taxing power is political necessity. Taxes are sacrifices made for the public good.

Under the head of "Taxes: What and by Whom Imposed," he says:

Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes, or to accomplish some governmental end.

Every one of these definitions is decisive of this contention.

Bearing in mind what a tax is, that it is not a scheme for taking into the possession of the Government the whole of a man's property, that it is not a scheme for the prohibition of any particular occupation which a man may choose to pursue, but that it is the proportional contribution of the citizens of the country for the need of the Government, that it is a charge laid upon persons or property to raise money for the need of the Government, what is there left for this contention to stand upon?

It is said indeed that the limitation of the taxing power has no boundaries, that the taxing power has no limitation, that it is an exercise of sovereignty, that the discretion of the Legislature imposing taxes can not be controlled, that the courts can not inquire into the motive of the Legislature in laying taxes. I might admit that doctrine in its widest extent, and still this contention has nothing to stand upon. It must be "taxes" which are levied. The power to lay "taxes" is limited by the inherent necessity of the case to the principle that the exaction must be a tax, and not a sweeping appropriation of the whole.

I lay down the proposition that whenever the Legislature undertakes to take the whole of a man's property, it is not taxation, whatever name the Legislature may give to their pretended legislation. If you lay a tax of 100 per cent upon the value of a man's property, it is no tax—it is not a tax upon his property—it is confiscation of his property by means of a penalty. You may tax business, you may tax it to any extent which will raise money; there is no limitation so long as the provision is kept within the bounds of taxation; but the moment you go beyond that, to prohibit, you step outside of the taxing power, for the action of the Legislature is not taxation.

Let me illustrate. We had during the war a tax upon manufacturers' sales of 5 per cent. As I remember the law, it was that every manufacturer should render to the internal-revenue collector an account monthly or yearly of his sales of manufactured goods, and should pay to the internal-revenue collector monthly or yearly, whatever the provision was, a tax of 5 per cent. That was a tax; it was a charge; it was a burden; it was a proportional contribution to raise money for the use of the Government. But suppose the law had been that the return should be made and that the manufacturer should pay a "tax" to the Government of 100 per cent upon his sales, it would not have been a tax; it would have been a prohibition against manufacturing, a prohibition which the advocates of this bill say is perfectly constitutional. It would have wiped out every manufactory in the United States, but it would not have been a tax. It would have been destruction, not taxation.

So it seems to me that the Senators who are basing their favorable action upon this bill upon what has been called a legal aphorism—the language of Chief Justice Marshall that the power to tax was the power to destroy—forget entirely what is meant when we talk about taxation. Is destruction taxation? Is destruction raising money for public purposes, which is of the very essence of taxation? Did Chief Justice Marshall mean to say, in using that language, that destroying was taxing? By no means.

I beg Senators to consider that the line of distinction which

I have remarked is the only line of safety: that when, under whatever pretext or whatever pressure, Congress goes beyond the laying of a tax in the sense that they are attempting to raise money for the use of the Government, they invoke a power than which there can be none more dangerous. I beg the advocates of this bill to remember the old story about the conjuror and his servant. The conjuror by using a certain formula of words could conjure up spirits, and by using another formula of words could lay them again. His servant, one day, in the absence of the conjuror, remembering the formula for raising the spirits, spoke the magic words and the spirits came; but he had forgotten the formula by which they were to be laid, and the result was that he suffered the penalty of his life.

I beg the advocates of this bill to see to what length this principle is likely to lead, and to agree with me that the only line of safety is to hold fast to the real meaning, the only meaning, the definition of the words "tax" and "taxation," and not attempt to do under the guise of taxation anything but to raise money for the needs of the Government.

You may call destruction taxation, but that does not make it so; and the old, somewhat homely, but very expressive illustration comes to my mind of what the college professor told his son. He desired to train him to processes of accurate thinking and speaking, and so he said to him one day, "My son, suppose you call a lamb's tail a leg, how many legs will the lamb have?" "Five, pa." "Oh, no, my son; calling a lamb's tail a leg does not make it so." Calling destruction taxation does not make it so. Neither Congress nor the Supreme Court should hold that calling destruction taxation makes it so and brings it within the constitutional powers of Congress.

There is one other ground upon which Senators seek to justify their support of this bill, equally absurd and quite as far from being ingenuous. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] alluded to the remarks of judges and text-writers in decided cases and in legal works, to the effect that revenue need not be the "sole" purpose of taxation. From that he drew the remarkable conclusion that it need not be the purpose of taxation at all. I have never seen a conclusion further from the statement or less related to it. This is the proposition: Courts and judges have said that revenue need not be for the sole purpose of taxation; therefore, taxation need not be for the purpose of raising revenue at all; in other words, taxation may be for the sole purpose of destruction or prohibition.

Does a lawyer say that? Has any judge said it? Has any text writer, unless Judge Cooley said it in his magazine article on the taxation of lotteries? Has it ever entered into the mind of a legislator, or jurist, or political economist to say that destruction may be the sole purpose of taxation? I said it was hard to find language with which appropriately to describe so odious a doctrine as is promulgated in this bill.

Let me refer to what the Senator from Oregon said. He alluded to the argument that in the very definition of the terms "taxes, imposts, duties, and excises" there was expressed the meaning that taxes should only be for the purpose of raising revenue, and proceeded to remark:

> These, it is said, in their ordinary signification can mean but one thing—the raising of revenue—and, therefore, when the Constitution declared that "the Congress shall have power to lay taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," for the purpose of paying the nation's debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare, its meaning is precisely as though the clause read "to lay taxes, duties, imposts, and excises for the purpose of raising revenue, in order that the nation's debts may be paid, and in order that provisions may be made for the common defense and general welfare." I deny the validity of the assumption. I deny that the term "tax" or "taxation," in or of itself, necessarily means solely—
> Emphasizing or italicizing the word solely—
> A means of raising revenue, but that it may be exercised for any purpose which in the judgment of Congress may be necessary and proper to aid not only in paying the debts of the nation, but in providing for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Does not the Senator see that by the very language he makes use of he admits that raising revenue is an essential purpose of taxation? To say it is not the "sole" purpose is equivalent to an affirmation that revenue must at least be a purpose of taxation; and that nothing can be considered taxation which wholly excludes that purpose. Other purpose indeed, there may be, but revenue still remains essential. If it be said that human life is not solely animal, does it follow that human life is not animal at all? Does not the language necessarily imply that whatever else it may be, it is nevertheless in part animal life?

The Senator attempts to draw the conclusion that because taxation does not solely mean raising money for the purposes of revenue, but that the Legislature may have other objects as well as revenue in view, it may have an object entirely foreign to raising revenue only in view. There is no such conclusion to be drawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. While the Senator is discussing this point and maintaining that the power to tax under section 8, of Article I, of the Constitution, does not allow the power to destroy, will he be kind enough to state, if he admits that there is any purpose which the Legislature may have in mind in imposing a tax other than to raise revenue, what that purpose may legitimately be?

Mr. PLATT. I think that the legislation of Congress with regard to the oleomargarine law is a very proper instance of the other purposes which the Legislature may constitutionally have in mind in taxing for the purpose of raising revenue.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state the distinction between the oleomargarine law and the pending bill?

Mr. PLATT. Allow me to finish.

The oleomargarine bill, as it was introduced into the House of Representatives, was a bill to destroy, and everybody knew it; it was not designed to tax; it was an exaction of 10 cents a pound upon everybody who manufactured oleomargarine. The House even hesitated at such an assertion of power, and reduced the exaction to 5 cents a pound. The bill came to the Senate still a bill to destroy, and as such was rejected by the Senate in that it was so amended as to lay a tax of 2 cents a pound on the product. Neither the so-called tax of 10 nor 5 cents a pound would raise revenue, and every member of Congress knew it; a tax of 2 cents a pound would raise revenue, and it does, and every member of Congress knew that it would. I therefore assert that neither the so-called tax of 5 cents a pound nor of 10 cents a pound was a tax at all.

What was the other object?

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. Let me first answer the question the Senator has already asked.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Another purpose of the legislature besides the tax for the purpose of raising revenue was to bring the whole matter within the jurisdiction of the General Government, so that a fraud which was said to be perpetrated upon the people of the United States in the adulteration of the article and in its sale for something which it was not might be prevented. There was a case where a tax was laid for revenue, and where the Government had at the same time another purpose in view, and to my mind a legitimate purpose in view, if it could obtain jurisdiction of the subject.

I desire to say, however, that even that law has not yet received the sanction of the Supreme Court, and I do not know what its decision upon it will be; but I voted for it as a tax, and having in mind the purpose of raising revenue. How anyone can jump to the conclusion that because in laying a tax you may have another purpose in view besides raising revenue, therefore you may have no purpose of raising revenue but the sole purpose of destruction in view and still call it a tax, passes my comprehension.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand the Senator to say that the amount of the tax makes a difference in his mind whether it is a constitutional enactment or not; that if it is one sum it is constitutional, and if it is another sum it is unconstitutional?

Mr. PLATT. How the Senator could understand me to say any such thing I am utterly unable to conceive. It only illustrates the legal strabismus of the Senators who are determined that this bill shall pass. I have not said any such thing; I have not intimated any such thing; and no such conclusion can be drawn from anything which I have said. I have said that there must be a raising of revenue, intended and possible, in order that it should be a tax. That the purpose of raising revenue being absent, there can not, in the very nature of things, be a tax. To say that a tax may be laid without the purpose of revenue is a contradiction in terms.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me, he certainly stated that the oleomargarine bill, as it was originally drawn, was amenable to the constitutional objection which he now makes because the tax was large; but the tax being reduced to a smaller sum, he voted for it. Now, he says it indicates strabismus on my part because I have an idea that he makes his constitutional point depend upon the amount of the tax.

Mr. PLATT. Can the Senator not see that when an exaction is required which is not to be paid and which, in the nature of things, can not be paid, it is not a tax? The 5 cents a pound which by the House bill was required to be paid by the manufacturer of oleomargarine or the 10 cents a pound which was required to be paid by him was in no sense a tax. By no definition ever given in dictionaries, by writers on political economy, or in decided cases or in text-books was it a tax. It was no more an exercise of the taxing power than the taking of private property for public use without just compensation would be an exercise of the taxing power.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The power to "lay and collect" a tax is not exercised when you lay a tax, no dollar of which you ever mean to collect. The power to lay and collect a tax is exercised when you lay a tax which you mean to collect. In the first draft of the oleomargarine bill it was so fixed that the tax could not be collected, and in the bill as it finally passed it was fixed so that it could be collected.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did the change of the amount make the bill constitutional? I am trying to make out whether a bill imposing a tax of 20 cents is an unconstitutional bill, while one with a tax of 5 cents is constitutional. I can not see how a question of constitutionality or unconstitutionality can be determined in that way, with all deference to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator still——

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. PLATT. Allow me to answer the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The Senator still utterly fails to understand what a tax is. The word "tax" was used in the bill when the payment was to be 5 cents a pound. It is used in this bill when an exaction of 20 cents a bushel is placed upon the sale of certain agricultural products. Every time they are sold a man is obliged to pay 20 cents a bushel on the sale; but it is not a tax because it happens to be called so in the bill; it is not within the meaning of the word a tax; it simply uses the word "tax" in a colloquial way, partly for convenience, possibly for courtesy, but the very point of my argument is—and I think it is sustained by ample authority and common sense—that nothing which is not intended to and which can not raise revenue is a tax.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is very good natured to allow me to interrupt him. I want him to show on the face of the bill that the tax which is to be collected, as the bill reads, if it passes, is not to be collected. I do not understand that there is any 20 cents a bushel to be collected upon the articles mentioned in this section which are actually sold. It is only a tax upon a contract made when specifying certain bushels when in reality there are no bushels sold. That is the essence of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator is still insisting that this is a tax. I deny it in toto. Write into this bill the purpose of it, that "it is not intended by this bill to raise revenue but to destroy the business which the bill proposes to tax," and then tell me, if you can, that you believe the bill would be constitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. Point that out, and then I will answer the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. Every Senator who advocates this bill, the petitions which have come here asking us to support it, and the farmers who ask me to support it, ask me to do so upon the ground that the business which is called dealing in options and futures is to be prohibited and suppressed. Put that into your bill, make a section of it. I give you the language. At the end write: "The purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue. It is to suppress dealings in options and futures," and there is not a Senator on this floor and there is not a lawyer in the United States who would say that that bill would be constitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Suppose that the tariff bill, well known as the McKinley bill, had contained at the end of it this section: "Provided, however, That this bill is not passed to raise revenue, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but solely to promote home industry," would it then have been a constitutional measure?

Mr. PLATT. In my judgment, yes. I believe you may regulate foreign commerce for the protection of home industry, and the Senator must have failed to read the authorities which he has heretofore relied upon to sustain the grounds upon which protective tariff legislation is put if he believes that it is simply an exercise of the taxing power. I am not, however, to be drawn off into a discussion of the tariff question.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me it is relevant to this bill.

Mr. PLATT. If there be another power in the Constitution in the exercise of which you can lawfully destroy a business in a State, then I would say that your bill would be constitutional, although it has in it the clause "the purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue, but is to destroy the business which it pretends to tax." That is the ground upon which all writers who have held to the constitutionality of protective tariffs have largely put the powers of Congress to enact them. It was the ground upon which the first tariff act was adopted in the First Congress of the United States; the ground which Hamilton took, which Story took, and which has been followed from that day to the present. But here confessedly there is no other power of the Constitution in aid of the exercise of which you can prohibit business in the State of New Hampshire by a misuse of the word "tax" and putting a prohibitory exaction upon business.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator more specifically explain to me under what other clause of the Constitution besides section 8 of Article I he defends protective-tariff legislation?

Mr. PLATT. Why, Mr. President, the Senator can not be ignorant——

Mr. CHANDLER. I am. I will admit that.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator can not be ignorant of the whole discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have strabismus upon this question, and I should like the Senator to tell me on what other clause in the Constitution he bases the right to impose protective duties?

Mr. PLATT. Is it possible that the Senator in his wide reading has never discovered that from the foundation of the Government to the present time it has been put upon the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will allow me to read that clause. It is as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

Now, can you not do with reference to commerce between the several States what you can do with reference to commerce with foreign nations?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. And if you can destroy the business of the importing merchants of New York by tariff duties, can you not destroy dealings in options and futures by an excise duty? I fail to see the distinction, and it certainly does not answer my inquiry to say that I am dull or stupid, because I confess that I am an humble learner on this occasion at the feet of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Massachusetts. I want to be instructed.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator really think that when in the city of Manchester, N. H., a man who has no wheat in hand says to my friend that he will sell him a hundred bushels of wheat to be delivered three days thereafter at the price of 75 cents a bushel, that that is commerce between the States? Does he really think so?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not. I think it is a business, however, upon which an excise tax may be imposed, and it is a business upon which an excise tax can be imposed with the motive of discouraging it, just as you impose tariff duties with the motive of promoting home industry and discouraging the foreign importation.

Mr. PLATT. Then the Senator will admit, I presume, that upon his theory a merchant in Manchester, N. H., who has wheat or oats in store may be taxed upon contracts for the sale thereof for the purpose of destroying his business. His logic leads to that. Such a man may be taxed by the Government for the purpose of prohibiting or destroying the business pursued by him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to define——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to define to me exactly what motive or thought might enter into the imposition of a tax? He has not fully developed his ideas on that subject. I do hold that you can discourage foreign importation by tariff duties; I do hold that you can discourage the business of dealing in options and futures by imposing a tax, and that the motive is legitimate in both cases.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator hold that Congress can destroy any other business within a State by levying a prohibitory tax?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has already quoted the dictum of Chief Justice Marshall that the power to tax is the power to destroy. I say if the Senator admits that any other motive whatever can enter into the imposition of a tariff duty or the imposition of an excise tax unless to raise revenue, then we can not stop in one case and not stop in the other; we can go on until we have discouraged and destroyed the industry. I can not see the constitutional distinction, I am free to say, which the Senator is undertaking to draw between a duty on imports and an excise tax on an internal production, and I want the Senator to point it out, if he can.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. In a moment.

The Senator from New Hampshire is frank, but I imagine he will not get votes for this bill by the admission that there resides in Congress the power to tax to destruction every business in every State of this Union. It is a doctrine never heretofore enunciated on the floor of the Senate.

I will now listen to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, through the Chair, how much of reserved power he thinks there is in the States as to foreign commerce?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think very little, if any; and I do not see why the power of the United States over commerce between the several States under the taxing power is not just as great. I am willing to be satisfied, if I can be, that there is a distinction.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to ask now about that reserved power. As to State contracts, is there any reserved power in the Constitution?

Mr. CHANDLER. Contracts within the States?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir. Are there any rights reserved under the Constitution as to contracts in the States?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, I think so.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator thinks so, and he thinks there is no reservation as to foreign commerce, does he not see the distinction between foreign and State contracts?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this colloquy has simply illustrated what I stated in starting out. There is no place to stop if you go beyond the real meaning, the essential meaning of the word "tax," in laying down the lines of constitutional authority to Congress. The moment you step over those lines, that moment the States are no longer self-governing, except by the permission and the grace of Congress.

The moment that you say an immoral contract in New Hampshire can be prohibited by a pretended taxation, that moment you must admit that every moral contract can be prohibited under the guise of pretended taxation. There is no distinction constitutionally between moral and immoral contracts so far as the power of Congress is concerned. If Congress can not prohibit a moral contract in New Hampshire, it is because the State reserved the right, when it gave its adhesion to the Constitution of the United States, to deal with its own domestic affairs; and Congress can no more exercise the right of dealing with the domestic affairs of New Hampshire in the matter of immoral contracts than it can in the matter of moral contracts.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands that the purpose and motive for which the oleomargarine bill was introduced and passed was to raise revenue? At that time, as the Senator will remember, we had an overflowing Treasury and were seeking to get rid of what money we had rather than to raise more. Now, does the Senator understand that that bill was introduced and pushed to its passage for the purpose of raising revenue?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I understand that when that bill was introduced in the House it was introduced as this bill was introduced, and that when it was urged in the House it was urged as this bill is urged, with the avowed purpose of stopping the business of dealing in oleomargarine. I understand that when it came over to the Senate the Senate revolted from that proposition, and that the sum proposed as a tax was reduced so that revenue should be raised, and that there should be at least that motive in the passage of that legislation. I know that I myself entertained the same views then which I entertain now.

I know that I said that I voted for the 2-cents tax with great reluctance, and that if I thought that would operate to stop that business I would not vote for it. The then President of the United States took the same view of the constitutional powers of Congress when he wrote his message and returned to Congress the bill with his signature. I wish to call the attention of the Senate once more to what President Cleveland said in relation to that bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to hear the Senator answer my question.

Mr. PLATT. I have answered, and I am answering it.

Mr. WASHBURN. How, then——

Mr. PLATT. I decline to yield. If the Senator asks questions and will not allow me to answer them, I must decline to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. I wish to answer the question which the Senator from Minnesota asked me before I yield to another interruption.

I now read what President Cleveland said in his message returning the oleomargarine bill with his signature:

> It has been urged as an objection to this measure that while purporting to be legislation for revenue, its real purpose is to destroy, by the use of the taxing power, one industry of our people for the protection and benefit of another.
> If entitled to indulge in such a suspicion as a basis of official action in this case, and if entirely satisfied that the consequences indicated would ensue, I should doubtless feel constrained to interpose Executive dissent.
> But I do not feel called upon to interpret the motives of Congress otherwise than by the apparent character of the bill which has been presented to me, and I am convinced that the taxes which it creates can not possibly destroy the open and legitimate manufacture and sale of the thing upon which it is levied.

If you put a tax upon these transactions which can be paid, it will be constitutional.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask the Senator right there how anybody knew whether the tax could be paid or not and how it would change the character of the law by changing the amount of the tax? No one knew what the practical effect would be by reducing the tax to 2 cents, and no one knew but that a tax of 2 cents would destroy the business just the same as if the tax had been 10 cents.

Mr. PLATT. I can only say that I voted for the bill with the understanding that it would raise revenue, and my belief in that respect has been abundantly justified.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Connecticut has been speaking very entertainingly upon this matter, but still I am not quite clear as to his view upon one particular point, and I will state it plainly so that there will be no difficulty in our understanding each other. I ask the Senator what he understands now and what he understood at the time was the object of levying a tax of 2 cents a pound on oleomargarine?

Mr. PLATT. The first object was to get the 2 cents a pound paid into the Treasury of the United States from everybody who manufactured a pound of oleomargarine.

Mr. PEFFER. Was that the only object?

Mr. PLATT. I presume it was not. I have already said that I presumed there went with it in the mind of the Legislature a purpose to regulate by obtaining jurisdiction through the taxing power to so regulate, the manufacture of oleomargarine that it should not be adulterated and should not be sold under false pretenses. I have no doubt of that; but the distance from the acknowledgment that there may be in laying a tax another purpose as well as the purpose of raising revenue, to the conclusion that there may be taxation excluding the purpose of revenue, is as far as the east is from the west. As a Senator from Vermont once said in this Chamber, and I may repeat it, you can not draw such a conclusion with a yoke of oxen and a log chain.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator one question, if it will not interrupt him.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to know if the Senator regards the duty imposed upon opium as being solely for the purpose of revenue?

Mr. PLATT. The Senator, I think, has been out of the Chamber while I have been speaking.

Mr. SQUIRE. I have been.

Mr. PLATT. Otherwise he would have learned that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] had asked me that question substantially in another way.

It is very entertaining to the Senators who propose to support this bill to try and make out that this attempted destruction of business within the States under the taxing power, with no other clause in the Constitution which it is appropriate legislation for the exercise of, is precisely the same as the exercise of the constitutional power of laying duties upon foreign imports.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I am sorry I was out of the Chamber and did not hear all of his remarks.

Mr. PLATT. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut if there be a power in the Constitution authorizing Congress to do a certain thing, then is it constitutional or not to invoke the taxing power to do that thing?

Mr. PLATT. If there be another power in the Constitution in aid of which prohibition and destruction is appropriate legislation, you may then prohibit and destroy; it is not fair nor honest nor, in the meaning of the word, permissible to call it taxation, however.

Mr. MITCHELL. But it is constitutional.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly, if it be appropriate legislation to carry out any power of Congress to destroy a business in Portland, I agree that it may be done.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I understand the Senator from Connecticut to concede that there are certain cases wherein it is constitutional at least, if not proper, to invoke the taxing power for some other purpose than that of raising revenue?

Mr. PLATT. I do not concede that you may ever invoke the taxing power with the acknowledged purpose to prohibit or destroy. It is a misnomer to make use of such language.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator said a moment ago, as I understood him, that if there is a power in the Constitution authorizing Congress to destroy a certain thing, then it is constitutional, but not proper in the judgment of the Senator, to invoke the taxing power to destroy that thing.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. And in destroying that thing under those circumstances you do not invoke the taxing power. I have been unfortunate if I have been unable to make myself understood as saying the moment you go beyond the possibility of raising revenue you no longer exercise the taxing power. Does the Senator from Oregon wish to be understood as a lawyer as saying that the power of destruction exercised by Congress is the power of taxing under the Constitution? Not at all. That is just where the mistake is made by the Senators who place this proposed legislation on the authority of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno. It is true that the act called the imposition which was laid upon the circulation of State banks as it should be paid out by the State banks a tax, but it was not a legal, it was not a correct use of the term. Nothing is taxation that does not have in it the purpose of raising revenue for Government.

In the case referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] the other day, I think in 101 United States Reports, the case of The National Bank, etc., vs. The United States, the former decision of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno was affirmed; but Chief Justice Waite, I think it was, in order that there might never be any more mistake about that case, stated what the reason of the decision was, repeating the language of Chief Justice Chase in the decision of the case, that Congress had, in the act in which that so-called tax was imposed, passed a law for the establishment of a uniform currency, and in aid of that legislation they might prohibit the issue of State banks. It was not placed upon the taxing power at all, but it was placed upon the power of Congress to prohibit when it was necessary and proper to prohibit in order to carry out another enactment which they might lawfully and constitutionaly make, namely, the law providing a uniform currency.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why in a case of that kind mention the taxing power at all? Why not declare directly, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] proposes to declare by his substitute for a portion of the pending bill, that this thing is a crime and a wrong, that we hereby prohibit it, and impose heavy penalties? Why did Congress not do that in the case of the State bank issues instead of saying, "We levy a tax of 10 per cent"?

Mr. PLATT. I am not bound to answer for a Congress long past and say why they did it. I say, however, that the Supreme Court in the decision of that case did not recognize the right to do it under the taxing power, and it can not be drawn from that case.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the Senator misunderstands the opinion.

Mr. PLATT. The Supreme Court did say that Congress could prohibit the circulation of State banks, but lest there should be some misunderstanding, lest somebody in the future should make the argument and raise the plea which the Senator is now making, in subsequent cases the court have taken extraordinary pains to show that they did not intend for a moment to justify that as an exercise of the taxing power.

There is one other ground upon which it is said——

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Senator leaves that point, if it does not disturb him, will he allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the levying of duties under the power to levy duties on imports an exercise of the taxing power or the exercise of another power—the commercial power?

Mr. PLATT. Both, I think.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator will admit, I suppose, he belonging to the party to which I belong, that we have the power either under the taxing clause or under the commercial clause—one or the other or both—to levy customs duties at such rates as to prohibit foreign importations?

Mr. PLATT. If there were no power in the Constitution to regulate foreign commerce and only the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, etc., if a duty were laid on a foreign article which prevented its importation, I should consider the act unconstitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. PLATT. When I get through with this sentence.

But as there is this additional power in the Constitution, the power to regulate foreign commerce, there can be no question about the right to lay prohibitory duties, and it has been justified upon that ground by all the great expounders of the Constitution who have taken sides in favor of its constitutionality.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I wish to ask the Senator how he deduces the right to destroy commerce under a clause of the Constitution which says it may be regulated?

Mr. HOAR. It refers to a particular act of commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER. I asked the Senator from Connecticut, but I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] answer the question how you can destroy a particular article of commerce under the power to regulate it, which the Senator from Connecticut says you can do.

Mr. PLATT. In the same way that Congress may destroy the circulation of State banks when it becomes necessary to do so in order to exercise the constitutional power to provide a uniform currency.

Mr. President, as I have said—I said it when the Senator from Oregon was not in, for the whole matter to which he has called my attention has been gone over during his absence—if he will write into the bill the avowed purpose of it, I do not believe he will say that the Senate can constitutionally pass such a bill. If a section were added, saying "The purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue, but to destroy the business of making immoral contracts about futures in the States," I do not believe he would say it would be constitutional.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask if in a tariff bill where duties were levied for the express purpose of prohibition you should write afterward that it was for that purpose, would it be constitutional?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know how many times the Senator desires to have me answer that question. I believe I have been exceedingly good-natured. It has been asked me at least twice before, and I have answered it. Under the power to regulate commerce you might declare the purpose to be to keep out this article or that article, and it would be perfectly constitutional.

Mr. WASHBURN. Why would there not be the same propriety in writing it in in that case as in this?

Mr. PLATT. I am not talking about propriety. I am asking the Senator whether he believes the bill would be constitutional if the avowed purpose—the purpose which he avows—were written into the bill. He will not say that he thinks it will, and no lawyer in the Senate or out of it, in my judgment, will rise and say that he thinks it would be constitutional. Then it comes to this, that it is believed by the advocates of the bill that the Supreme Court can be either humbugged or garroted so that they can not declare a bill unconstitutional which would be unconstitutional if the purpose of the bill were written into it.

Mr. WASHBURN. Why should it not be the same case in the prohibition of imports?

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend allow me to make one suggestion there, though I dislike to impose on his good nature? The power to regulate commerce was put into the Constitution in order that we might prohibit imports from other countries if we had a mind to do so. Every commercial nation has to have that power of defense. Suppose England should prohibit commerce with the United States in the articles we raise so that they might be bought entirely of Canada; she would have a perfect right to do it under the law of nations. Could we not retaliate, then, by prohibiting the importation of all goods of English manufacture?

One of the leading objects in giving Congress the power to regulate commerce was that this Nation might have the power to defend itself against the hostile legislation of foreign countries by prohibiting their commerce altogether if we see fit. Therefore, we have the right to do it; there is no question about it. Nobody ever has questioned it. Having the right to do it, if we do it in the form of a tax, nobody can say to us, "You have not the right to tax in this way because it is prohibiting commerce and not taxing," because you do either of two things and you can do either of them any way you choose. But in this case you have not any power to prohibit and you know you have not.

Mr. WASHBURN. But such a tax is not laid for the purpose of raising revenue, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, and all taxes are levied for the purpose of raising revenue.

Mr. HOAR. But it is laid for an equally constitutional purpose. That is the distinction. In the case of the tariff, which these gentlemen keep throwing in our faces, the duties are put on for a constitutional purpose, whether they are prohibitory or whether they are merely a tax. In the case of this bill it is done—I will not use the word "fraud"—but it is done under an incorrect statement for an admittedly unconstitutional purpose. That is the difference.

Mr. PLATT. It is astonishing that the Senators who advocate the bill can not see this distinction.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the Senator will pardon me just here—

Mr. PLATT. Allow me, if you please, to illustrate it. By the Constitution Congress has the right to established post-roads.

The right is broad enough to prevent the States or anybody in the States from carrying letters. If any express company should set up the business of carrying letters there is no doubt but that Congress in the exercise of its constitutional power could prevent that express company from carrying letters by prohibition, by penalty, or by exactions which they called a tax, but it would not be a tax. But if there were not that clause in the Constitution giving the United States jurisdiction over the matter of the mails it could not be done, and either the prohibition, the penalty, or the exaction which was called a tax would be unconstitutional. I hope I make myself plain.

Mr. WASHBURN. Now——

Mr. HOAR. Does my friend from Connecticut desire to continue his speech to-night?

Mr. PLATT. I should have been glad to continue my speech longer, but it seems I am not permitted to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to move an executive session when convenient to the Senator from Connecticut to interrupt his speech, but I desire to hear him as long as he chooses to go on.

Mr. PLATT. I am soon to come to the other branch of this subject, and of course I can not finish that to-night. I will go on for the present time or wait until morning.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before the Senator from Connecticut proceeds I should like to ask him how he draws a different distinction in the exercise of the taxing power from that drawn in Justice Story's Commentaries. Justice Story says:

> The absolute power to lay taxes includes the power in every form in which it may be used, and for every purpose for which the Legislature may choose to apply it.

Mr. HOAR. Judge Story says he does not indorse that himself.

Mr. WASHBURN. We will see whether he does. He proceeds:

> This results from the very nature of such an unrestricted power. A fortiori it might be applied by Congress to purposes for which nations have been accustomed to apply it. Now, nothing is more clear from the history of commercial nations, than the fact that the taxing power is often, very often applied for other purposes than revenue. It is often applied as a regulation of commerce.
> It is often applied as a virtual prohibition upon the importation of particular articles for the encouragement and protection of domestic products and industry.

Then he says it is sometimes exercised "as a suppression of particular employments."

Mr. PLATT. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. WASHBURN. It is on page 38 of the pamphlet print of my speech. Justice Story does not seem to draw the fine distinction of the exercise of this taxing power that the Senator from Connecticut does, but he says it is used for these different purposes.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator is reading from a speech of his own?

Mr. WASHBURN. I am reading an extract.

Mr. PLATT. He is reading a quotation or an extract from Story's Commentaries on the Constitution. If he will get Story's Commentaries on the Constitution he will discover that Mr. Story did not avow that as his belief, that he cited it as an argument which was made, but expressly declared that he did not state it as his own view. Yet here it is brought forward in the speech of the Senator from Minnesota as the views of Judge Story. Now I will yield for a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SAWYER. With the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Before putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, the Chair will lay before the Senate business from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SAWYER. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

USE OF STREETS IN WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 3, to strike out "reservation" and insert "reservations;" in line 3, to strike out "space" and insert "spaces;" in line 6, to strike out "reservation" and insert "reservations," and in line 7, to strike out "space" and insert "spaces."

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 8th day of February, 1893, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SAWYER. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 18, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 17, 1893.

POSTMASTERS.

Harvy D. Bush, to be postmaster at Covington, in the county of Newton and State of Georgia.

William Gallaher, to be postmaster at Sandersville, in the county of Washington and State of Georgia.

Cyrus E. Hunter, to be postmaster at Wakefield, in the county of Dixon and State of Nebraska.

William W. Hopkins, to be postmaster at Oakland, in the county of Burt and State of Nebraska.

Walter D. Smith, to be postmaster at Lyons, in the county of Burt and State of Nebraska.

George M. Fountain, to be postmaster at New Carlisle, in the county of St. Joseph and State of Indiana.

David A. Wellborn, to be postmaster at Pilot Point, in the county of Denton and State of Texas.

Ferdinand C. Willbern, to be postmaster at Llano, in the county of Llano and State of Texas.

Frank M. Atkinson, to be postmaster at St. Joseph, in the county of Buchanan and State of Missouri.

James T. Brotherton, to be postmaster at Dunkirk, in the county of Jay and State of Indiana.

Mrs. Marietta Blythe, to be postmaster at Clinton, in the county of Vermillion and State of Indiana.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

ARMY AND NAVY PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for Army and Navy pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL FORCE IN INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of War, for an additional force in the office of the Inspector-General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for printing and binding for the Treasury Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a schedule of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims which have been presented to that Department and require an appropriation for their payment; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims arising under the act of July 4, 1864, examined and allowed since April 15, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SITE FOR CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with inclosures referring to Department letter of the 9th instant, relating to the site for the United States custom-house in the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA RAILWAY COMPANY OF MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution of December 22, 1892, information relating to the grant for the Hastings and Dakota Railway Company of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF WISCONSIN AND WYOMING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House certified copies from the Secretary of State, of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the States of Wisconsin and Wyoming; which were laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be permitted to lie on the table, for the reason that a similar bill is now pending in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1674) incorporating the Society of American Florists.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. A similar bill has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture of this House and is now upon the Calendar. The bill simply proposes to incorporate this company; it contains no appropriation.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]?

Mr. BAILEY. Before consent is granted I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri upon what ground Congress is asked to incorporate a private corporation like this?

Mr. HATCH. The ground is that the passage of the bill has been requested by the florists of the United States, and it simply follows a precedent which has been followed in quite a number of instances. I know of no objection whatever to the proposition. It is simply to incorporate a body of representative florists who hold meetings annually in different cities of the Union. Their only means of obtaining national organization is by the passage of a bill of this kind.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri why they can not be incorporated under a State law?

Mr. HATCH. I will state the reason, as given by the representatives of the committee of these gentlemen. The main reason is that if they are incorporated under any State law they will be compelled to hold an organization under such law and the annual meetings must be also held in the same State. This organization holds its meetings once a year in the different States of the Union. It is to-day in session in the city of St. Louis, and perhaps they will adjourn to meet in some city in Texas the next year. The annual meetings are held in the different States for the convenience of the large number of members throughout the United States, so that they can confer with local florists in their meetings from time to time.

Mr. BAILEY. I dislike very much to make objection, but I feel constrained to do so in a case like this.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Texas, as he has asked me so frankly to give some reasons why the bill should be passed, to give some reason why it should not; and why a large and respectable body of men such as I have described, scattered throughout all parts of the United States, in asking Congress for a favor that has been granted to like bodies, should be refused. I would also ask him, after this request has been acted upon and passed the committee of the House of Representatives, after careful consideration, and been reported favorably to the House, as well as considered and passed in the Senate of the United States, whether he can not content himself with simply voting against the bill, if he so desires, and allow the House of Representatives to consider the matter and determine whether in its judgment it will accord this privilege or not?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, Democrats for a long time have contended that Congress had no power to create a private corporation. That contention began with Mr. Jefferson himself, and believing in the correctness of that contention I am unwilling, simply to serve the convenience of anybody, to see Congress daily engaged in the work of incorporating private associations.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman from Texas draw no distinction between the mere organization of a body of men for a work of this character, a work undertaken for the public good, and that of a money or power corporation?

Mr. BAILEY. There is no distinction as to the power of Congress in the matter.

Mr. HATCH. I beg the gentleman's pardon, there is a distinction not only in law, but under the very authority the gentleman invokes. And it is a very strange thing for a representative Democrat like the gentleman from Texas, whenever a matter of this kind is brought up, to undertake to invoke in support of his action the spirit of Thomas Jefferson, who never did such a thing in his life.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman needs to study his teachings a little better.

Mr. HATCH. I need no suggestion of this character from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WATSON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

R. L. JENNINGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. L. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 strike out the sum $799.13 and insert $947.03.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

REPORT OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of 4,600 copies of the report on privileges and elections, prepared by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, under the resolution of February 28, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HITT, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of standing and select committees.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, for which I ask present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 18th instant, beginning immediately after the second morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bills to be considered in the order indicated by said committee.

Resolved, That Thursday, the 19th instant, and Saturday, the 21st instant, beginning immediately after the second morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; bills to be considered in the order indicated by said committee.

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 24th, and Wednesday, the 25th instant, beginning immediately after the first morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9348) providing for a uniform system of bankruptcy. Nothing in this order to interfere with the right of the House to consider revenue and general appropriation bills.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the reports.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire, in reference to the bankruptcy bill, the object of the provision that it shall not interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. CATCHINGS. It is so with all these special orders.

Mr. OATES. If appropriation bills should come in and take any portion of the time, would that be taken from another day, to give the total amount of the two days to the consideration of the bankruptcy bill?

Mr. CATCHINGS. All of these assignments are made subject to reports from the Committee on Appropriations. The same provision applies to the assignment in which the gentleman is interested as to the others.

Mr. OATES. An extension of the time could be had without a new order made by the House, then.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If the Appropriations Committee should come in and occupy those days, of course we should have to give you some other time.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not think there is any danger. I do not think the Appropriations Committee will get in during this session. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I beg to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] that two appropriation bills are now ready to be reported.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the adoption of the report, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DUNPHY), there were—ayes 106, noes 6.

Mr. DUNPHY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. CATCHINGS and Mr. DUNPHY.

Pending the announcement of the vote by tellers,

Mr. DUNPHY said: Mr. Speaker, under an arrangement made with the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I will withdraw my point of no quorum.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHIPMAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 8th day of February, 1893, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States; and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report upon the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reported back with the recommendation that it do pass, by the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President and Members of Congress.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is precisely the same as that introduced in the Senate. It is precisely the same as the resolutions adopted four years ago and eight years ago. It simply provides, in the usual manner, for the counting of the electoral vote.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask to report back a Senate joint resolution which it is important to have passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can report it on the call of committees. The regular order is the call of the standing and select committees for report.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports be permitted to hand them to the Clerk.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will have to object to that unless I can offer this bill. It simply provides for the construction of some seats in the reservations in the city of Washington during the inauguration.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will call the committees.

The roll of committees was called; when bills of the following titles were severally reported, read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed and referred to the Calendars named below:

RECEIVERS OF NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 9949) relating to receivers of national banking associations.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, there was a bill reported from the same committee the other day that went upon the House Calendar. It ought to go to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can raise that question at any other time.

Mr. BLAND. I will not raise it now.

The SPEAKER. This bill (H. R. 9949) should go to the House Calendar, as the Chair understands it. It relates to the appointment of receivers of national banks.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have the bill read.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the House Calendar.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

By Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (H. R. 10163) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887—to the House Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OSAGE RIVER, MISSOURI.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10062) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River, between the mouths of Pomme de Terre River and Buffalo Creek, in Benton County, Mo.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL PREMISES FOR NEW YORK POST-OFFICE.

Mr. DUNPHY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 186) empowering the Postmaster-General to obtain additional premises in the city of New York to be used for the business of the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT CUMMINGS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. AMERMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1710) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from sale certain land in the abandoned Fort Cummings military reservation, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO INDIAN TRIBES IN THE QUAPAW AGENCY.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill H. R. 10223, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 9975), to provide for the allotment of lands among the several Indian tribes in the Quapaw Agency in the Indian Territory, and for the sale of surplus lands of such tribes, and for the creation of the county of Cayuga, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALE OF SURPLUS LANDS IN QUAPAW INDIAN AGENCY.

Mr. HARVEY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10168) to provide for the sale of the surplus lands belonging to certain tribes of Indians within the limits of the Quapaw Agency, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

USE OF RESERVATIONS AND PUBLIC SPACES IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public places in the city of Washington, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that be considered now, as it is a matter of importance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] that during the call of committees for reports that request can not be entertained.

RED RIVER CART.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, reported back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. 127) authorizing the Smithsonian Institution to lend to the North Dakota World's Fair Commission the Red River cart now in the National Museum; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CODIFICATION OF THE PENSION LAWS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEARSON], the Chairman of the Select Committee to Codify the Pension Laws, who is absent sick, I desire to report a bill accompanied by a report, and I ask that it be placed upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It carries no appropriation?

Mr. MARTIN. It is a bill to codify and arrange the laws relating to pensions. If it will be in order now, I ask unanimous consent that 5,000 additional copies of this bill be printed.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to make that request at this time. The gentleman can submit the request on the completion of the call.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—REYNOLDS VS. SHONK.

Mr. MOORE, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the report of that committee on the contested-election case of John B. Reynolds vs. George W. Shonk; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

USE OF RESERVATIONS AND PUBLIC SPACES IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take up the Senate joint resolution S. R. 128.

The SPEAKER. The regular order was demanded.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], who demanded the regular order, stated that he would make no objection to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Chair will entertain the request. The Clerk will report the joint resolution, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservation or other public space in the city of Washington on occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1893, which in his opinion will inflict no serious or permanent injury upon such reservation or public space, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the District as they may deem proper and necessary therefor.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred S. R. 128 "To authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, D. C," has considered the same, and report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Amend by inserting "reservations" for "reservation" and "spaces" for "space" wherever they occur, so as to make it plural.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina for the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CODIFICATION OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for an order to print 5,000 copies in addition to the number printed under the rules of House of the bill to codify the pension laws—4,000 to be placed in the House folding room, and 1,000 for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he has any estimate as to what this publication will cost?

Mr. MARTIN. I have not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If it costs over $500 the House can not order it. Under the law the House can not order printing to exceed $500, and whenever the cost of printing exceeds $500 it has to be done by concurrent resolution.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if he knows what the cost would be in a case of this kind. It is simply the printing of a bill that will already be set up in the office of the Public Printer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am unable to hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. MARTIN. I was asking the gentleman if he knew what the cost would be.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana had better obtain from the office of the Public Printer the estimate of the cost.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of bills in what is known as the second morning hour. The hour begins at eighteen minutes to 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Patents.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions was called; and, on motion of Mr. MARTIN, by unanimous consent, it was passed over without prejudice.

The Committee on Private Land Claims was called; and, on motion of Mr. OTIS, the committee was passed over without prejudice.

The Committee on the Library was called; and, on motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, the committee was passed over without prejudice.

STATISTICS OF WAGES.

The Committee on the Eleventh Census was called.

Mr. WILLCOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire, on the part of the committee, to call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 71) to authorize the Superintendent of Census to continue the report on wages by Joseph D. Weeks.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Superintendent of Census be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ Joseph D. Weeks, of Pittsburg, Pa., to continue and complete the work of collecting, compiling, and reporting upon the statistics of wages in the productive industries of the United States.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of this act the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, the same to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. WILLCOX. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution simply provides for the publication of a volume of statistics similar to that of the twentieth volume of the reports of the Tenth Census, compiled by Mr. Joseph D. Weeks. That is probably the most valuable volume of statistics published in the Tenth Census. It was, as the one now proposed will be, simply a collection of facts, without comment. There is a greater demand for this collection of statistics than for any other volume connected with the census.

The committee has been requested by the leading statisticians of the country, especially by Senator CARLISLE, Edward Atkinson and others, as well as the leading newspapers of the country, to urge the passage of this joint resolution. Mr. Weeks has collected these statistics, which consist mainly of a compilation of the rates of wages paid in the various manufacturing industries of the country, taken from the pay rolls. It is, perhaps, the only statistical work that all parties and all sides will accept as correct and trustworthy. The publication would cost probably some $40,000. It is important that the joint resolution should be passed at this time. Mr. Weeks has informed me that if this joint resolution is passed without delay he can prepare and publish at least the most important parts of the volume in time for use in connection with any legislation that may be enacted by the next Congress on economic questions.

Mr. BROSIUS. How many copies does the joint resolution call for?

Mr. BYNUM. It simply provides for the publication of a volume of the same kind of statistical matter that was published in connection with the Tenth Census, and this volume will constitute a volume of the Eleventh Census. The joint resolution puts the matter under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Superintendent of the Census is perfectly willing and desirous that the joint resolution shall be passed and that Mr. Weeks shall do this work.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is it to be a reprint of any portion of the Tenth Census?

Mr. BYNUM. No; it is not to be a reprint, but it is intended to be a publication of matter similar to that which was compiled by Mr. Weeks for the Tenth Census.

Mr. DALZELL. It is a continuation, from 1880 to 1890, of the same sort of matter that was embodied in the twentieth volume of the Tenth Census.

Mr. BYNUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does it refer only to wages in Pennsylvania?

Mr. BYNUM. No; it includes wages all over the country in the different industries.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether this joint resolution contemplates a compilation of the statistics of 1890.

Mr. BYNUM. It is to be a compilation of the statistics which

I have indicated, and the volume will be a part of the census of 1890, but of course it will not include anything that has been collected by the Census Bureau.

Mr. DOCKERY. But I notice that the joint resolution carries an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. BYNUM. Yes; it will take about $50,000 to make the publication.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is not that provided for in the general appropriation for the completion of the work of the Eleventh Census?

Mr. BYNUM. No. This is in addition to that. It will require $40,000 or $50,000 to make this publication in proper form, and it is no part of the work prepared by the Census Bureau.

Mr. BROSIUS. Why do you call it part of the Eleventh Census?

Mr. BYNUM. Because it will be published as a part of the Eleventh Census.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is it the same sort of matter that was printed in the last report of the bureau of labor statistics of New York? [Laughter.]

Mr. BROSIUS. Does not the census act authorize such a publication as this joint resolution contemplates?

Mr. BYNUM. It does not. Mr. Speaker, that the House may fully understand the matter, I will say again that Mr. Weeks furnished the matter contained in the twentieth volume of the Tenth Census, showing the rates of wages as taken from the pay rolls of different industries throughout the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Will this include the Peck report?

Mr. BYNUM. Oh, this is not a collation of opinions or of conclusions; it is a body of carefully collected statistics.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to know under what authority this appropriation is asked for. Is it upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Census?

Mr. BYNUM. No, sir. It is based upon a resolution which was introduced and referred to the committee. Similar matter collected by Mr. Weeks in connection with the Tenth Census was published under the authority of Congress as the tenth volume of that census. After referring this matter to the Superintendent of the Census, and also to the Secretary of the Interior, and after taking into consideration the urgent requests of a number of prominent gentlemen, including Senator CARLISLE, Mr. Edward Atkinson, and other statisticians, all of whom have regarded the previous work of Mr. Weeks as very valuable and trustworthy, it being the only one in this line which is so accepted without question, the Committee on the Census have reported this resolution.

A MEMBER. What is the character of the publication?

Mr. BYNUM. It is a publication of rates of wages, etc., in manufacturing establishments in various parts of the country.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it estimated that $50,000 will be sufficient to cover the expense?

Mr. BYNUM. That will be sufficient, Mr. Weeks says, to cover the cost of this publication.

Mr. BROSIUS. What years does it cover?

Mr. DALZELL. The years 1880 to 1890. It is proposed that this volume shall correspond with volume 20 of the census of 1880.

Mr. BROSIUS. Who collected the data for this publication?

Mr. DALZELL. They were collected for the Tenth Census by Mr. Weeks, under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Census; but the volume embracing this information was not published until 1888, some eight years after the census period. Now, the proposition is that Mr. Weeks shall publish a volume corresponding with volume 20 of the Tenth Census, the information for which, as I have stated, was collected by him under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Census. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] has stated, the publication of this work is earnestly requested by the most eminent statisticians in the country—by men of all parties. It is really refreshing to have presented to us a matter upon which men of all parties agree.

Men of all political views place the most implicit reliance upon the labors of Mr. Weeks; and they asked that this work be done under his supervision. I think that by common consent the volume similar to this, which was published as a part of the report of the Tenth Census, is regarded as one of the most important, if not the most important, of those volumes. It certainly would be a misfortune if we should not publish a similar volume in connection with the Eleventh Census.

Mr. BROSIUS. Within what time will this volume be published?

Mr. DALZELL. Within a very short time after the adoption of the resolution, because the data are already largely collected, as I understand.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. BYNUM] a question. I supposed it to be the main purpose of the Bureau of Labor to furnish information of this kind. If not, what is the Bureau of Labor for?

Mr. BYNUM. The Bureau of Labor does not publish, nor can the Commissioner of Labor secure such statistics as will be published in this work. It is a fact well known to persons acquainted with the difficulties of securing reliable statistics that Mr. Weeks is able to obtain from the pay rolls and other books of manufacturers statistics which no other man in the country probably could procure, because of the confidence which the manufacturers have that statistics thus furnished to Mr. Weeks will not be used to their detriment. Neither the Bureau of Labor nor any department of this Government is able to obtain the statistics of which we shall get the advantage in this publication.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Did not Mr. Peck undertake to do the same thing?

Mr. BYNUM. Oh, this is a matter of business. I do wish we could transact important business here without having irrelevant matter brought in.

Mr. SAYERS. Would the gentleman from Indiana object to inserting at the end of the first section the words "at a cost not exceeding $50,000"?

Mr. BYNUM. I have no objection. Let the gentleman propose his amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to insert after the words "United States," in line 7 the words "at a cost not exceeding $50,000."

The SPEAKER. Before the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is considered, the Chair would suggest that the amendments reported by the committee had better be acted upon.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments of the committee were adopted.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to insert the words I have suggested.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 7, after the words "United States," insert "at a cost not exceeding $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question, if he will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BYNUM. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much of the $50,000 provided by the resolution is to be applied to the compensation of the compiler, Mr. Weeks, and how much to the printing of the document?

Mr. BYNUM. The whole matter is not to exceed that amount. Mr. Weeks says it can be done for that. It will be done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and the question of compensation, as well as the cost of printing, is all in the hands of the Secretary.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there a given sum provided as the compensation?

Mr. BYNUM. That is to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOLMAN. How as to the cost of printing the matter?

Mr. BYNUM. That is all embraced in the limit of cost fixed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is no expression in the bill that this work shall be printed?

Mr. BYNUM. The $50,000 includes the whole cost.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the permission of my colleague, I would like to have the joint resolution again reported as amended, for I have read it, and my recollection is that there is no provision for printing.

The joint resolution as amended was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ Joseph D. Weeks, of Pittsburg, Pa., to continue and complete the work of collecting, compiling, and reporting upon the statistics of wages in the productive industries of the United States, at a cost not exceeding $50,000.

SEC. 2. That all mail matter, of whatever class, relative to this report and the investigation undertaken in connection with same, and indorsed "Official business, Department of the Interior, wages investigation," shall be transported free of postage.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of this act the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my colleague from Indiana will insert the words "including the printing and publishing," which are not embraced now as the measure stands.

Mr. BYNUM. I would like to know how a thing can be published without being printed?

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is no provision even for publishing. It provides for the work of collecting, compiling, and reporting upon these statistics, but no provision is made for publishing or printing them.

Mr. BYNUM. If my colleague does not think that is covered, I have no objection to inserting the word "printing" in the proper place.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to insert the words "printing and publishing."

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me. After the words "United States," in the seventh line, I would suggest that the words be inserted, "for the printing and publishing thereof." There is no provision to print the volume after its compilation.

Mr. BYNUM. I will accept an amendment of that kind if it be considered as necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas has already been adopted and comes in after the words "United States," the amendment which provides that this shall be done at a cost not exceeding $50,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, the other amendment ought to precede that.

Mr. DOCKERY. The proposition should come in after the word "compiling."

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, that is correct. I suggest the amendment in line 6, just after the word "compiling;" so as to read.

The work of collecting, compiling, printing, publishing, and reporting upon, etc.

The amendment of Mr. SPRINGER was adopted.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana when it is contemplated that this work shall be completed. There is no time fixed in the resolution. The $50,000 may run over four or five years and give this gentleman good employment at his leisure.

Mr. BYNUM. I have no doubt the work will be completed before the census proper is completed. The matter is all ready for publication now, and has been waiting the action of Congress.

I ask the previous question——

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague will agree to this amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree to any other amendment. I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor and has demanded the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand this resolution is to be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I submit that I have the right to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the question of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. That the measure is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But still the previous question may be ordered. That is the uniform ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my colleague [Mr. BYNUM] should not insist on the previous question when a member desires to submit an amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. I have yielded to every gentleman who wanted to amend, and I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish the bill to contain a provision that the entire cost shall not exceed $50,000.

Mr. SAYERS. That is already in the bill.

Mr. BYNUM. The bill has been amended so as to provide that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not in terms.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not the entire cost.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not so understand it.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the joint resolution,

The SPEAKER announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND) there were—ayes 86, noes 1.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The title of the joint resolution was ordered to be amended to conform to the body of it.

On motion of Mr. BYNUM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent when the Committee on War Claims was called, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee be passed without prejudice, with the right to be called again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] states that he was unavoidably absent at the moment when the Committee on War Claims was called, and asks that that committee be passed without prejudice, with the right to be called again.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—M'DUFFIE VS. TURPIN.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I have a privileged report from the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of McDuffie against Turpin.

The SPEAKER. The report will be referred to the House Calendar and printed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present the views of the minority in that case, and that they be printed with the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] submits the views of the minority and asks that they be printed with those of the majority.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLCOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on the Eleventh Census.

The SPEAKER. That can not be considered during this hour. After the expiration of the hour it may be considered.

Mr. WILLCOX. I desire to call it up afterward,

The Committee to Codify the Pension Laws was called.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that that Committee to Codify the Pension Laws be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee may be passed, because it having this day set apart for the consideration of certain measures is not prepared to call up any measures under this order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] asks that the Judiciary Committee be passed without prejudice, and that the right to recur to it again be reserved. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was again called.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up some bridge bills from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and pass them this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to do that.

LIGHT-HOUSE STEAMER PANSEY.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 1305) to remit the penalties on the light-house steamer Pansey.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. I move that the House resolve itself in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1305) to remit the penalties on the light-house steamer Pansey, with Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay to Baird, Houston & Co., or their assignee, the sum of $1,250, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, that being the amount of time penalties imposed on the aforesaid firm under their contract for building the light-house steamer Pansey.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it appears that Messrs. Baird and Houston had a contract with the Government to construct the steamer Pansey, and under that contract there was a provision that a penalty of $25 a day should be inflicted upon the contractors for any delay beyond a certain time in the completion of the vessel. They did not complete the vessel within the time limited by the contract because they were prevented from obtaining the iron and material for the construction of the steamer by reason of difficulties and railroad troubles that occurred in Pittsburg. The report of the committee explains the matter sufficiently.

The subjoined letters of Acting Secretary of the Treasury Spaulding and Acting Secretary of the Treasury Nettleton, at the time, are sufficient to indicate the character of this claim, and the entirely favorable attitude of the Treasury Department and of the Light-House Board toward the payment of it by the Government. The amendment proposed by Senator HOAR, referred to in the letter of Hon. A. B. Nettleton, and approved by the Light-House Board, would, after deducting the increased penalty, leave the amount as $1,275. It is proper to add that the committee has been satisfied that the riots referred to, which occurred on the Pennsylvania Railroad, tied up at Pittsburg the iron for a longer period than the time for which the penalties were imposed, and that these contractors were in no sense responsible for the same. The report of Acting Secretary of the Treasury Nettleton says:

It appears that the contractors asked that the penalty be remitted for the reason that the riots broke out shortly after they made their contract, in consequence of which they suffered delay in getting the necessary materials much greater than the period for which the penalty was enforced.

It appears further that in view of this fact the Light-House Board recommended that the penalty be remitted if it could be done in accordance with the law.

The penalty was not remitted for the reason that the Solicitor of the Treasury, to whom the matter had been referred, expressed the opinion that in this case the Secretary has no power to remit or pay the amount of the penalty, as recommended by the Light-House Board.

This bill is simply to remit the penalty for the nonexecution of the contract within the time prescribed and was incurred in accordance with the written terms of the contract. It was inflicted without any fault upon the part of the contractors, and it is equitable, of course, that the penalty should be remitted. I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether anything more is involved in the bill than the mere penalty?

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Nothing in the world. A bill has passed the Senate in identically the same terms as this bill.

Mr. WISE. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that nothing is involved but the penalty.

Mr. BLAND. Has the work been paid for under the contract, excepting the penalty?

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Nothing remains except the remission of this penalty.

Mr. BLAND. Then I understand that this penalty was withheld out of the moneys that were due the firm on their contract.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Sir?

Mr. BLAND. How are these penalties imposed and collected?

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. They were simply imposed by the proper officer under the terms of the contract.

Mr. FELLOWS. How are the penalties collected? By withholding the money on the contract?

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. I do not know.

Mr. FELLOWS. Of course; it must be.

Mr. BLAND. I do not understand yet from the reading of that report, or the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, whether this $1,200 penalty was taken from the money due the contractors, or whether the whole amount was paid the contractors according to the contract.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. I am not informed as to that, sir.

Mr. FELLOWS. They must have suffered the penalty.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. The penalty has been paid to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. That the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1305), and had directed him to report the same back with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask to substitute the bill S. 1292 for the House bill which has been considered in the committee. It is identically the same bill as reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, stating that they are identical in terms. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Senate bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOUK of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the House bill on this subject will lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE CAHAWBA RIVER.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6797) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahawba River, Alabama, by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WISE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. It is a bridge bill, drawn in the usual form, with the usual safeguards.

Mr. TRACEY. I object.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, except the following:

Page 9, strike out "13" after the word "section," and insert "12."

Mr. SEERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether this bill is in the usual form, or whether it has been recommended by the War Department.

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir; these bridge bills have all been submitted to the Secretary of War.

Mr. SEERLEY. I think the usual form of bridge bill does not have thirteen sections in it.

Mr. WISE. I do not know about that.

Mr. HERBERT. I assure the gentleman [Mr. SEERLEY] that this bill meets the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WISE. It is drawn in the usual form, and it has been submitted to the War Department and has the approval of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahawba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway."

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE OSAGE RIVER.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10062) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River between the mouths of the Pomme de Terre River and Buffalo Creek, in Benton County, Mo.

The bill was read.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 17th instant, beginning after the second morning hour, be assigned for the consideration of such business as may be called up by the Committee on the Judiciary, having been previously reported therefrom.

This order not to interfere with the right of the House to consider general appropriation bills.

M. P. DEADY.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady, and I yield the floor to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That M. P. Deady, United States judge for the district of Oregon, may, at his option, resign as such district judge on or after the 4th of March next, and thereupon shall receive the same salary during the period of his natural life as he is now receiving, in the same manner as if he had reached the age of 70 years at the time of his resignation, as provided by section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of this bill.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask to have the report read?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The report (by Mr. BOATNER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration Senate bill 3537 and after due deliberation recommend the passage of the same.

The Senate report was also read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3537) entitled "A bill for the relief of M. P. Deady," having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

The following facts have been made to appear to your committee by the records of the Senate and other evidence:

M. P. Deady was, on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1853, appointed by President Pierce an associate justice of the Territory of Oregon, under which appointment and by subsequent appointment of February 1, 1854, and confirmation by the Senate on the 4th day of February, 1854, he served as such associate justice until the admission of Oregon as a State, February 14, 1859. On the 7th day of March, A. D. 1859, he was appointed by President Buchanan, and on the 9th day of the same month confirmed by the Senate,

United States district judge for the district of Oregon, and under such appointment he has served in such capacity to the present time, a period of nearly thirty-four years, making a continuous service as a United States judge of nearly forty years.

It has further been made plain to your committee that, by reason of bodily ailments which are permanent, Judge Deady has been rendered physically unable to longer perform the duties of such office. It is further shown that he will not reach the age of 70 years until the year 1894.

Therefore your committee, while recognizing the distinguished judicial services rendered by Judge Deady during his long service and his eminence as a jurist, in view of the foregoing facts report back the bill (S. 3537) with the following amendments and, so amended, recommend its passage:

First amendment. Strike out the preamble.

Second amendment. Strike out the following words in line 3 of the bill: "the said."

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BOATNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9069) for the further continuance of the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, and that the bill be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be further continued under the editorial charge of the editor of the existing Supplement and his assistants.

SEC. 2. That at the end of each session of Congress a pamphlet edition of the permanent and general legislation of the session, with notes, references, and an index, substantially on the plan of the existing Supplement, shall be stereotyped and printed at the Government Printing Office; the plates and all rights thereto to be the property of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the number of copies of said pamphlet and the distribution and sale thereof shall be the same as provided for the printing, distribution, and sale of said Supplement by the act of April 9, 1890, chapter 73 (First Supplement to Revised Statutes, second edition, page 712).

SEC. 4. That there shall be paid to said editor for himself and his assistants, including the cost of all clerical labor and other expenses the sum of $1,000 for preparing each pamphlet as aforesaid.

Mr. OATES. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE].

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire a vote on the bill.

An amendment in section 4, recommended by the committee, striking out the words "each pamphlet as aforesaid" and inserting "the pamphlet for each session of Congress," was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STOCKDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN WYOMING.

Mr. OATES. I call up the bill (H. R. 507) to provide for a term of the United States circuit and district court at Evanston, Wyo.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, and until otherwise provided by law, there shall be held annually, on the first Monday in July, a term of the circuit and district courts for the district of Wyoming at the town of Evanston, in said district, said term to be in addition to the terms now required by law to be held at the city of Cheyenne, in said district.

SEC. 2. That the marshal and clerk of said district shall each, respectively, appoint at least one deputy, to reside in said town of Evanston, unless he himself shall reside there, and he shall also maintain an office at that place.

SEC. 3. That the judge of the United States circuit or district court for said district may, by order, from time to time, appoint and hold special terms of said courts in said district, whenever the interest of the public and the condition of the docket shall so require.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

Section 1, line 5, add "s" to "court."

Section 2, line 4, after "and" insert "he shall." Same line strike out "of holding court."

Section 3, line 3, add "s" to "court."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment of the committee to add "s" to the word "court" in the title was agreed to.

OFFENSES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. OATES. I call up the bill (H. R. 9610) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to offenses against the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1014. For any crime or offense against the United States the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States, or by any commissioner of a circuit court to take bail, or by any chancellor, or judge of a supreme or superior court, chief or first judge of common pleas, mayor of a city, justice of the peace, or other magistrate of any State where he may be found, and agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, at the expense of the United States, be arrested, imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by law has cognizance of the offense. Copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of the said court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearances to testify in the case.

"And it shall be the duty of the marshal, his deputy or other officer who may arrest a person charged with any such crime or offense, to take the defendant before the commissioner or judge having his office in the county where the arrest is made, if there be such office, otherwise before such officer having his office nearest the place of arrest, for a hearing, commitment, or taking bail for trial before said court, and no mileage shall be allowed any officer violating the provisions hereof.

"And where any offender or witness is committed in any district other than where the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district court where said offender or witness is imprisoned, seasonably to issue, and of the marshal to execute a warrant for his removal to the district where the trial is to be had."

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, this is one of four bills which have resulted from the investigation made in pursuance of a resolution of the House of February 1, 1892, authorizing an examination into certain alleged abuses in connection with judicial process of the United States courts in certain States. The resolution directed that the committee should inquire especially into such abuses, as attention should be called by the Attorney-General or the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; and their attention was directed particularly by the Attorney-General and by the accounting officers of the Government to the State of Massachusetts, where it was claimed by the accounting Department and the Attorney-General abuses had existed for a long time.

Our examination resulted in discovering one form of abuse prevalent, as we found from an examination of officers of the various departments, not only in Massachusetts, but in very many States. This form of abuse consisted in a combination between the marshals and the United States commissioners appointed by the circuit court to make fees against the Government. These abuses the present bill proposes to correct. The nature of these abuses I will illustrate.

In Massachusetts, for instance, although there are 18 commissioners appointed by the United States circuit court in pursuance of the provisions of section 627 of the Revised Statutes, these officers being scattered all over the State for the convenience of the people, yet it has been largely the practice to make informations before one commissioner alone, regardless of the residence of the person charged with the offense, and to have the marshal or his deputy proceed to distant portions of the State to arrest the prisoner and take him to Boston for a hearing before this single commissioner.

Mr. Nightingale, of the Attorney-General's office, stated that for several years there had not been a single case brought before any one of the other commissioners; that all the cases were brought before this single officer, the defendants being subjected to the hardship of arrest in distant portions of the State, whence they were brought to Boston for a hearing before this particular commissioner, and to bring their witnesses and bail at great disadvantage and expense or go to prison. By this practice, in violation of the spirit at least of section 1014 of the Revised Statutes as we construe it, large fees have been made against the Government—6 cents a mile each way in favor of the marshal, and 5 cents a mile each way for the travel of witnesses; and the persons going bail for defendants have also been required to come to Boston.

This practice has resulted in making large fees against the Government and putting defendants to great hardship and expense. They have been brought from their homes and their friends and obliged to travel with their witnesses long distances to Boston, where also their sureties have been required to present themselves. In this way grave outrages have been committed in Massachusetts and in other States.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. As I understand, the Attorney-General has advised the enactment now proposed.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I think the measure must meet the prompt approval of the House.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I fully agree with the gentleman. The bill having been recommended by the Attorney-General and by the accounting Department of the Government as calculated to remedy existing evils, I have no doubt it will pass without objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WOLVERTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OFFENSES ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Mr. OATES. I call up the bill (H. R. 2625) to provide for the punishment of offenses on the high seas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person not one of the crew who, alone or with others not of the crew, upon the high seas, or other waters within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, on board any vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States or any citizen thereof, in defiance of the authority of the master or officer thereof, shall create any riot, or disorder, or shall engage in any affray, or shall commit any breach of the peace; or who shall hinder, obstruct, or resist the crew in performance or execution of any lawful orders or commands of the master, or officers of such vessel, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both.

SEC. 2. That every person not one of the crew who, upon the high seas, or other waters within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, on board any vessel belonging in whole or part to the United States, or any citizen thereof, shall willfully assault, strike, or injure another, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding two years.

SEC. 3. That section 5359 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting after the words "commanding officer thereof" the words "and if any passenger or other person, not one of the crew, aids, abets, or incites or encourages the crew, or any one of them, to commit any of the before-mentioned acts," so that when amended said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 5359. If any one of the crew of an American vessel on the high seas, or other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, endeavors to make a revolt or mutiny on board such vessel, or combines, conspires, or confederates with any other person on board to make such revolt or mutiny, or solicits, incites, or stirs up any other of the crew to disobey, or resist the lawful orders of the master, or other officer of such vessel, or to refuse or to neglect their proper duty on board thereof, or to betray their proper trust, or assembles with others in a tumultuous and mutinous manner, or makes a riot on board thereof, or unlawfully confines the master, or other commanding officer thereof, or if any passenger or other person, not one of the crew, aids, abets, or incites or encourages the crew or any one of them to commit any of the before-mentioned acts, he shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 4. That section 5360 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding the words: "Any passenger or other person not one of the crew who shall, on board such vessel and in any of the places before mentioned, combine, conspire, and confederate with the crew or any of them, to commit any such offense, or without previous confederation shall aid and assist in the commission of the same, shall be subject to the same punishment as a member of the crew;" so that when amended said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 5360. If any one of the crew of an American vessel on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, unlawfully and with force, or by fraud or intimidation, usurps the command of such vessel from the master or other lawful officer in command thereof, or deprives him of authority and command on board, or resists or prevents him in the free and lawful exercise thereof, or transfers such authority and command to another not lawfully entitled thereto, he is guilty of a revolt and mutiny, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than ten years. Any passenger or other person, not one of the crew, who shall, on board such vessel and in any of the places before mentioned, combine, conspire, and confederate with the crew or any of them to commit any such offense, or without previous confederation shall aid and assist in the commission of the same, shall be subject to the same punishment as a member of the crew."

Mr. OATES. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to occupy a moment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I have not examined this bill very closely; but I understand it embraces some provisions to which organized labor objects very seriously. I would like to submit as my argument a letter from the secretary of the Seamen's Union of San Francisco.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 15, 1892.

DEAR SIR: According to press dispatches a bill to punish nonmembers of crews under the mutiny laws, or some such title, passed the Senate on Monday last. This innocent-looking bill has in it that which will make organization among seamen nearly impossible by punishing for inciting to riot or mutiny anyone who shall speak to and urge upon seamen, no matter how shipped, to leave the vessel in which they may be engaged. It is introduced to prevent any man coming aboard of any vessel telling the men of their legal rights, and to meet a decision rendered in the southern district of California this autumn. Judge Maguire has written to JERRY SIMPSON about the matter upon our request, and the points are set forth in his letter more clearly than I can; but let me say that it is equivalent to passing a law making it a felony to speak to a scab who has taken a striker's place, no matter if you only speak to him in the most polite terms, inducing him to quit scabbing is the crime.

There are other and perhaps more potent reasons why this bill should be defeated. The mercantile marine of the world has got along without any such law since ships sailed. Why then should it be enacted now? This bill, if we understand it right, will include passengers aboard steamers or sailing vessels. Surely it is enough to subject seamen to the barbarous laws handed down from the time Columbus discovered America. What is the probability of restoring to this country the passenger trade of the Atlantic under such laws; laws which never were needed until the seamen tried to rid themselves of the degradation and slavery inherent in the crimping system, such as is described in the inclosed book, and gradually being beaten off the field through the organization of men going down to the sea in ships? All our effort seems to be stopped by legislation. The seamen never got any law for their benefit until they were organized, and we have expended over $10,000 in enforcing the law as it stands on the statue books, and for every point we have gained the Congress has been induced to pass a new law covering just that particular subject. Thus in 1888 one single innocent looking little amendment threw the sick seaman on his own resources The amendment of 1890 brought the coast under the punitive statutes of the commissioners' act of 1872, as you will see by the inclosed supplement to the Coast Seaman's Journal.

Our hope is in this House to defeat the last attempt of retrogressive legislation. It seems just a little out of place to subsidize vessels and then drive seamen from the seas.

With respectful anxiety we await the result.

Yours respectfully,

A. FURUSETH.
Secretary Seamen's Union.

Hon. JOHN DAVIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the House that the apprehensions which seem to be entertained by the writer of the letter just read are not in the slightest degree justified by the terms of the proposed statute. It is very important when a ship is at sea that the commander of the ship should be in control of it. It is utterly impossible to intrust the control of the ship to the ship's company.

Sailors have always been under this law. Now it is proposed that the passengers shall be amenable to the United States courts for certain crimes of violence and for incitement to munity on board ship.

I can see no reason whatever why that should not be the case. The passenger could not be under the control of the law on the high seas, except by the enactment of such a statute. The statutes applicable on shore do not extend to such cases on the high seas; and therefore the commanding officers of vessels have found themselves without control on board of their own ships.

Anybody can see at once that unless the commander of the vessel is able to maintain control by law, subject to revision after he arrives on shore, it will be impossible to command the ship properly. There has been lately a certain class of passengers coming from the Canadian coasts which has caused steamboat masters much trouble, it having been found impossible to keep them under control. This provision of law will enable a control to be maintained by the commanding officer of the ship, subject always to revision when the ship touches port—subject to revision by courts of justice.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if this applies to ships while on the high seas or ships while in port?

Mr. REED. It applies only when under the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, either upon the high seas or other waters within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. That may apply to a vessel in port.

Mr. REED. It may apply to a ship in port.

Mr. BLAND. If I understand this bill, there are provisions of it that apply to crews of ships as well as to passengers.

Mr. REED. The law has always applied to the crew.

Mr. BLAND. But it makes very material changes, as I understand it, with regard to the law as now applicable to the crew of the vessel, and extends the same law over the passengers.

Mr. REED. I understand not. It does not make any change in regard to the crew.

Mr. BLAND. If I understood the reading of the bill, several sections of the Revised Statutes are modified or changed.

Mr. REED. Several are revised, because the bill properly recites the section that is sought to be amended. But there is no change with regard to the provisions of law as now applicable to the crews of vessels.

Mr. BLAND. Then it only applies to passengers?

Mr. REED. Only to the passengers and only in cases where crimes of violence are committed or where there is incitement on the part of the passengers to mutiny.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, such a law would be entirely obnoxious on shore, but on shipboard the power must reside somewhere to preserve order, and that power is always subject to review by the law on the arrival of the ship in port.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman what conditions have been changed, or what has transpired on shipboard recently, that leads to the necessity for this law or amendment to a law which has existed for so many years?

Mr. REED. I can not state what particular matters, but I know that such a necessity exists in regard to coastwise steamers and steamers plying between the Canadian ports and Boston and Portland. The owners of vessels plying between these ports and the provinces are desirous that this law should be enacted.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not given to the bill any sufficient study to enable me to have a positive opinion about it, but when there is a letter read here which seems to set forth serious objections I want to know what I am voting for before I do so.

Mr. REED. This bill, I will state, has been unanimously reported from the Judiciary Committee of the House as well as the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BYNUM. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me for an amendment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BYNUM. This bill amends sections 5359 and 5360 of the Revised Statutes so as to include passengers. That is, it makes passengers amenable for the commission of the same crimes that the crews of vessels are now liable for.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. BYNUM. And I can see no reason in the world why Congress should object to the passage of it. It does not change the law so far as crews of vessels are affected a single iota. But any of the passengers who engage in mutiny or riot are amenable. There is no law now to punish them, and no jurisdiction of the master of the vessel over them.

I understand that this also applies to vessels on the Great Lakes.

Mr. REED. I should have so stated. I should add that this proposed law has already been applied to lake commerce.

Mr. BYNUM. And I understand that there is at times considerable trouble on the lakes, notably in the large cities, from Chicago and from places where excursion boats are out on the lakes, and the passengers engage in riot, in which case the officers of the ship have no remedy. This now places the vessels on the high seas as well as on the lakes in a position to be properly controlled by the commanding officers, and simply extends the law, which has been in existence in regard to the crews for a long time, to embrace the passengers.

Mr. REED. From which no difficulties have arisen, so far as I know.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to make this remark: This country has had vessels on the ocean not less than two hundred years, and it seems to me now that if a new law is claimed to be necessary, there ought to be some strong reason advanced for the passage of that new law. Otherwise it seems to me that, when placed on our inquiry as we have been by this letter from the Sailor's Union, we ought to go slowly until we understand the matter thoroughly.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to a third reading, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS) there were—ayes 102, noes, 7.

Mr. DAVIS. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. REED and Mr. DAVIS.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 162, noes 7.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. REED, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RETURNS OF FEES BY DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, MARSHALS AND CLERKS.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9612) to amend section 833 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to semiannual returns of fees by District attorneys, marshals, and clerks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 833 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 833. That every district attorney, clerk of a district court, clerk of a circuit court, and marshal shall, on the 1st day of January and July, in each year, or within thirty days thereafter, make to the Attorney-General, in such form as he may prescribe, a written return of the half year ending on said days, respectively, of all fees and emoluments of his office of every name and character, including all naturalization fees and all necessary expenses of his office, including necessary clerk hire, together with the vouchers for the payment of the same for such last half year. He shall state separately in such return the fees and emoluments received or payable under the bankrupt act and a true statement of all naturalization fees; and every marshal shall state separately therein the fees and emoluments received or payable for services rendered by himself personally, those paid or received for services rendered by each of his deputies, naming him, and the proportion of such fees and emoluments which, by the terms of his services, each deputy is to receive. Said return shall be certified by the oath of the officer making them."

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the close of the bill the words:

"That in each of the three judicial districts of the State of Alabama there shall be a district attorney and a marshal."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the section as proposed to be amended.

The section, as proposed to be amended, was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OATES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMISSIONERS' FEES.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9611) to amend section 847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to commissioners' fees.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 847. For administering an oath, 10 cents.

"For taking an acknowledgment, 25 cents.

"For issuing a warrant, docketing the same and all proceedings on a criminal charge where no arrest is made, $2.

"For hearing and deciding on criminal charges, including docketing of same, recognizances of defendant, sureties, and witnesses, and return to court, and all proceedings thereon, $5, and no more.

"For attending a reference of a litigated matter in a civil case of law, in equity or admiralty, in pursuance of an order of court, $3 per day.

"For taking and certifying depositions to file, 25 cents for each folio.

"For a copy of same furnished to a party on request, 10 cents for each folio, to be paid by the party requesting the same.

"For issuing any warrant or writ and for any other services, the same compensation as is allowed clerks for like services.

"For issuing a warrant under any treaty with any foreign government, $2.

"For hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense and arrested under the provisions of any such treaty, $5 for each case, and no more.

"For the examination and certificate in any case for application for discharge of poor convicts imprisoned for nonpayment of a fine or fines and costs, $5 for each examination and certificate, and no more."

Mr. BLAND. I would like to know if the effect of this bill is to increase or decrease the amount of commissioners' fees?

Mr. OATES. It is to define the fees in cases where there was no definition before, and it is rather a reduction.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does it allow a fee in any case where none was allowed before?

Mr. OATES. It does not. Where there was no specific provisions as to the amount larger fees were charged, the committee thought from the evidence before them, than should be charged.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I understand the gentleman to say that the effect of the bill is to reduce fees of commissioners?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to know how that is, because these fees are enormous in some cases now.

Mr. OATES. This is a reduction. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the intention of this bill is to reduce the fees of United States commissioners, which have become enormous in these latter days. The fee bill for commissioners was passed in 1853, and did very well as people understood legal proceedings at that time; but commissioners have gained considerable knowledge on the question of fee-making since the passage of that act, and the result has been that there have been continual disputes between the First Comptroller's Office and United States commissioners throughout the United States.

For instance, in the case of one commissioner in Boston, where his total bills for a certain number of years were $41,801.31, the Comptroller's department reduced the amount to $21,864.73. That arose from a difference of construction of this old fee bill. These differences have occurred largely under one clause of it which provides that for hearing and deciding on criminal charges $5 a day for the time necessarily employed shall be paid. The commissioner who desires to make fees would have a suit brought, a day fixed for the hearing, and on that day would find it inconvenient to proceed and adjourn the hearing to another day, and so on from day to day, making $5 a day for each hearing. The amendment that we have offered is for the purpose of limiting the total amount of fees that the commissioner shall receive for a hearing and binding over of defendant or taking his recognizance for appearing in court to $5.

In one case in Boston, for instance, the United States commissioner was also the chief supervisor of elections. Mr. Hallett, who was chief supervisor of elections, instituted before Mr. Hallett, the circuit court commissioner, proceedings for the arrest of about eighty persons just prior to a Presidential election. Then Mr. Hallett, the chief supervisor of elections, appeared before Mr. Hallett, the circuit court commissioner, and tried to satisfy Mr. Hallett, the United States circuit court commissioner, that he had a prima facie case to "send them up," as they call it in the United States court; and if Mr. Hallett, the chief supervisor of elections, failed to satisfy Mr. Hallett, the United States commissioner, that he had sufficient evidence, he would not issue a warrant.

In twenty-six of these cases Mr. Hallett, the chief supervisor, failed to satisfy himself that he had sufficient evidence to issue a warrant on, and he did not issue warrants in these twenty-six; but he charged up fees under this fee bill for himself for $4.15 in each instance; in other cases he failed to satisfy himself that the defendant should be held, and he discharged them; so that this dispute between the United States commissioners and the accounting department has been going on for years, resulting in the allowance of about one-half of what these commissioners charge.

Mr. OATES. If my friend will allow me, I will state that from the evidence taken by the committee in its investigation it appears that this practice prevails in many other States besides Massachusetts.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I would say that it prevails in Alabama just as well as in Massachusetts, and in almost every other State. I only selected this one case as an instance of how this fee bill may be abused. The amendment to it limits all that a commissioner may receive in a case where he issues his warrant, has a hearing, binding the defendant over for his appearance at court, or discharges him, and limits him under the bill to the sum of $5 and no more, if he only issues a warrant; and if after hearing he refuses to issue a warrant, he is limited to $2; so that in no case can he make $4.15 when he does not issue a warrant at all.

The report of the evidence that we had before the committee of the clerks and heads of departments show that this fee bill should be thoroughly revised, and we have done the best we could with it. The effect of this amendment will be to greatly reduce the commissioner's fees in many respects and will do away with this abuse.

A fee bill should be devised by some one in the departments acquainted with these irregularities and who knows what is best to correct them; but, as I have already said, we have done the best we could, and the result will be to correct abuses that are taking out of the Treasury of this country a large amount of money annually.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OATES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLERKS' FEES.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9613) to amend section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to clerks' fees.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following to the end of said section: For filing declaration of intention to become a citizen by an alien, $1; for final papers and all services connected therewith, $2.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OATES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3580) to amend the proviso to be found in connection with the free-delivery service, page 569, twenty-fourth volume, Statutes at Large;

A bill (S. 3581) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads," and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3643) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Bridger abandoned military reservation, in the State of Wyoming;

Joint resolution (S. R. 135) making appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice; and Joint resolution (S. R. 121) authorizing payment, under act of August 30, 1890, to the State of Virginia, upon the assent of the governor, heretofore given, till adjournment of next session of the Legislature thereof.

TO REGULATE THE RIGHT OF APPEAL.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9979) to regulate the right of appeal in certain cases.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing contained in the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal, and so forth," nor in the "joint resolution to provide for the organization of the circuit courts of appeal," of the same date, shall be held or construed to deprive the Supreme Court of the United States of jurisdiction for the period of two years, according to section 1008 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to entertain writs of error, or appeals from judgments, decrees, or orders of circuit and district courts of the United States rendered before the passage of the above act and resolution, if at the time the circuit courts of appeals provided for by that act were organized the terms of the act did not allow a writ of error or appeal to the said circuit courts of appeals from said judgments, decrees, or orders.

SEC. 2. That all writs of error or appeals which shall have been dismissed from the Supreme Court contrary to the provisions of this act, prior to its passage, may be reinstated therein on motion within one year from the passage of this act, after reasonable notice to the parties, or their counsel, at whose instance the same were dismissed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 4, section 2, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "six months."

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply this: Under the bill establishing the circuit courts of appeal, there were certain cases transferable to those courts, in which an appeal could be taken to those courts. Under the former law two years were allowed. That was overlooked in that bill, and those parties desiring an appeal where a part of the time had expired lost the right of appeal; and this bill is simply to reserve the right of appeal which they had under the old law, but which was taken away without knowing it under the new law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OATES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 1185) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask to dispense with the reading of the Senate bill. The committee has unanimously reported a substitute for the Senate bill, and I desire to have it read.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman if that bill shows a difference between the Senate bill and the House bill?

Mr. OATES. It is the Senate bill that the Clerk is reading.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. You say that the House committee offers a substitute. What is the difference between the two bills?

Mr. OATES. There is a considerable difference.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. One material difference in the proposition is, that the Senate proposes to add three new judges to the present Supreme Court; this proposes to constitute an intermediate court of appeals consisting of three judges. That is the difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). The Clerk will report the bill. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not object to that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let the substitute be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10010) to establish a court of appeals in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be, and there is hereby, established in the District of Columbia a court, to be known as the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, which shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office during good behavior.

SEC. 2. That the said justices shall each receive an annual salary of $6,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, except the chief justice, who shall receive $6,500.

SEC. 3. That each of said justices, before he enters upon the duties of his office, shall take the oath prescribed by law to be taken by the judges of the courts of the United States.

SEC. 4. That there shall be a clerk of said court of appeals, to be appointed by the court, who shall receive as compensation for his services, in the discretion of the court, an annual salary not to exceed the sum of $3,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, and who shall give bond, such as the court may determine to be satisfactory, for the faithful performance of his duties; and his duties shall be such as the court may from time to time prescribe. The court shall regulate from time to time the fees to be charged by the said clerk, which shall be accounted for at least once in each quarter and paid into the Treasury of the United States; and said clerk shall receive such allowance for clerical assistance and necessary expenditures in the conduct of his office as the court may determine by special or general order in the premises, but not to exceed the sum of $2,000 in any one year, payable as aforesaid at the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 5. That said court of appeals may appoint a crier at a compensation not to exceed $100 a month, and a messenger at a compensation not to exceed $80 a month, both payable at the Treasury of the United States, who shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by the court.

SEC. 6. That the said court of appeals shall establish such terms of the court, not less than three in each year, as to it may seem proper and expedient; and it shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the transaction of the business to be brought before it, and for the time and method of the entry of appeals and for giving notice of appeals thereto from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and such other rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper in the premises.

If any member of the court shall be absent on account of illness or other cause during the session thereof, or shall be disqualified from hearing and determining any particular cause by having been of counsel therein, or by having as a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia previously passed upon the merits thereof, or if for any reason whatever it shall be impracticable to obtain a full court of three justices, the member or members of the court who shall be present shall designate the justice or justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to temporarily fill the vacancy or vacancies so created, and the justice or justices so designated shall sit in said court of appeals and perform the duties of a member thereof while such vacancy or vacancies exist: Provided, That no justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall, while on the bench of said court of appeals, sit in review of any judgment, decree, or order which he shall have himself entered or made.

SEC. 7. That any party aggrieved by any final order, judgment, or decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or of any justice thereof, may appeal therefrom to the court of appeals hereby created; and upon such appeal the court of appeals shall review such order, judgment, or decree, and affirm, reverse, or modify the same as shall be just: Provided, however, That all causes now pending before the said supreme court in general term, together with the original papers and record entries duly certified, shall by appropriate orders duly entered of record be transferred and delivered to the court of appeals hereby created, which said court of appeals is hereby vested with authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the causes so transferred. The appellate power and jurisdiction of said general term is hereby abrogated and abolished, and no causes shall hereafter be heard in the said general term. Appeals shall also be allowed to said court of appeals from all interlocutory orders of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by any justice thereof, whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders for the appointment of receivers, granting injunctions, dissolving writs of attachment, and the like; and also from any other interlocutory order, in the discretion of said court of appeals, whenever it is made to appear to said court upon petition that it will be in the interest of justice to allow such appeal.

SEC. 8. That any final judgment or decree of the said court of appeals may be reëxamined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error or appeal, in all causes in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, in the same manner and under the same regulations as heretofore provided for in cases of writs of error on judgment or appeals from decrees rendered in the supreme court of the District of Columbia; and also in all cases, without regard to the sum or value of the matter in dispute, wherein is involved the validity of any patent or copyright, or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States.

SEC. 9. That the determination of appeals from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, now vested in the aforesaid general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in pursuance of the provisions of section 780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to said District, shall hereafter be, and the same is hereby, vested in the court of appeals hereby created.

SEC. 10. That the opinion of the said court of appeals in every case shall be rendered in writing, and shall be filed in such case as part of the record thereof.

SEC. 11. That the said court of appeals shall have power to issue all necessary and proper remedial and prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction.

SEC. 12. That the Attorney-General is hereby empowered and directed to provide suitable rooms and accommodations in the city of Washington for the court of appeals hereby created and for the transaction of its business.

SEC. 13. That the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia shall execute the orders and processes of the court of appeals hereby created in the same manner as he now executes those of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 14. That the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $5,000 each, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 15. That hereafter one-half of the amounts paid on account of salary to the justices of the court of appeals hereby created, and to the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. That this act shall take effect on the 3d day of April, 1893, said day being the first day of the April term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term.

SEC. 17. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the point of order that that bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OATES. I did not yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What point did the gentleman make?

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that the bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole. It provides for new officers, it provides salaries, and everything of that sort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better go into Committee of the Whole. It will take but a moment.

Mr. OATES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10010) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, as the bill has just been read in full in the House, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of it in the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. OATES. I desire to offer an amendment on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 2, section 9, after the word "patents," insert the words "in interference cases and of appeals."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, is general debate closed upon this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is not closed, and this amendment is not in order at this time if objection is made.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I would like to have the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] explain briefly wherein the Committee on the Judiciary claim that the bill presented to the House is superior to the organization of the courts of this District provided for by the Senate bill.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CULBERSON, who is detained from the House to-day by the serious illness of his wife, has prepared a very elaborate and thorough report on this measure, which fully explains it, and I ask to have that report read.

Mr. OATES. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, that I would ask to have read the report made by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas, which explains the condition of the courts here and the necessity for this bill. If the gentleman will pay attention to the reading of that report he will hear, very succinctly and strongly stated, the reasons why this bill is preferable. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CULBERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary have considered the bill (S. 1185) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and herewith report a substitute for the bill and recommend that the substitute may be passed, and submit the following reasons for its passage:

Upon a thorough investigation by the committee of the results of the existing judicial system of the District of Columbia, the committee believes that an imperative necessity exists for an increase of the judicial force of the District. The delays which attend the determination of civil and criminal causes have been for many years a cause for universal complaint.

This evil increases from year to year, as the business of the court increases, and unless removed a practical denial of justice by the courts must be the result.

The committee has been furnished with the following information, which will tend to show the importance of increasing the judicial force of this District:

Before the reorganization of the judicial establishment in 1863 the judiciary of the District of Columbia consisted of five judges, three of whom were assigned to the circuit court, one to the criminal court, and one to the orphans' court. Criminal jurisdiction in minor offenses was also exercised by the mayors of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and by a number of magistrates. The population of the District at that time was 75,080, being 15,016 inhabitants to each judge.

At the present time, with a population of 230,392, there are but six justices (two judges of the police court having succeeded to the powers of the magistrates in criminal cases, with increased jurisdiction), being 38,398 inhabitants to each justice of this court.

The total assessed value of the property within the District of Columbia in 1860 is estimated at about $48,400,000, which was about $9,680,000 for each of the five judges at that day.

Last published assessment of the private property within the District for purposes of taxation		$153,307,541
Amount of property not taxable (estimated by the Commissioners):
United States property	$127,327,638
Property of the District government	2,612,276
Exempt property	7,334,167
Total amount		290,581,610

Which would show $48,430,268 for each of the six justices on the entire valuation, and $25,557.25 on the valuation for taxable purposes.

Since 1860 the operations of the General Government have amplified to an amazing extent, and this increase is felt in a greater degree in this jurisdiction than in any other portion of the country. The population of the District of Columbia is larger than that of either of six States of the Union, and the amount of the assessed values in the District is greater than that in each of six of the States; and the entire valuation exceeds the assessed value of property in each of sixteen of the States.

Such an expansion of wealth and population would necessarily imply a corresponding growth in the amount of litigation: and the facts show even a greater proportionate increase in the business of the courts.

During the sixty years from 1803 to 1863 the entire number of equity suits brought was not more than 2,500. From 1863 to February 1, 1892, the number brought amounts to 13,690. Within the latter period more than 32,571 civil cases have been brought before the special term holding the circuit court, notwithstanding the extension of the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace in civil cases beyond $50, which withdrew from that court a large class of cases formerly contributing a considerable part of the business of the old circuit court.

Since 1863, 18,849 cases have been before the criminal court, although the police court has exclusive jurisdiction of many minor offenses, which during the past year numbered 18,069 cases, and for the last three years numbered 48,918.

For the twenty-six years before 1863, the number of administration cases before the orphans' court was 2,742.

From 1863 to February, 1892, the administration cases in that court number 8,651.

The guardianship cases during the first-named period, before 1863, numbered 935, and since 1863 they amount to 3,030.

The increased values of the estates involved in the business in that court is very marked, as might be expected from the greater prosperity of the people.

Besides the great mass of prosecutions in the police court, the number of cases disposed of in the criminal court of the District of Columbia exceeds in amount more than one-fourth of the entire criminal business in all the United States courts of the country.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court of this District is more extensive and varied than that of any court in the country, except the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is charged with all the powers and jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and with all criminal jurisdiction (except in petty cases triable in the police court, many of which may come to the criminal court by appeal). It is the only court authorized to hear appeals from the Commissioner of Patents, in certain cases, and it possesses all the extensive and varied common-law jurisdiction belonging to the highest courts in Maryland in 1801, by virtue of which it has cognizance of application for mandamus against officials of the Government.

A large part of the litigation thus devolved upon this court is directly the consequence of its location at the seat of Government and the immense business transactions connected with its operations.

The civil business brought before the equity and circuit courts for the greater part is such as appertains to large cities, and presents constant questions of difficulty in commercial law, frequently involving large amounts.

There are many other duties confided to the court besides these mentioned.

Since 1863, 3,425 foreigners have been naturalized here, and 433 bankruptcy cases have been adjudicated.

In matters of extradition the chief justice, and in case of his absence or disability the other justices, exercise the powers and perform the duties of the chief executive of the State, and the court is frequently engaged in controversies arising out of the condemnation of real estate for public uses.

The plan of relief presented by this bill has been met and is combated in the main by a proposition to add three associate judges to the court as now constituted, and from the members of the judicial body thus increased to create a permanent general term which shall have the same appellate jurisdiction that it now exercises.

The proposed addition of three associate justices would make the supreme court of the District to be composed of a chief justice and eight associate justices, each having the same power and authority. Without further legislation the composition of the general term, which is in reality a court of appeal, would be left to be determined by the members of the court themselves, as they might themselves from time to time agree.

Those who appeared before the committee in opposition to the court-of-appeals bill did not urge that the designation of the members of the court who should sit in general term should thus be left to the determination of the members of the court themselves.

They advocate a bill (H. R. 6125) which provides for the appointment of three additional judges, and that the general term should then be composed of the chief justice and the two or three associate justices senior in service, and that as vacancies occurred in the general term their places should be filled by the selection or promotion of other members of the court according to the same system of seniority of commission.

Such a method of creating a general term or appellate court would take from the Executive all power of direct appointment to what is in reality a court of last resort in respect of the greater part of the judicial business of the District.

It would make mere length of service the sole qualification for a seat on the bench in the general term.

It would effectually prevent the designation of a junior judge to sit in general term, no matter how conspicuous might be his especial fitness for the duties of that position.

It would place and continuously keep in the most important places in the judicial system those and those only who were nearest the period for retirement, and who, for that reason, might naturally be supposed to bring to the performance of their duties the least energy and vigor.

It would cause more frequent changes in the composition of the court, because all of its members would at all times necessarily be of advanced age.

It is not believed that in the history of the judicial system of the United States any precedent can be found to justify such an extraordinary plan of organizing an appellate tribunal.

The increased salaries provided for by this bill can be defrayed without direct charge upon the Government from the large sums paid into the Treasury by the courts of the District of Columbia, arising from fees and forfeitures, etc.

These sums, derived from private suitors, are applied primarily to the payment of the expenses of the clerk's office, including the salaries of clerks, deputies, and assistants.

The amount, net, paid into the Treasury from this source annually amounts to a large sum. From the police court alone there has been paid into the Treasury during the years 1889, 1890, and 1891 the total sum of $142,185.71.

This large sum of money is derived for the most part from the citizens of the District. Besides, the change of the law regulating the fees of certain officers of the District, already agreed upon by the House and Senate, will add to the receipts of the Government, from court fees, etc., of the District, a sum sufficient, it is believed, to defray the entire expenses of the court contemplated by this measure.

By every consideration this District is entitled to a court of last resort which shall be equal in all respects to the court of last resort of any State of the Union.

Mr. OATES. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama this question: Whether the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia when sitting in general term do not now have the same appellate jurisdiction as the judges of this new court will have if it shall be constituted?

Mr. OATES. They do, except that this bill somewhat enlarges the appellate jurisdiction of the court. In further reply to the gentleman's question, I will state that the members of the District bar came before the Judiciary Committee at different times and expressed their views upon this general subject. They differed as to the best plan to relieve the courts of the pressure of business; in other words, to enable them to do the business brought before them. Some were of the opinion that the bill passed by the Senate embodied the better plan, which was to continue the court in general term by a detail of the older judges, and let them go on pretty much the same way they are doing now, and at the same time to increase the number of the judges.

The Judiciary Committee, after hearing both sides long and patiently and considering all the reasons presented, came to the conclusion that the better plan was to have a separate court of three judges, to constitute a court of appeal. After hearing all these gentlemen of the bar most respectfully and attentively and weighing and considering the advantages of each plan suggested, the members of the committee were, I believe, unanimous in deciding upon the one which is now before us.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama what induced the committee to make the tenure of these judges for life?

Mr. OATES. In reply to that I will state that the district judges have always been treated and considered as United States judges and hence have a life tenure.

Mr. BAILEY. But the gentleman from Alabama does not, of course, contend that under the Constitution they must have a life tenure?

Mr. OATES. No; that is perhaps a question for the Supreme Court of the United States. I do not know whether it has been passed upon or not, but there is some doubt possibly as to whether they have a life tenure.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Alabama will permit me to say that he knows very well that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that a citizen of this District can not bring a suit in a Federal court, and therefore, of course, the Supreme Court of the United States will not hold that a judge appointed for the District of Columbia is a United States judge within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. OATES. That is a question yet to be determined.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama for his opinion.

Mr. OATES. It is not necessary for the proper consideration of this bill for me to give an opinion on that question.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; then I shall offer an amendment.

Mr. OATES. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to discuss this bill, but desire to make a statement in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES]. The proposition here is not only to increase the judicial force of the District of Columbia, but also to change the judicial system which has existed here, I believe, for a period of thirty years. On this question of the increase of the judicial force permit me to say that you can not find in any portion of the United States containing the same population as the District of Columbia more judges than you have here to-day. What are the facts? You have six supreme court judges and two police justices, the latter having powers much beyond those which are conferred upon magistrates in the States.

I will not dispute the fact that there may be some necessity for an increase of the judicial force; but I wish to state to the House that the leading lawyers of this city—I will not say all of them, but many of them—are opposed to this measure and opposed to changing the present judicial system. They say, what every member of this House must know, that by the addition, not of three judges, but of two, all the judicial business of the District can be well attended to, and attended to without delay.

Mr. OATES. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WISE. I have said about all that I care to say except this: Here we have in the District of Columbia a judicial system with which the leading lawyers of this city are satisfied; and the report which comes from the Judiciary Committee does not show that this system is in any respect faulty. It is not claimed that the system has not answered its purpose. Why, then, I ask, should this House create a new court which necessitates the creation and appointment of new officers and an increase of expense to litigants. I can see no necessity for a new court in the District of Columbia, because the supreme court of this District has the same appellate jurisdiction as we propose to confer upon the court to be created by this bill.

Mr. OATES. My friend from Virginia is mistaken. The bill will not increase the cost of litigation to litigants.

Mr. WISE. It will entail increased expense upon somebody, because the constitution of this new court, as will appear by an examination of the bill, requires that there shall be new clerks, new criers, and other officers appointed. Somebody must pay these additional expenses. Upon whom will this expense fall? I see no necessity for increasing the expenses of the Government in this way when the present court, in the opinion of the ablest lawyers of the District, is sufficient to answer all the purposes of justice.

Mr. OTIS. I would like to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who is in charge of this bill. Why is it that the salaries of the supreme court judges are by section 14 made payable out of the Treasury of the United States, while by the provisions of section 15 the other judges are paid to the extent of one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The language of the fourteenth section is "payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States," not payable out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. OATES. Section 15 provides—

That hereafter one-half of the amounts paid on account of salary to the justices of the court of appeals hereby created, and to the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. OTIS. Are the salaries of the judges of the two courts paid in the same way?

Mr. OATES. Of course.

Mr. OTIS. Then why make the salaries of the judges of this new court larger than the salaries of the judges of the supreme court?

Mr. OATES. Because the new court is a court of appeals—a higher court.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been pressed upon the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary for a great many months, and has been carefully considered by the committee, who have had the benefit of the suggestions of gentlemen of the District bar, to whom the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] has referred. And there has not been from any member of the bar of this District a statement that these additional judges are not needed. In fact the extent of the jurisdiction of the courts of the District and the amount of the business which they do render it absolutely certain that no six men can do the work that is to be done.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment? I have from one of the leading lawyers of this District the statement that if two judges should be added to the number now existing the judicial force would be amply sufficient.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. One or two legal gentlemen suggested before the committee that possibly such an arrangement would do. In point of fact, however, as was ascertained, the objection to the creation of the new court and the appointment of new judges was founded upon a feeling of sympathy and respect for the present members of the supreme court of the District, and that alone.

Now, I join with these gentlemen in their respect for that court, but I deny that there is anything in this bill interfering in the slightest degree with their dignity or rights. But, Mr. Chairman, even if such a provision did exist in the bill the welfare of the community is greater than that consideration.

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Virginia that there is no community in the United States that has so many judges, in comparison to its population, as this District. In that the gentleman is entirely mistaken. For all the purposes and duties he has named they will probably exceed; but the gentleman himself will admit, all lawyers here admit, that the work is beyond their power.

There is, it has been stated, almost a practical denial of justice here for that reason. But the great objection to this matter of the addition of two or three judges, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, is that they act singly in the court below and in general term act together, and on appeals coming before them review their own decisions or the decisions of their colleagues.

Mr. WISE. That is not correct. The judge who makes the ruling below does not sit on the appeal.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is true, but he reviews the decisions of his brethren, of his colleagues on the court, and may be induced by sympathy or jealousy to acquiesce in rulings which otherwise may not meet his approval.

Mr. CASTLE. Is that not true with reference to the Federal system throughout the United States?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. No, sir.

Mr. CASTLE. When was it changed?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman knows that we changed it by the passage of the court of appeals bill. We created the circuit court of appeals to avoid that very difficulty. We could not do it entirely, because the other body objected, but we did the best we could. This House proposed to divorce the two courts; and under every well regulated system of jurisprudence it has been done.

The fact that a man does not sit in review of his own decisions, but in review of the decisions of his colleagues or brethren, does not avoid the difficulty.

Mr. Chairman, there is but one clause in this bill to which I object, and I have waived my objection in regard to that, in view of the importance of the enactment, and that is in reference to the salaries. This is a United States court and United States judges ought to have their salaries paid just as they are paid in the districts of the States or Territories. But by the provisions of this bill that is avoided; so that the expenses of the courts of the United States here would be less by this bill than under the present law.

The committee will also take notice that this bill does not go into effect until in April. That has not been done for the purpose of giving the new Administration the appointments in the matter of the judges, although it will have that effect. That was not the purpose; but the purpose was to arrange that the new court would commence operations at a time that would be convenient to all parties.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed and that the bill may be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Before that is submitted I hope the gentleman will allow me a single moment. I would like to know if this bill does not include something more than the creation of an appellate court. I see by section 14 that it is proposed to fix the salary of the several judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia at $5,000 per annum.

Under the existing law I would like to ask the gentleman what is the salary of these judges?

Mr. OATES. It is, I believe, $4,500. The salary of the United States circuit judges now is $5,000, and these judges will have about the same salary.

It certainly costs about as much to live here in Washington as elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection all general debate will be considered as closed, and the Clerk will read the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read section 1, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be, and there is hereby, established in the District of Columbia a court, to be known as the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, which shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office during good behavior.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 8, the words "during good behavior" and insert "for the term of four years."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I am induced to offer this amendment because I am one of those who believe that life tenures are not in harmony with the spirit of a free government like ours. The Constitution itself has fixed that the term of what we call Federal judges shall be during good behavior; but it appears to my mind that the makers of that instrument thought they had then gone far enough in that direction, and they left the term of the other officers to be fixed by Congress when it created the offices.

I desire to say in reply to my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that it is well known that the judges in the District of Columbia hold their office according to the law which creates them and not according to the tenure fixed in the Constitution itself. A different construction would involve this absurdity, that a citizen of the District of Columbia could not be permitted to sue in the courts here, because the Supreme Court of the United States has held that a citizen of this District is not entitled to sue in a Federal court.

In the early history of the Government, as I recollect it now, a citizen of this District attempted to sue a citizen of Virginia in a Federal court, and his petition was dismissed upon the ground that he was not entitled to sue in the Federal courts. The same article of the Constitution which defines the jurisdiction of Federal courts also provides for the appointment of the judges, and if the jurisdiction is not conferred on the courts of this District, then the appointment of their judge is not determined by that article of the Constitution.

I believe that the gentleman from Alabama himself will not venture to declare before this House that under the Constitution a judge of a court in this District must hold his office during the term of good behavior. Then if the Constitution makes no such requirement of us, why is it that those who profess to believe that responsibility back to the people is a salutary restraint upon all officeholders are so anxious to put this court beyond the power which creates it, and even beyond the power of those who create us?

Mr. HOLMAN. Do not the Territorial judges created by Congress hold their offices for four years?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly they do.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the law.

Mr. BAILEY. Not only is it the law, but it ought to be the law; and surely the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] will not deny that proposition.

I recognize that there is a possible necessity for some legislation of this kind. I believe it is important that wherever we have the power to act we should so act as neither to deny any man justice nor to delay any man in the establishment or defense of his just rights; but, sir, it seems to me that there can be no necessity for putting this court beyond the power of the body which creates it. So far as my opinion goes, it appears to me to be our plain duty to put the courts in the District of Columbia precisely upon the same footing with the courts in the various Territories.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Would not your proposition leave us in the attitude of creating partisan judges, holding office for a short term, to review the decisions of judges whose tenure is for life?

Mr. BAILEY. That may be; but it can not be contended that because our predecessors have done wrong, we must pursue the same policy. It would be better to repeal the law which has established the life tenure in the case of those District judges who now hold office, and fix for them a term of years, than it is to create a new court with similar tenures. If it is desirable that all judges in this District shall hold by like tenure, and I certainly think that it is, I prefer reducing them all to a term of years rather than to fix the uniformity of their tenures by making them all hold for life.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] I will say that so far as I have heard him he has not shown any reason for changing the prevailing custom in the appointment of these judges. His amendment, if adopted, would make the tenure of the judges of this court of appeals four years, while the supreme court below them consists of judges who hold office for life or during good behavior. The gentleman says it would be well to revise that law and put them all on the same basis.

But this bill is not for that purpose. This bill is to establish a court of appeals, and there is greater reason, in my judgment, why those judges should hold office during good behavior than the judges of the lower courts or courts of lower jurisdiction. The gentleman has not offered any substantial reason for the change. He has not shown that the present system is a bad one and that it would be improved by adopting his amendment. It would practically make it a political court, the terms of the judges ending and perhaps new ones coming in with each Administration. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BAILEY, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 46, noes 92.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. OATES and Mr. BAILEY.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "during good behavior," in line 8, section 1, and insert the words "during the term of seven years."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, section 1, strike out the words "during good behavior" and insert in lieu thereof the words "during the term of seven years."

Mr. BAILEY. I have no disposition to unnecessarily delay the committee and I am not disposed to argue the question over again, but I want to say this much. If it is right for Congress to create these offices with a life tenure, then the State of Alabama, which honors my distinguished friend [Mr. OATES] with its confidence, is wrong in not giving to the judges of her highest tribunal a life tenure.

The State of Texas, the State of Mississippi, the State of Tennessee, and almost all the States in this Union are wrong, because with two or three exceptions all of them have given to the judges of their highest tribunals a tenure for years only; and it remains to be seen whether members of Congress will vote to establish one rule for Federal officers and another for judges in their States. It seems to me an indefensible anomaly that State judges, though elected by the people, shall be restricted to a term of years, and yet judges in this District who hold their places by appointment shall have a life tenure. The Constitution establishes the rule as to Federal judges, and that far we must go, but further than that I am unwilling to go.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas assumes that because the States have in their peculiar systems of jurisprudence prescribed terms of years for the tenure of their judges, that we ought to change here that which has always been regarded as a part of the Federal system with reference to this District, and do it on the basis of his State and mine. Now, sir, if a proposition were pending to change the Constitution of the United States, to change thereby the Federal system, and instead of giving the judges a life tenure or for good behavior to give them a term of years, the gentleman's argument would be quite pertinent.

Why make an exception in this district when there is a different rule prescribed by the Constitution for the Federal system? In this district, as for the United States courts elsewhere, Congress passes the laws which they are to expound and enforce. I can see no good reason for making a change in respect to this district while a different system prevails, and will continue to prevail unless the Constitution is changed.

I am entirely unable to agree with the gentleman. The gentleman has not shown how or wherein the present system has worked badly. He has not shown to the committee any good reason for the change. The only reason cited is that a different system prevails in the States. I do not think them sufficient. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BAILEY, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 47, noes 113.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said justices shall each receive an annual salary of $6,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, except the chief justice, who shall receive $6,500.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2, line 2, strike out the word "six" and insert "five," and strike out all after "United States" in line 3.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I shall only occupy the attention of the House for a moment. I can see no reason why the salaries of the judges of the court, if it shall be constituted, shall be higher than the salaries of the other judges. They, I believe, received $5,000, and these judges if this bill is passed will receive $6,000. They perform the same duties. They deal with the same questions. There will be no more labor imposed upon them, and I think it is about time to put a stop to this tendency to increase official salaries to an exorbitant amount. Five thousand dollars a year, I believe, is enough.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with my friend from Virginia [Mr. WISE] that the tendency to increase salaries generally is too great; but there has always been, and is now, a difference in the salaries paid to the judges of the different courts. Now, the United States district judges are paid $5,000, the circuit judges are paid $6,000, the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States are paid $10,000 a year. Here the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by this bill, will have their salaries increased to $5,000.

I believe it was done a few years ago upon an appropriation bill, but it was only of a temporary character, and the salaries of the judges of the court of appeals which this bill proposes to establish is an office of as much dignity and importance as the judges of the United States circuit courts, and $6,000 a year, in the opinion of the committee, was not too much. There ought to have been some distinction; there is a distinction always made in the salaries of judges of a higher and a lower court. And so far as the salaries are concerned it is no charge upon the United States, because in the execution of the laws through the courts of this District the sums received doubly pay all the expenses of the court when it is established, as they do now.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE], and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WISE. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 91.

Mr. WISE. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

The committee again divided.

Pending the announcement of the result,

Mr. WISE said: Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the said court of appeals shall establish such terms of the court, not less than three in each year, as to it may seem proper and expedient; and it shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the transaction of the business to be brought before it, and for the time and method of the entry of appeals and for giving notice of appeals thereto from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and such other rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper in the premises.

If any member of the court shall be absent on account of illness or other cause during the session thereof, or shall be disqualified from hearing and determining any particular cause by having been of counsel therein, or by having as a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia previously passed upon the merits thereof, or if for any reason whatever it shall be impracticable to obtain a full court of three justices, the member or members of the court who shall be present shall designate the justice or justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to temporarily fill the vacancy or vacancies so created, and the justice or justices so designated shall sit in said court of appeals and perform the duties of a member thereof while such vacancy or vacancies shall exist: Provided, That no justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall, while on the bench of said court of appeals, sit in review of any judgment, decree, or order, which he shall have himself entered or made.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Section 6, page 3, strike out "such" in line 1, all of line 2, and all of line 3 to the word "and," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a term of court during each and every month in each year."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the gentleman having this bill in charge that I find in section 7 a provision that appeals may be taken from interlocutory orders to this proposed court. That is an innovation upon the practice in the State of Illinois and, I think, in most of the States of the Union.

I do not know from experience whether it is an improvement upon the general practice or not; but certainly if this bill is to provide that all interlocutory orders of the character mentioned in section 7 can be appealed and carried up from the lower court, then this appellate court should be in session every month, so as not to delay the final hearing of any cause where an interlocutory order is made and appealed from; and the amendment I have proposed arranges it so that by retaining in the bill this clause relating to interlocutory orders there will be no delay in the final hearing of a cause.

Mr. OATES. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois I would say that in a good many of the States it has been found absolutely necessary to provide by statute for appeals to be taken from interlocutory orders, decrees, dissolving injunctions, perpetuating injunctions, and other orders of a like character, because very large interests may be involved, and if no appeal can be taken the delays of litigation may work irreparable injury, and I am always in favor of offering to parties who go into court to have their rights adjudicated the amplest facilities to appeal from the decisions of the lower courts.

The gentleman's amendment, I think, is wholly unnecessary, because this bill provides for the holding of three terms of the court, and does not limit the court to that number, and it is to be presumed that the judges will do their duty and sit as continuously as the business may demand, taking perhaps only a vacation of a month or two in the hot season.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the gentleman thinks it advisable so except from my amendment the months of August and September, or July and August, I will agree to that, but it seems to me that this ought to be a court that will be in session continuously in order to hear appeals of the character provided for in section 7.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will examine the bill carefully he will see that it practically provides for the court being in session all the time; but if he puts a requirement in the law that it shall be in session all the time except, for instance, two months in the year, why then the judges will perhaps have to sit regardless of the requirements of the business.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There is where I would disagree with the gentleman in charge of the bill. The bill as it is framed provides for practically three terms of court a year, and it says that the judges may hold oftener if they see proper; but the experience of mankind will, I think, bear me out in the statement that no judges of the character proposed in this bill ever hold terms of court oftener than they are required by law. For that reason, I think that in passing this bill we should frame it so as to protect the interests of litigants. To illustrate, suppose, if you please, that a preliminary injunction is granted, an interlocutory order, and it is appealed to the court provided for in this bill, under the law, without any other provision, that appeal vacates the injunction.

Under the law as it exists four months will elapse before the hearing can be had in this court of appeals, and during that time all of the injury proposed to be prevented by the injunction may be committed, because the taking of the appeal vacates the order of the lower court and remits the parties to their respective rights. That is only one illustration. Take another. Take, for example, the appointment of a receiver, which may be in certain cases an interlocutory order. In a matter of that kind if an appeal is taken from such an order that vacates the appointment of the receiver and the rights of the parties are remitted to their status before the application was made.

Hence it may be that when four months transpire before the term of the appellate court begins the necessity for the proceeding will have passed away, or that the damage which was intended to be prevented will have been consummated. Now, if this amendment of mine is adopted this court will be open continuously; and if a person proposes to appeal from a preliminary injunction, or from the appointment of a receiver, or for any of the causes assigned in section 7, within less than thirty days that order can be taken up by this court of appeals and finally disposed of.

It seems to me that if section 7 is to be retained the amendment which I have submitted should be adopted in the interest of justice. I modify the amendment, adding the words "excepting the months of July and August."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] seems to think that the supreme court will necessarily hold only three terms. The requirement is that they shall hold not less than three, and as many more as may seem to them proper and expedient. Now it is manifest that if a case were pending in which the property of a citizen was about to be taken away from him under an interlocutory order, it would be not only expedient and proper, but highly necessary for the judges to hold court. We are obliged to trust to the honesty and sense of propriety of the judges in these matters.

In the next place, if you hold that only three terms are required, a term may last during the whole period of four months, and if so, there is a continual session of the court. I have never heard any complaint on the ground that a judge of this District did not sit during the whole term for the transaction of business. I think we can trust the judges to this extent. If we find that they fail to do their duty in this matter, we can hereafter pass a bill requiring them to hold further terms.

I wish to say to my friend from Illinois that it is exceedingly important this bill should be passed. There are criminals in this District to-day who are able to give bail and who are never tried simply because there is not the requisite machinery for their trial.

Mr. OATES. Since I have examined the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] I have no objection to it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I understand that the gentleman from Alabama in charge of the bill is ready to accept my amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That any party aggrieved by any final order, judgment, or decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or of any justice thereof, may appeal therefrom to the court of appeals hereby created; and upon such appeal the court of appeals shall review such order, judgment, or decree, and affirm, reverse, or modify the same as shall be just: Provided, however, That all causes now pending before the said supreme court in general term, together with the original papers and record entries duly certified, shall, by appropriate orders duly entered of record, be transferred and delivered to the court of appeals hereby created, which said court of appeals is hereby vested with authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the causes so transferred. The appellate power and jurisdiction of said general term is hereby abrogated and abolished, and no causes shall hereafter be heard in the said general term. Appeals shall also be allowed to said court of appeals from all interlocutory orders of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by any justice thereof, whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders for the appointment of receivers, granting injunctions, dissolving writs of attachment, and the like; and also from any other interlocutory order, in the discretion of said court of appeals, whenever it is made to appear to said court upon petition that it will be in the interest of justice to allow such appeal.

SEC. 8. That any final judgment or decree of the said court of appeals may be reëxamined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error or appeal, in all causes in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, in the same manner and under the same regulations as heretofore provided for in cases of writs of error on judgment or appeals from decrees rendered in the supreme court of the District of Columbia; and also in all cases, without regard to the sum or value of the matter in dispute, wherein is involved the validity of any patent or copyright, or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States.

SEC. 9. That the determination of appeals from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, now vested in the aforesaid general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in pursuance of the provisions of section 780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to said District, shall hereafter be, and the same is hereby, vested in the court of appeals hereby created.

Mr. OATES. I move to amend the section last read by inserting, after the word "Patents," in line 2, the words "in interference cases and of appeals;" so as to read:

That the determination of appeals from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents in interference cases and of appeals, now vested in the aforesaid general term, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the opinion of said court of appeals in every case shall be rendered in writing, and shall be filed in such case as part of the record thereof.

SEC. 11. That the said court of appeals shall have power to issue all necessary and proper remedial and prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction.

SEC. 12. That the Attorney-General is hereby empowered and directed to provide suitable rooms and accommodations in the city of Washington for the court of appeals hereby created and for the transaction of its business.

SEC. 13. That the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia shall execute the orders and processes of the court of appeals hereby created in the same manner as he now executes those of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 14. That the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $5,000 each, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the section just read by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$4,000." The salary now received by each one of these judges is $4,000; so that this bill proposes an increase of $1,000. I do not think this is a time to increase salaries or, for that matter, to create new offices. In the District of Columbia there are now far greater judicial facilities than exist in my State; yet I hear no complaint amongst our people. I think there are ample facilities here for the administration of justice. There are courts enough, judges enough.

I regret that my friend from Alabama has thought it proper to bring forward this bill. This tendency to create additional offices is, as the gentleman himself admits, a bad tendency and a growing one. It seems impossible for a session of this House to pass without some increase of a salary or the creation of some additional office.

It is greatly to the credit, I think, of our predecessors who formerly occupied the floors of Congress that in the little pamphlet which was issued many years ago and is still issued at the close of every session, showing the amount of expenditures, together with the number of offices created and of salaries increased, there was found year after year at the close of that little pamphlet this legend: "No new office created; no salary increased." And it was a matter of pride in the campaign of 1840 (most of you gentlemen are too young to remember that period)—it was a matter of pride to the Whig party in that campaign that during the administration of John Quincy Adams that legend appeared time after time—"No new office created; no salary increased." How far back, gentlemen, do you have to go to find that famous old legend?

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the new offices proposed in this bill should be created. I think the facilities for the administration of justice in this District are ample. They are better than in most States of the Union—better than in my own State. This matter apparently has not been passed upon favorably by the body of the lawyers of this District. Some there may be in favor of it, but the statement made by the gentleman from the Richmond district of Virginia [Mr. WISE]—a gentleman more familiar with this subject than those of us who live at a distance—ought to have weight with this House. That gentleman has informed this Committee of the Whole that the judicial facilities in this District are ample.

I hope that the Committee of the Whole will not approve this bill; that we shall stop awhile in this fearful progress of creating new offices and increasing salaries. It is time we should stop. We are obliged to impose upon our people heavy burdens beyond what they have ever borne before in time of peace. Heavy taxation stares them in the face. Yet the remorseless progress goes on—new offices are created and salaries are increased.

Mr. OATES. I quite agree with the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, as a general proposition, against increasing salaries. He says this is a very bad time to increase salaries. I wonder when, if ever, my friend from Indiana would think it was a good time to increase them?

But he labors under a great mistake, I think, in respect to these judges. The law of their creation gave them $4,000, which is what his amendment now proposes. But either in the first or second session, I think the first session, of the Congress before the last, on an appropriation bill coming from the committee of which he was a member, the salary of these judges was increased to $5,000; and that is the sum which his committee appropriated for them at the first session of this Congress. That is the sum now being paid to them, as I understand, and the gentleman's amendment actually proposes to reduce the salary of the judges now in office from $5,000 to $4,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was not done by the action of the House.

Mr. OATES. Certainly it was. It passed on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But not by the action of the House in the first instance.

Mr. OATES. Not in the first instance, I admit, but in the last; and it is the last instance that counts, I would remind my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. In the last instance the House appropriated $4,000.

Mr. OATES. Why you reported $5,000 at the last session from your committee. That is what they are receiving now.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken, I think. It occurred in the Fifty-first Congress that an increase of the salary was made; but the last House declined to make the appropriation.

Mr. OATES. At the last session the bill of your committee appropriated that amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not as it came from the committee.

Mr. OATES. I ask a vote on the amendment of the gentleman.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 21, noes 100.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. OATES as tellers.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 22, noes 145.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I was so much embarrassed by the statement of my friend from Alabama as to the action of the Committee on Appropriations in appropriating the salary of these judges at the first session of this Congress, that I did not feel justifiable in making a contradiction, although I thought he was mistaken, as it seemed to me to be absolutely incredible that his statement should be correct.

Since then I have looked into this matter and the history of it is this: By law the salary of these judges is fixed at $4,000, just the amount that I propose to fix it at in the pending bill. In the Fifty-first Congress, on an appropriation bill, an appropriation of $5,000 was made. At the last session of Congress—the present Congress—this increase was stopped and the act appropriated but $4,000. So gentlemen will see how by mere mistake—a mistake, of course, because I know my friend did not intend to mislead the committee as to the fact—but by mere mistake the committee clearly voted under a misapprehension as to the salary of these judges. Now, I am trying to prevent an increase of salary.

Mr. OATES. My friend is speaking of the last appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. OATES. But did not the one preceding that give $5,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. I stated that in one of the sessions of the last Congress there was an appropriation of $5,000. That was done in the second session of that Congress; but since the Democratic House came in that ceased. The amount was reduced to $4,000. It was the Fifty-first Congress that attempted to change the law on the appropriation bill.

And further I will say to my friend—and I am more astonished when I come to think it over, that it did not occur to me at the time—the Senate did not even insist in conference on that increase. That was the history of it. The Fifty-first Congress which has been condemned by your whole country for extravagance did put up the salary on an appropriation bill, but the moment the Democratic House came in it was dropped and the law was obeyed.

Mr. OATES. I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say that if there was a mistake, and the committee voted under a misapprehension, and this bill comes to the House, I will seek to move its recommittal for the purpose of fixing these salaries at what the law now provides, $4,000. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read sections 15 and 16, as follows:

SEC. 15. That hereafter one-half of the amounts paid on account of salary to the justices of the court of appeals hereby created, and to the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. That this act shall take effect on the 3d day of April, 1893, said day being the first day of the April term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term.

Mr. ATKINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of section 16 "and not more than two of the judges of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia shall be appointed from the same political party."

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is conceded that no court should be made up exclusively of members of the same political party. When the Interstate Commerce Commission was organized by act of Congress it was provided in the act of organization that not more than three of the commissioners should be appointed from the same political party.

The same rule has been adopted by my own State. Our constitution provides that when two judges of the supreme court of Pennsylvania are to be elected, no voter may vote for more than one, so that although we have had a pretty steady Republican majority in the State of Pennsylvania, yet we have always had Democrats upon the supreme bench of that State. The same principle was applied when the appointments were made of judges of the circuit court of appeals. President Harrison appointed in the district in which I live a distinguished Democrat, Mr. Dallas, as one of the judges of that court.

Mr. OATES. Will my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] permit me to say that he no doubt remembers that when that bill was under consideration, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] offered just such an amendment as this, and it was voted down. President Harrison had the good sense to make that kind of an appointment without any provision in the law itself.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no recollection of the circumstances referred to by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. There is no such provision in the law.

Mr. ATKINSON. I am willing to accept the gentleman's statement of that as the fact. Inasmuch, however, as we have this principle applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and inasmuch as it is recognized as a proper one, I believe the amendment that I have offered should be sustained by the House.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will not prevail. I, of course, would desire to have the appointment made as suggested in the amendment, but I would prefer to have it made because the President thought it ought to be made. I know that the same provision was voted down in a preceding Congress on a similar amendment, and it has always been doubted in the minds of a good many whether such a provision, limiting the appointment by the President, is constitutional. However that may be, I think it is bad policy to have such an amendment prevail.

Mr. OATES. I call for a vote.

The question being taken on Mr. ATKINSON'S amendment,

The SPEAKER announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ATKINSON demanded a division and subsequently withdrew the demand.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with a recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 127, noes 12.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there is a quorum present.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. OATES.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us take a vote in the House, and withdraw the point in the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as we can have a vote in the House, I withdraw the point.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10010) to establish a court of appeals in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the engrossment, third reading, and passage of the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the previous question can only be ordered upon the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and not to its passage.

Mr. BAILEY. Pending that I desire——

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I am just reminded of the fact that this bill is an amended substitute for a Senate bill. The substitute has not been adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that it was so reported to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understood the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], he asked to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill by unanimous consent before we went into Committee of the Whole, and the House bill was so substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Tennessee is correct. I had forgotten that.

The SPEAKER. Then the action will be taken upon this House bill 10010, which has been substituted in lieu of the other, and considered as the original bill. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] rise?

Mr. BAILEY. To offer a motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the vote upon the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. Under the rules that motion may be made either before or after the previous question is ordered on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to know whether it is intended to preserve the Senate bill in this proceeding or whether the House bill is to be passed and sent to the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The House bill is the bill that is being considered by the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the Senate bill is not before the body at all?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we desired to preserve the Senate bill, we should move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] demands the previous question upon the bill and amendments to engrossment and third reading. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of the amendments? If not the Chair will put the question upon them as a whole.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas submits a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill (H. R. 10010) entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report it back with the following amendment:

"Strike out the words 'during good behavior,' in line 8, of section 1, and insert in lieu thereof 'during the term of ten years.'"

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits an amendment to the instruction proposed by the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill (H. R. 10010) entitled "A bill to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report it back again in amended form, by fixing the salaries of all the justices named in section 2 at five thousand dollars, and by substituting the present law fixing the salaries of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in lieu of section 14.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is now quite late, and I move that the House adjourn. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. OATES. I demand the previous question on the motion to recommit. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Can not you also demand it on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It can be demanded on the passage of the bill also; but this motion having been first made will first be disposed of. The rule provides that a motion to recommit will be in order before or after the previous question is ordered, and the gentleman made the demand for the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. OATES. I intended to include both.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama may be considered as pending, the gentleman stating that he intended to make it. [After a pause.] It will be so regarded.

The question is now upon ordering the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the previous question upon the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to recommit the bill, with instructions and the amendment thereto offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think there was a misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER. The noes have it, and the previous question is not ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. OATES. I ask for a division.

Mr. BAILEY. It is too late. The Chair has declared the result. The gentleman may have voted by mistake.

Mr. OATES. Until the Chair declares the result is it time to demand a division?

Mr. BYNUM and Mr. HEMPHILL. There can be no debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, unless the gentleman states that he rose in time to make the motion, that the demand for a division comes too late; so that the question now is on the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 130.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the motion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that. [After a pause.] But first I will save time by asking for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 118.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, there is not a quorum present; but I will say that with a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition I should be entirely content.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], and tellers will take their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point of no quorum and call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after the count). Forty-two gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. There will be no objection now to adjourning, as the previous question has been ordered; and I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the House adjourn now, will this bill be voted upon to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered upon the passage of the bill, and under the practice that brings it over.

Mr. OATES. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OATES. Will this bill come up as unfinished business to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered, under the practice it will.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Elisha Brown;

A bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. S. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex.;

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1893.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O God, the only living and true God, we come humbly into Thy presence, remembering our mortality. We bless Thee for all the good that comes from Thy hands in the life that now is. Thou art crowning each day with opportunity and with blessing. We praise Thee for the hope of the life to come through our Lord Jesus Christ, the life incorruptible and unfading. We bless Thee for all who are inspired with these high ideals, filled with earnest endeavor to serve their fellow-men and to glorify God our Maker, our Saviour, and our Judge. Thou alone art the portion that satisfies the soul.

We thank Thee for this life, so true, so pure, so faithful, so well rounded, molded as we believe after the pattern of the perfect life, and by the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Now, O God, as we come before Thee, humbly acknowledging Thy hand, we pray Thee inspire us with high and noble endeavor. Help us to live that God may be honored, that our lives may be made a blessing, ever having the approval of our own conscience, always laboring that we may have the approbation of God.

Bless these Thy servants this day. Comfort all who are in bereavement and sorrow. Sanctify to us this bereavement. We rejoice that there is an unseen hand. We pray that our hearts may ever hear Thy voice speaking to us, that the path of duty may be made plain, and that walking humbly, and diligently, and courageously, and prayerfully, and trustingly before God all through this pilgrim way, dark, often, we may have peace at the last and enter into rest.

We ask these mercies, our Father, with Thy rich blessing upon our land, upon our rulers, and upon all the people, praying that it may be Immanuel's land, and that the great principles of truth and righteousness may mold and fashion and govern this entire nation. Grant us what else we need, with forgiveness and peace, in Jesus' name. Amen!

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT HAYES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of Rutherford Birchard Hayes, at his residence in Fremont, Ohio, last evening at 11 o'clock. By the usage of the Senate, when one who has been President of the United States dies during the session of the Senate, it has, as a mark of respect to his memory, recorded his death upon its Journal and suspended its duties for the day.

President Hayes held high and important positions during his life, having been a gallant and distinguished Union soldier during the war, a member of Congress, three times governor of the State of Ohio, and President of the United States. He was a man of marked ability, untarnished honor, unblemished character, and faithful in the discharge of all his duties in every relation of life, against whom no word of reproach can be truthfully uttered.

It was my good fortune to know President Hayes intimately from the time we were law students until his death. To me his death is a deep personal grief. All who had the benefit of personal association with him were strengthened in their attachment to him and in their appreciation of his generous qualities of head and heart. His personal kindness and sincere enduring attachment for his friends was greater than he displayed in public intercourse. He was always modest, always courteous, kind to every one who approached him, and generous to friend or foe. He had no sympathy with hatred or malice. He gave every man his due according to his judgment of his merits.

I therefore, as is usual on such occasions, move that the Senate, out of respect to the memory of President Hayes, do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that, out of respect to the memory of ex-President Hayes, the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 19, 1893, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

UNITED STATES COURTS, EVANSTON, WYO.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday House bill No. 507 was called up by the Judiciary Committee and passed. That bill was passed at the last session and approved May 23, 1892. The mistake occurred in this way: Owing to the careless manner in which the Calendar is made up, this bill was retained upon it, and, in making up the list of bills to be considered, the committee, finding this one upon the Calendar as undisposed of, included it and called it up, and the House passed it. I now ask unanimous consent that the action of the House be reconsidered, and that the bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to have mention of the bill eliminated from the Journal?

Mr. OATES. I desire to have it eliminated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] asks unanimous consent that the action of the House yesterday in passing the bill mentioned by him (H. R. 507) be rescinded and the record of it eliminated from the Journal.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Journal was then approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. On January 6 the Speaker laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting for appropriation papers in the claim of the owners of the schooner Kathleen for damages sustained by said vessel in collision with the United States steamer Chicago. Under the law, when a United States vessel comes into collision with another vessel, the Navy Department appoints a board to examine and report upon the matter, and in this case this has been done. When the papers in such cases are sent to Congress it has been customary to refer them to the Committee on Appropriations, but in this case they were sent to the Committee on Claims, and I now ask that that reference be changed and that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NATIONAL ZOÖLOGICAL PARK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for the National Zoölogical Park for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT AND CARE OF PUBLIC GROUNDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for improvement and care of public grounds for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF LEGAL COUNSEL AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General submitting papers in relation to the claims of certain legal counsel in matters in which the United States were interested and for the payment of which there is no appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a certified copy of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the State of Tennessee, transmitted by the Secretary of State; which was laid on the table.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate joint resolutions of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as below:

Joint resolution (S. R. 121) authorizing payment, under act of August 30, 1890, to the State of Virginia, upon the assent of the governor, heretofore given, till adjournment of next session of the Legislature thereof—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Joint resolution (S. R. 135) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice—to the Committee on Appropriations.

FORT BRIDGER MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3443) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Bridger abandoned military reservation in the State of Wyoming; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PROTECTION OF MAIL CHUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3580) to amend the proviso to be found in connection with the free-delivery service, page 569, twenty-fourth volume Statutes at Large.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now taken up and put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in chapter 388, act of March 3, 1887, is amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That no boxes for the collection of mail matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building, or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours, or a railroad station, and that the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to declare by official order that the chutes connected with mail boxes that are attached to any chute or device which may be approved by him are a part of said receiving boxes and under the exclusive care and custody of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, a House bill similar in its provisions to this Senate bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I ask that the Clerk read our report, which will explain this matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report can be read, the right to object being reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred bill H. R. 9877, have considered the same and recommend its passage.

The purpose of asking for this amendment is to extend the protection of the statutes to about five hundred mail chutes now in use in one hundred cities of the United States under an arrangement with the Post-Office Department, which has authorized them, it having been decided by the Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department that there is at present no authority of law which permits the Postmaster-General to recognize any part of the mailing apparatus referred to except the "receiving boxes."

The matter is important, because mail chutes have been found not only to serve the public interests as they can be served in no other way for an equivalent outlay of money, but because, relying upon the recognition of the apparatus which has been given heretofore, the mail chutes now in use have been bought and paid for by the owners of buildings who have dedicated them to the public service and use by the Post-Office Department free of cost.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read three times, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PERMANENT SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that at the last session the bill (S. 1307) to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the cities went to a conference committee, the report of which was voted down by the House; and there was no order for a further conference. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] now desires to ask that the House request a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. If there be no objection the request for a conference will be sent to the Senate.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced as managers on the part of the House at the proposed conference Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. HEARD, and Mr. POST.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ALDERSON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness.

TRESPASSERS ON LAND OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. ENGLISH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9053) to punish trespassers on the lands of either of the five civilized tribes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, enter upon land in either one of the five nations in the Indian Territory known as the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole nations, for the purpose of settlement or cultivation, without lawful authority either from the United States or from such nation, or who, being upon land within either of said nations at the time of the passage of this act, as trespassers, for the purpose aforesaid, shall, without lawful authority from such nation or from the United States, remain in such nation after the expiration of ninety days from and after the passage of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 and not less than $200, payable one-third to the informer, one-third into the treasury of such nation, and one-third into the Treasury of the United States; or by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding one year and not less than two months, or by both, at the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. I think we should have some explanation of the measure.

The SPEAKER. The report can be read, subject to objection.

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs (by Mr. ENGLISH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 6799, beg leave to report:

The evident intent of the bill was to obtain additional protection for the Indian tribes in possession, either through existing or future treaties, from trespassers who without color of title, either from said tribes or the United States, enter on such land for the purpose of settlement. It appears that on the land of the Chickasaw Nation, especially, there are several thousands of trespassers who defy removal. It is true that section 2118 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 30, 1834, Vol. IV, Stat. L., p. 703) provides a penalty for such trespass by fine, and directs the removal of such trespassers by the United States troops; but such remedy has proved to be ineffectual because of the poverty of the offenders.

The committee, while conceding the necessity of additional legislation in the premises, providing for a more efficient penalty, do not approve of the bill in the form it assumes, since it leaves no discretion in the court to grade the punishment of offenders, and does not define the offense with sufficient precision. They therefore submit as a substitute the accompanying bill, in which those defects are sought to be remedied, and recommend its passage.

Mr. KILGORE. This is a very important measure, and it seems to me we should have some intelligent explanation of it before unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH] can make a short explanation, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to remedy a defect in existing legislation. The Statutes of the United States now provide for the punishment of persons who intrude and settle upon lands of these five tribes without authority either from the tribes or from the Government. But the penalty now provided, being a fine, has been found ineffectual on account of the poverty of the people who offend. When these trespassers are removed by the United States troops, they simply come back again at the first opportunity. This bill proposes to provide a penalty of fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court. There can be no question as to the propriety and justice of the measure.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ENGLISH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ILLEGAL COAL COMBINATIONS.

Mr. COOMBS, as a privileged question, submitted a report from the special committee designated to investigate alleged combinations between the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company and other railroad companies, or between such companies and other roads or canals or producers of coal, for any illegal or improper purpose, etc.; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOMBS. I ask unanimous consent that this report, without the accompanying testimony, be published in full in the RECORD, as it has relation to proposed legislation which will be considered to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much space will this report occupy?

Mr. WISE. Two or three columns.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not usual to print reports of this kind in the RECORD unless some special reason be given.

Mr. COOMBS. Several bills designed to cure defects in the interstate-commerce law are expected to come up to-morrow, and this report has an important bearing on those questions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why should this report be printed in the RECORD when other reports are not?

Mr. COOMBS. Simply because the subject is of unusual interest; and we want to bring the report to the attention of members of the House in connection with proposed legislation which is shortly to come up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] that the report, without the testimony, be printed in the RECORD?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The undersigned committee, designated to investigate the alleged combination of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and the Port Reading Railroad Company, or if a combination between any of those roads or any other roads or canals or producers of coal for any illegal or improper purposes exist, and if such combination do exist the effect thereof on the production, transportation, and distribution and price of anthracite coal and upon commerce among the several States, and to report to the House any and all such facts in relation to the subject-matter which they may ascertain, and to make such recommendations as they may agree upon, submit the following report:

The committee, in pursuance of such resolution, proceeded to take testimony in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. The testimony so taken at various sittings is herewith submitted as a part of the report.

SITUATION.

The anthracite coal region is situated altogether within the State of Pennsylvania, and comprises an area of about 477 square miles.

The region is penetrated by the following lines of railroad, which connect with tide water: The New York, Lake Erie and Western; the New York, Susquehanna and Western; the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western; the New York, Ontario and Western; the Central Railroad of New Jersey; the Lehigh Valley Railroad; the Pennsylvania Railroad; the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad.

The entire output of anthracite coal going east to tide water is transported over these lines of railroad, with the exception of an insignificant quantity which finds its way through canals.

The capacity of the collieries situated in the anthracite regions is estimated by experts to amount to about 50,000,000 tons annually, and the actual output amounts to about 41,000,000, of which amount 35 per cent goes to tide water over the lines of the railroads above mentioned, while the remainder is distributed along said lines of railroad between tidewater and the anthracite fields, or by the same and connecting railroads to interior markets.

THE GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE BUSINESS.

In the early history of mining in the anthracite coal regions, the difficulty of getting the product to market presented a very serious problem. In the early history of the business the coal was transported to market in flatboats. In the progress of development canals were constructed, and subsequently the parties interested in securing a market for their product began the construction of railroads. During the period of development the owners of the collieries conducted the principal transportation business, and the various methods of transportation devised by them were only incidents to a business which was constantly growing in magnitude.

However, the commerce of the country grew at a more rapid pace, and in process of time the various lines of railroad constructed for the purpose of developing the mining regions became, with their western connections, great trunk lines of tranportation, which overshadowed and dominated a business to which at one time these were only the incident. This fact is referred to in order to show how the transportation companies and the collieries practically became associated under one management, which is practically dictated by the railroad companies.

OWNERSHIP OF THE COAL LANDS.

The coal fields being definitely ascertained to lie within a limited territory of small extent, the tendency has been for years past for the transportation companies, in one way or another, to acquire the ownership of the coal lands. This was done originally by direct purchase, but subsequently by the acquisition of stock in coal-producing corporations, which are termed ancillary companies. There is not a railroad company now penetrating the anthracite region that does not own coal-producing lands directly, or that does not absolutely control coal-producing lands through the ownership of practically the entire stock of an affiliated coal-producing company.

So it is that the process of absorption has continued until, as appears in testimony, fully 95 per cent of the coal output is controlled, directly and indirectly, by the railroad companies; and whatever loss or profit is sustained goes to those companies. Individual and independent mine owners at this time do a very small portion of the anthracite coal-producing business, and the tendency, with increasing force, is in the direction of the entire absorption in the manner described of the entire anthracite coal fields and collieries by the common carriers which transport it to market.

CONSOLIDATION.

The same business reasons which have resulted in the practical ownership of the coal output by the transporting companies, have also tended strongly in the direction of railroad combinations and consolidations. The short lines of railroads penetrating the coal fields have been practically absorbed by the trunk lines, and are now stems or feeders to one of the larger of the great systems which control the business.

Latterly the Philadelphia and Reading acquired the management by leasing the same of the Lehigh Valley and the New Jersey Central Railroad. The validity of the lease of the New Jersey Central was brought into question in the courts of New Jersey, and was declared to be invalid. The lease was then canceled, and so far as the testimony taken by the committee goes it does not appear that there is any contract, agreement, or arrangement between that railroad company and the Philadelphia and Reading, but they are now operated as independent lines.

The lease of the Lehigh Valley still exists, and that important line of railroad remains under the management and absolute control of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. The consolidation of these two lines unites under one management interests of vast importance to the public. By this arrangement the Philadelphia and Reading controls at least 40 per cent of the anthracite coal going to tide water, and becomes an important and dominating factor in determining not only the output, but the price of the product.

COMBINATIONS.

The committee in its investigations has not been able to develop any direct stipulation, contract, agreement, or arrangement between the transportation companies by which they are obligated to fix and determine both the output and price of anthracite coal. However, it is not necessary always to find written stipulations, resolutions, or minute entries in order to determine the existence of a business combination. Such combinations for business reasons frequently grow out of the environments of the situation and the opportunities presented. When it is considered that it is a law of business for each proprietor to pursue his own interest, it necessarily follows that proprietors who have a common interest will act in concert, and it requires no stipulation to bind them.

The committee, after a careful investigation, has come to the conclusion that the railroad companies engaged in mining and transporting coal are practically in a combination to control the output and fix the price which the public pays for this important and necessary article of consumption. The combination is not confined to the Philadelphia and Reading and the Lehigh Valley, but embraces all the railways connecting the anthracite coal regions with tide water. There is substantially no competition existing between these companies. The only limitation to their demands is the indisposition on the part of the public to buy the product at an exorbitant price. The committee predicates its conclusions on the following facts which were developed in the progress of the investigation:

First. That each transportation company directly owning coal-producing lands and each affiliated coal-producing company sends a representative to meetings which for years have occurred monthly. These meetings are informal, so far as the committee could ascertain. They are not convened in pursuance of any resolution or agreement, but were the result of a tacit understanding between the parties in interest. No minutes of those meetings, so far as ascertained, are kept, and the proceedings are not of record or made known to the public. However, the fact is incontrovertibly true that at those meetings the monthly output and price of coal are determined.

Second. That in pursuance of a consensus of opinion or understanding arrived at in these monthly meetings, the transportation companies and the coal-producing companies act in concert and conform thereto.

Third. That when it appears that a recalcitrant owner of a colliery declines to conform the output of his mine to the conclusion arrived at in their monthly meetings, he is forced to act in conformity by the transportation companies, who withhold from him cars which are necessary to transport an excess of output over the proportion which it was contemplated he would furnish to the market at such monthly meetings. (See testimony of Mr. Haddock.)

Fourth. That these monthly meetings explain why the output of coal is annually about 10,000,000 tons less than the capacity of the mines. It is impossible to say what amount of anthracite coal it would take to supply the market if the price was lower, but the evidence establishes that the public will not take the entire possible output at the price determined on at these monthly meetings. The natural law of supply and demand, in the judgment of the committee, does not control the output; but at these monthly conferences it is estimated what the demand will be at the price fixed, and in this way the demand as well as the price is, in a large measure, determined. The transportation companies are constantly confronted by a disposition on the part of the public to substitute other fuel for anthracite coal, and the question to be determined at these monthly meetings is how much the public will pay without destroying the market.

Fifth. That this result is brought about not by the coal-producers, but by the transportation companies who control them. The independent and individual owner of a colliery is practically at the mercy of the railroads. The freight agents who determine or fix the schedule rates of the several railroad companies are the men who practically control the situation. Where the railroad company owns the coal-producing lands or the stock in an affiliated company, it makes no difference whether or not the business of mining pays a profit if the freights yield a satisfactory return to it.

We are confronted by the startling fact that, notwithstanding coal can be handled with less labor and transported with less cost and risk than almost any other class of freight, the freight charges, as tacitly and apparently solidly agreed upon by all of the coal-carrying roads, are far in excess of those upon any of the other great and more valuable products of the country. That so bulky a product, involving so little risk in transportation and of such small value at the point of production, upon which the freight constitutes so large a percentage of the cost at the point of consumption, can and should be carried at the very lowest possible rate can not be disputed. Yet we find that it pays nearly double the rate for wheat or cotton. This excess over just and reasonable rates of transportation constitutes an available fund by which they are enabled to crush out the competition of independent coal producers, using for that purpose their own mines or those owned by affiliated companies.

The testimony shows that of the thirty-four individual operators upon the line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad prior to February, 1892, five have since that date been obliged to retire from the business, notwithstanding the increase of the price of coal, and probably a similar decrease has occurred along the other lines. How this has been accomplished can be understood by reference to the testimony of Haddock. (See page 274.)

The rate to tide water as established by transporting lines, as appears by the testimony, is $1.90 per ton. That this is in excess of a legitimate rate appears from the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of Coxe Bros. & Co. vs. The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, which, after hearing exhaustive testimony and making thorough investigation, fixed as reasonable and remunerative compensation to tide water on prepared and large sizes $1.50; on pea coal, $1.25, and on buckwheat, $1.05, or an average of about $1.40 per ton on all classes, estimating the quantities of each included in the shipments. We thus found that the rate established by the carrying companies, as appears by the investigation of the Commission, are now 50 cents per ton in excess of what they considered to be just and equitable. This decision could not be enforced, as is well known, on account of the imperfections in the law. (See Exhibit D, p. 183 of the printed testimony.)

In their competition with the independent producers they can very well afford to use this excess, in order to destroy their business and appropriate the field for their own occupancy. This fact furnishes a key to a possible remedy, which will be suggested hereafter by an amendment to the interstate-commerce act, thus making it effective.

PRICES AT TIDE WATER.

Your committee finds that between the months of February, 1892, when the combination went into effect, and November of the same year, the following advances have been made in the wholesale prices of the classes of coal used by housekeepers:

Kind of coal.	February, 1892.	November, 1892.
Grate.....per ton..	$3.50	$3.85
Egg.....do....	3.60	4.25
Stove.....do....	3.25	4.60
Chestnut.....do....	3.25	4.50

That this advance is not due to any unusual conditions of supply or demand or to increased cost of production, but is solely the effect of the combination which they have been enabled to maintain.

Upon sizes that compete with bituminous coal used in factories there has been very little advance of price. Your committee has experienced great difficulty in obtaining testimony from retail coal dealers, who apparently labor under fears of injury to their business in case they should appear and give evidence.

While the committee did not deem it practicable in the time at its disposal to specially investigate the effect of the alleged combination on the prices of coal produced for consumption in the West, it has been made to appear in the evidence, incidentally, that the conditions surrounding the production and carrying of coal to the tide-water region surround equally and exercise even a more baleful influence on the production and transportation of coal for the Western market.

To summarize, your committee finds that the price of coal has been advanced in the class most usually used by housekeepers from $1.25 to $1.35 a ton within ten months, which advance has been uniform and well sustained by the parties in the combination, as well as those who are not known to be parties to the contract. It finds that, notwithstanding this fact, there has been a decrease in the number of independent coal producers, which process of elimination is still going on through the operation of the force heretofore alluded to. They also find that the principal factor which has brought this result about is the agreement of all the railroads to a uniform rate of freight in excess of a fair and just rate.

On the case thus presented it is very clear that the railroad companies have a practical monopoly of the production, transportation, and sale of anthracite coal. While we do not wish to impugn the motives of the gentlemen engaged in this enterprise, and who doubtless satisfy themselves by the belief that it is fair in business to get all possible profit, and to accomplish that purpose to destroy all possible competition, yet it can not be denied that the public are the sufferers thereby, and that the price of an article of universal necessity is very much increased and that the power of a common carrier deriving its franchise from the public is used and misused to that end. That the situation will grow increasingly more difficult unless some remedy is found by which the independent operator can maintain his standing and be on an equal footing with the ancillary companies controlled by the railroads themselves is evident.

In looking about for a remedy which the committee might suggest to Congress they have been careful to avoid anything which might interfere with the just rights of the States, or to do anything or to recommend anything which can best be done by the States themselves.

The State of New Jersey has, through its chancellor, rendered a decision dissolving the connection of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey with the combination as it existed, and has enforced the decision by subsequent proceedings, which have in the opinion of your committee resulted in detaching that company from the so-called combine. (See Exhibit E of the printed testimony, page 209.)

Action has also been taken by the State of Pennsylvania looking to the same end. Although it has not been concluded, it is reasonable to suppose that the result will be the same as in the case of New Jersey.

The only effective legislation which seems expedient to the committee would be, as far as practicable, to protect the individual and independent mine-owners and producers who still survive the difficulties which environ them from exorbitant and destructive discrimination, and thereby enable them to compete in the coal markets with the transportation companies. The interstate-commerce law, from the beginning without sufficient vitality to insure its effectiveness, has, in view of the recent decision of courts of high authority, become, in a large measure, inoperative. There is no provision in the law for the indictment and punishment of railroad corporations for offenses against the law, whereas their officials are substantially protected, because the only persons whose testimony would secure conviction are excused by the courts from testifying, on the ground that it might criminate them.

The Commission has no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and the courts refuse to grant writs of subpœna in aid of proceedings before it. The long and short haul clause of the law has been construed by the courts to apply to a traffic line and not to the several links of connecting roads forming such traffic line or through route. From this it follows, as is held by the court, that the rates established on a line forming a part of a through line are not subject to the same rules as govern the rates on through freight passing over it with reference to the long and short haul clause. Thus we have the anomaly, as the law now stands, of two traffic lines governed by different rules doing business over the same line of railway. There is no adequate provision in the law for the taking, filing, and presentation of the testimony produced before the Commission. The findings of the Commission have no effect in the courts, and the hearings in the courts may be on entirely different evidence, and on an entirely different case from that considered by the Commission.

The committee would, therefore, recommend an amendment of the interstate-commerce law in the following particular: First, exempt from prosecution parties called as witnesses, and thereby place witnesses called to testify as to offenses or against the law in an attitude where they can not be excused on the ground that they might criminate themselves. Second, provide for the indictment and punishment of railroad corporations who violate the law. Third, provide that any witness summoned to testify before the Commission and failing to do so shall be guilty of an offense and become subject to indictment and punishment. Fourth, provide that all the testimony taken before the Commission shall be in writing, filed and preserved as a part of the record of the proceedings. Fifth, provide that in all cases where the action of the Commission is brought into court for review the same shall be tried on the evidence adduced before the Commission, except in cases where the parties could not have reasonably anticipated the materiality of any proposed new evidence. Sixth, amend the act so as to define the meaning of the word "line" in the long and short haul clause by providing that where connecting lines by any arrangement transport freight for long distance at a named rate no less number of lines shall transport the same freight for a short distance at a greater rate.

The committee is persuaded that if the interstate-commerce law was amended in the particulars mentioned, it would, aside from the beneficial effects on the entire country, have a tendency to weaken the injurious effect of the monopoly existing in the production and sale of anthracite coal, by securing greater independence to the individual mine owners and producers. It would stimulate their business, and better enable them to pay remunerative wages to their employés.

While this will not thoroughly remedy the evil, it will be a step in the right direction and may possibly in time build up enough private enterprises so that they will become again an important factor in the selling markets. The public, however, must bear in mind that where so preponderating a quantity of any given article is controlled by one organization that it will be natural that the holders of the smaller portion should fall into line with the price fixed by the larger. This has been the case within the last season and will undoubtedly continue to be the case until conditions are very much changed from those now existing.

While the committee do not venture an opinion as to the liability of the parties involved in this investigation to punishment under the provisions of the antitrust law, we feel justified in saying that the state of facts disclosed by the evidence taken by the committee merits the fullest consideration of the law officers of the Government.

The committee are agreed that the acquisition of property by transportation companies not necessary to the business of a common carrier, is a growing and dangerous evil. The fact that the railroad companies are in one way or another absorbing the timber, coal, and iron lands of the country can not be disguised. That such ownership tends directly to monopoly and oppression is apparent to every student of commerce. No competition can exist between two producers of a commodity when one of them has the power to prescribe both the price and output of the other.

This problem, which is of constantly increasing importance, must be solved in some way by Congress and the Legislatures of the several States. The public interest demands that the business of the common carrier should be absolutely divorced from any other. The railroad companies were chartered to subserve a great public purpose, and to conduct a great department of public business, and they should not be permitted to abdicate their public functions and descend to a participation in the private affairs of the people, to the end that they may prostitute their franchises derived from Congress or one of the several States in securing an unequal and unfair advantage over the private citizen.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CRAIG.

Mr. SIPE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Friday, February 3, 1893, beginning at 3:30 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of Hon. Alexander K. Craig, late a Representative from the Twenty-fourth district of Pennsylvania.

EXTENSION OF THE CIVIL-SERVICE RULES.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I am directed to report back a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to furnish the House of Representatives with copies of all orders from the President of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1889, extending the provisions of the civil-service law to employés of the Post-Office Department in this city, or in the post-offices throughout the country; or to clerks in the Railway Mail Service, or modifying orders heretofore issued. Also the whole number of clerks in the Railway Mail Service; and also the number appointed since the 4th day of March, 1889; and the number of employés in post-offices, outside of the city of Washington, who will be placed within the provisions of the civil-service law by the recent order of the President relating to such employés.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. The committee recommend the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, have considered the same and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. OATES. I now ask the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill (H. R. 10010) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, coming over from yesterday, on which the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the pending question is not the passage of the bill, on which the previous question has been ordered, but the question before the House on yesterday at the time of adjournment was the vote upon the amendment to my motion, submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and upon that question the previous question has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. That is correct, and the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk will first report the motion of the gentleman from Texas, after which the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be read on which the vote is to be taken.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Chair hold that the order for the yeas and nays is equivalent to the order for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. No; but the previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Exactly; but the pending question is not on the final passage of the bill, but on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the Chair thinks—in view of the rulings heretofore on this point—that when the previous question has been ordered on the final passage of a measure, it brings the question up the next morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and with it any collateral questions which under the rule might be submitted. A motion to commit is a motion of that character, and comes over with the bill under the order for the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the previous question having been ordered on the passage of the bill, if that were the pending question it would be first in order this morning after the reading of the Journal. But that is not the pending question; and on the pending question the previous question has not been ordered. I submit, therefore, that the regular order is not the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the previous question is ordered on the final passage of a measure, under the practice of the House that measure comes up immediately after the reading of the Journal the next morning; and the fact that there may be pending some other motion, which under the rules is allowable in connection with such measure, would not take from the question the same character of privilege it would have if such question were not pending.

Mr. BAILEY. With all respect to the Chair permit me to suggest this view of the case: Suppose the motion to recommit had been made before the previous question had been ordered, would not the Chair hold the motion to recommit to be the pending motion; and can an order for the previous question on one motion displace another pending motion?

The SPEAKER. It was entirely in order to move to recommit before the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. But if it had not been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It would not come over.

But if the gentleman from Texas will observe the RECORD, the Chair stated, when the gentleman from Alabama rose, that it would only recognize the gentleman from Alabama to demand the previous question (after the gentleman from Texas had been recognized to make the motion to recommit) by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not recollect that statement. It is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas was recognized to make a motion to recommit. Then the gentleman from Alabama moved the previous question. The gentleman stated that he intended to do so, and the Chair then said:

Without objection the motion of the gentleman from Alabama may be considered as pending, the gentleman stating that he intended to make it.

After a pause, during which no objection was interposed, the Chair stated:

It will be so regarded.

Mr. BAILEY. I overlooked that fact, Mr. Speaker, and withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is certainly correct, the Chair thinks, under the circumstances stated by him, and the demand for the previous question could only have been entertained by unanimous consent after his motion had been submitted.

Mr. BAILEY. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to recommit with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill (H. R. 10010) entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report it back with the following amendment:

"Strike out the words 'during good behavior,' in line 8 of section 1, and insert in lieu thereof 'during the term of ten years.'"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves to amend this motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] by adding the following, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill (H. R. 10010) entitled "A bill to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report it back again in amended form, by fixing the salaries of all the justices named in section 2 at $5,000, and by substituting the present law fixing the salaries of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in lieu of section 14.

The SPEAKER. Now the question is on this motion just read.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Whether I can now offer a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that these judges are "judges of the United States" under the meaning of the Constitution?

Mr. DOCKERY. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly the gentleman can not do that. But I will be glad for him to have unanimous consent to do so, if he will agree to open the matter for discussion. The gentleman can present no decision opposite to the position I asserted yesterday.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman says I can not present such a decision. I have the decision here.

Mr. BAILEY. I undertake to say that no decision can be found in the books to the effect that judges in this District must hold for life.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 161, not voting 94, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. BAILEY to recommit the bill with instructions was rejected.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. PEARSON with Mr. SHONK, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OATES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CIVIL SUNDRY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10238) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved. The Clerk will call the standing and select committees for reports.

UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION, PORT ROYAL, S. C.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 1290) to provide for the purchase of lands adjoining the United States naval station, Port Royal, S. C.; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MACE CLEMENTS'S SURVEY.

Mr. HARE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8518) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent for Mace Clements's survey, No. 386, in the Virginia military district of Ohio; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT RANDALL MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. AMERMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2931) to provide for the survey and transfer of that part of the Fort Randall military reservation in the State of Nebraska to said State for school and other purposes; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

APPROVAL OF POSTMASTERS' BONDS.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10017) authorizing the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General to approve postmasters' bonds; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL DOCUMENTS FOR SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10011) to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9730) to amend the charter of the Brightwood Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CALIFORNIA AVENUE, BELLAIR HEIGHTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10039) to narrow California avenue, within Bellair Heights, District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF MERCHANDISE BETWEEN PORTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9802) to amend and define section 4347 of the Revised Statutes, relating to transportation of merchandise between ports of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DIXON until the 30th instant, on account of important business.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

Mr. HAYNES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the telegraph this morning brings us intelligence of the death at Fremont, Ohio, of ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes. My residence has been in Fremont for many years. I have personally known Gen. Hayes for fifty years, and I shall speak of him as a citizen with whom I have been so long acquainted. I knew the general in the army. I knew him as governor of the State, and while he occupied distinguished positions and conspicuous stations in public life for so many years. At his own home he was beloved by all, taking an interest in all the institutions of his city and State, discharging wisely and well the duties that devolved upon all good citizens in the community.

Of his public services, many gentlemen in this Chamber are better prepared to speak than I am. His death will excite universal sorrow, not merely in the city of his residence, not only on the part of those who were intimately acquainted with him, but among all the people everywhere who remember his great public service and his noble private character and life. Of his public conduct as President of the United States, as governor of his State, as an officer in the Union Army, history makes record and bears witness to his distinguished services. I wish to speak more particularly of my recollection of the ex-President as a citizen and a neighbor in the community in which he lived. He had been a resident of the city of Fremont from early boyhood. He studied and practiced law there, and, after the expiration of his term as President, he returned to Fremont and again took up his residence there.

He interested himself at all times in all matters of general interest to the community. He was liberal, charitable, unostentatious, and so conducted himself in every way that all men, regardless of their political affiliations, honored him as a man as well as because he was ex-President of the United States. Since his retirement from the Presidency he has devoted a large share of his time to the educational interests of the country and to philanthropic movements. He was president of the Peabody fund and of the Slater fund, devoted to educational purposes in the South. He was one of the trustees of the Ohio University, and he gave a great part of his time and large contributions to such matters. After his retirement he did not engage in any private business, but gave his entire time to the public. He abstained from taking any part in political controversies, recognizing at all times and on all occasions, in public and in private life, that he was an ex-President of the United States, and I think I can truly say that he was one of the best exemplars of true American citizenship.

I know of no distinguished man retired from public position who better deserved the good will and the high opinion of every one who came in contact with him or who has enjoyed them in higher measure. He was easily-approached, ready at all times to assist in all undertakings where the public were to be benefited, at the same time abstaining from any occasion where there was a probability of difference of opinion or dissension. As a general in the Army he was beloved by the soldiers who served with him; as governor of the great State of Ohio, no man ever retired from that position with more of the respect and good will of the people. As President of the United States, history and time will give him the place to which the results of his administration entitles him. As Chief Magistrate of the Republic, in a trying and turbulent time, he conducted as able and successful an administration as any man could possibly have done under the circumstances. In his own town and State, where he was known by nearly all his fellow-citizens, no other death would excite such universal sorrow as that of ex-President Hayes.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the death of ex-President Hayes the country has lost one of its most distinguished citizens, a loss which the country will widely and deeply feel. I first met Gen. Hayes when he became a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and I sat with him in this House until he resigned from the Fortieth Congress to take the oath of office as governor of Ohio. Before I met him I had been informed by a near relative in Ohio of the great ability and high character of Gen. Rutherford B. Hayes, who was to take his seat in the next Congress, and this relative expressed the hope that I would early make his acquaintance. I did so with very great pleasure, and I soon learned the sterling worth of the man who subsequently attained such distinction in the country. I happened to sit within one seat of his, and from the day that I met him here until the last time I had the pleasure of seeing him in the city of Philadelphia, not very many months ago, our friendship was unbroken.

Mr. Hayes had one remarkable trait which to me is a great trait in a man who holds a high position; he was patient, he was a listener, and therefore a most agreeable man to visit upon official business. You left him feeling that he was your friend, and that if he could comply with your wishes or requests it would give him pleasure to do so. He was a statesman with a heart. When I look back over the Congresses in which I have served, I do not know that I have ever met a gentleman of finer qualities than he possessed. He was refined, was graceful in manner, and was always attentive to his business as a member of this House, both on the floor and in his committees, and soon rose to prominence. When he left Congress to take the oath of office as governor of Ohio he received the congratulations, the sincere congratulations, of his fellow-members without distinction of party.

I was also in the convention of the Senate and the House when it was declared from the desk, Mr. Speaker, you now occupy, by the acting Vice-President of the United States (Senator Ferry of Michigan), that Rutherford B. Hayes had received a majority of the electoral votes of the States and was elected President.

Soon afterwards I had occasion to visit him as President, and that visit and all subsequent visits to him in that capacity were very pleasant, for he always had the kindliest manner and manifested the most evident desire to let you regard him as a friend and feel that, if possible, your interviews were not in vain.

I feel, sir, to-day, as I said when I arose, that by the death of Mr. Hayes this country has lost one of its most distinguished citizens. Ex-President Hayes has many friends in the city of Philadelphia. His social visits there were many, and he was always received with the kindness and the respect due to his high character. One special reason why he was a favorite in Philadelphia was that its citizens felt that he had been one of the distinguished governors who had helped in a marked degree to make the great Centennial Exposition of 1876 a success.

I think it fit and proper that Congress should pause in its business and adjourn (as I suppose will be presently proposed) as a mark of respect to the blameless official and social life of this patriot and statesman who served his country well. I regret his death. I realize that I have lost a friend, although I have not seen so much of him of late as in former years, and from the bottom of my heart I desire to mingle my tears with those of his family. I knew his family. I was acquainted with them socially. I knew his young children when he came here. I saw his sons growing to manhood. I knew his respected wife, and I may with propriety say that I have never seen a finer illustration of true American womanhood than in Mrs. Hayes, the wife of the President, who herself died not many months ago. What I have said on this occasion has been uttered because of my admiration of him whose departure has been so sudden and with whom I had been on friendly terms during many years.

Mr. ENOCHS. Mr. Speaker, I was intimately acquainted with General or President Hayes. I served with him in the Army from the spring of 1863 until the war practically closed in 1865. I never found a more patient, more faithful, brave, and upright man than was Gen. Hayes.

He was a soldier because he knew he was right and that he was on the right side. He had no doubts of his part in that great war. He knew absolutely that he was right. He was fighting in defense of his country. His blood enriched more than one of the great battlefields of the war that we all might enjoy the blessing of a united country; that this Republic might live. Without malice, without ostentation, without anything else in view except his duty as a soldier of our country, he served in that great war from the beginning to its close.

He entered the Army in the first instance as a major, was next promoted to a lieutenant-colonel, a promotion won on the battlefield, next to a full colonel, next a brigadier-general, and then a major-general of the United Stated Army. As he won his eagles and stars, honors won in line of duty on the battlefield, they belonged to him. He had won them honorably on the fields of battle in defense of his country.

No man has ever come in contact with ex-President Hayes in the Army or in civil life who did not love him. No soldier in that war was more popular than he. He never sought by political influences, by coming to Washington from the Army of the Potomac, where he served, or when with Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, to seek promotion or advancement through political influences. He won his promotion as a soldier in the field, and when he got that promotion it belonged to him of right.

Without any malice, as I have said, without any feeling except the love of the Stars and Stripes, leaving a dear wife and family, going through that war from beginning to end for the love of his country, he has left an example worthy of emulation by every American citizen.

At the close of the war his farewell order to his brigades and division reminded them as they recollected their struggles and hardships that they would be reminded of each other and of the friendly relations that had so long existed between them. He retired from the Army without pride or splendor, and went into the ranks of civil life as easily and as rapidly as he had won promotion. He became a private citizen with as little effort, absolutely, as he became a major-general during the war. He went back to his business, but before a very great while he was elected to represent his State in the Congress, without an effort on his part.

He remained there, and the people of Ohio elected him governor of that State. He was a model governor. There was nothing rash about his conduct of public affairs. He was quiet, unostentatious, always maintaining the dignity and character and greatness of his State. We reëlected him again, and after he had retired for a few years elected him for a third term. While serving as governor in this term he was made the nominee at Cincinnati for President upon the Republican ticket. After a great struggle, after unusual difficulties, he was declared duly elected President of the United States.

He entered upon his duties under trying circumstances, but his Administration will in future times compare with any that his country has had, in my judgment. He was honest and faithful, always and under every circumstance devoted to his country. Not long since, in Washington, as an example of an American citizen who loved his country above almost everything else, he marched almost the entire distance with the Grand Army of the Republic at the head of the Fremont Post, Grand Army of the Republic.

At the close of the war he could have retired; nevertheless he has been one of the busiest men in Ohio, devoting the later years of his life to benevolence and to education. He has been for some years president of the board of trustees of the Ohio State University, and by his efforts has sought to make it one of the great educational institutions of his country. The later years of his life were spent in trying to do good, trying to do something for his fellow-man; without malice or hate toward any, but full of good feeling and good will for everybody. In every walk of life he always did his duty—a faithful, devoted husband, a kind and affectionate father—and was always a conscientious and honest American citizen, a devoted patriot, and above all, a devoted Christian gentleman.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to say a few words. Ex-President Hayes was, while governor of the State of Ohio, my fellow-townsman and neighbor, and I learned to know him well. As a public official the striking characteristic of the man was his conscientious performance of his duty. As a soldier he was brave, constant, faithful, and patriotic. He showed these qualities upon one occasion when, having won by a charge with his men a difficult position to win and to hold, being assailed by a strong force opposed to him, he received a serious wound, such as might have taken an ordinary man away from the field, but believing that his presence was necessary there to maintain the position, he remained and held it until he was carried away from the field of battle on account of his wound. The discussions and dissensions that arose over the most important incident in his life are hushed now. Every one appreciates that a great citizen, a prominent statesman, a patriot, and leader among men has passed away, and as he was at one time a member of this body, holding therein a prominent position, it is eminently proper that this House should pay honor to him upon this occasion.

While he took a high position as a statesman, as a soldier, and as a patriot, we must not forget that he took as high a position as a private citizen. In his life were exemplified integrity, purity, love of humanity, probity, faithfulness, and other good qualities that make a man esteemed and loved by all who know him.

In his home, to as great a degree as in the home of any citizen whom I ever knew, domestic felicity reigned supreme. There was to be found as beautiful an example of an American household as poet could ever portray. Feeling, as I said, that this House may well pause from its duties to pay tribute to the memory of such a man, I have joined in these ceremonies. We may profit by the lessons of his life and character. They should be transmitted to the youths of our land and coming generations.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, it is eminently proper on this occasion for us to pause in our legislative labors to pay tribute to one who has been President of the Republic.

Not so much from what I shall say am I induced to address this House as in recognition of the fact that the district I have the honor to represent was closely allied, through one who was its representative here for a long term of years, with the administration of President Hayes, which, whatever may be the opinion of men now, will go into history as one of the most memorable, clean, strong, and patriotic administrations that this country has ever enjoyed.

William A. Wheeler, who was honored by my district for a longer term as Representative in this House than that accorded any other man who has ever represented it, was selected as his associate upon the ticket on which they ran as candidates for President and Vice-President, and the last time that I had an opportunity to confer with ex-President Hayes was when he came from his home in Ohio to attend the obsequies of Mr. Wheeler, who had been so intimately and honorably associated with him during his Presidential term.

I will not undertake to review the career to which such fitting tribute has been paid by gentlemen from the State of Ohio, in which Mr. Hayes was born and bred and by which he was honored by an important appointment in the Army, then as a Representative in this House, later as its governor, and finally selected to occupy the highest position in the country. Mr. Hayes has stood before the world a man exceptionally pure in private life, well educated in the duties of the profession which he had chosen, patriotically inclined to perform whatever duties the exigencies of the Government might require of him in its most perilous times and well equipped to discharge the duties of the executive of his State. He came to the Presidency under such circumstances as sealed his title with an assurance of validity that has been given to no other man filling that high office.

First he was a successful candidate under the laws and practice which for ninety years had been frankly acquiesced in by the people; and secondly, when the embarrassments and difficulties which grew out of the election in certain States partially under military control had been settled and determined by an act of Congress, the joint act of bodies previously organized, and their acts accepted by the people long before the time when these difficulties arose which they were called upon to determine, he was declared duly elected. My friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] a few days ago referred, in discussing a constitutional question, to this case as illustrating one of the great advantages of the present Constitution, that an existing body, unquestioned in its organization, is provided to decide upon matters of difference which could not be determined by a body chosen at the same election out of which those differences arose.

With that final indorsement of the Congress of the United States, Mr. Hayes assumed the Presidency at one of the most critical periods of this nation's history. The difficulties which had existed from 1861–'65 had not been entirely settled. He came to the discharge of his office with the disposition and the inclination to perform the duties of that high position acceptably to the people of the entire country. Whatever criticism may be made as to his action with respect to certain national questions—questions which had never before arisen—all concede that Mr. Hayes brought to these duties a strong consciousness of the importance of so administering Federal affairs that the people of all the States should derive the greatest benefit.

No eulogium which may be hastily passed here on this occasion will do justice to this man and the time in which he lived and performed such an important and honorable part. He possessed one quality in marked degree. He had an ease and grace of expression, a force and ability as an off-hand speaker, that I do not believe had been excelled by any man in public life. Fortunate in his family relations, which brought no scandal and no anxiety to his Administration, fortunate in all official relations in public life, nowhere has been given a better example of what should be the course and action of an ex-President than is exhibited in the life which he led after his retirement.

Devoting himself to labors of charity and philanthrophy, seeking to improve the administration and the policy of the eleemosynary and penal institutions of the country, he lived in a quiet dignity, which has never been surpassed since the time of him who stood first in the hearts of the American people, their first President, as shown in the private life which he spent at Mount Vernon after leaving the Chief Magistracy.

As general, as Representative, as governor, as President, he is worthy of the honor that is paid to a citizen who has held our highest office, and history will do justice to his Administration and his character.

I have spoken as the representative of the people of a district because of its share in his Administration, and in their name I have made these hasty and unprepared allusions to the qualities of a Chief Magistrate whose very simplicity of life is as deserving of remembrance as the high qualities which won him honor and distinction.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, it is with diffidence that I trust myself to occupy the time of this House further to-day, after the eloquent words we have heard from my colleagues upon this floor. My only excuse for so doing is, that in an humble way I represent a body of which, to the hour of his death, it was the pride of Rutherford B. Hayes still to belong—I mean the bar of Cincinnati. It was at that bar he achieved his first reputation as a speaker. It was at that bar that he laid the foundation of that domestic felicity which has been so ably spoken of here. It was his labors at that bar that gave him the respect of our people, and gave him a hold on Cincinnati which, so far as in the hearts of his fellow-citizens there, will still abide with us.

When Rutherford B. Hayes left Cincinnati to go into public life the city lost a good citizen, a citizen who had the respect of every man in our community whose respect was worth having. In his public life he had the commendation and support of all good people because they believed that he was an honest fellow-citizen. It was that very honesty and probity of purpose, recognized by those who knew him, disseminated throughout the community through the opinions of those who knew him personally, that characterized him, that characterized his public life, and characterized the administration of which he was the head. Probity and modesty, self-abnegation, and devotion to the public service are the words that should be engraven and could be engraven with perfect truth upon the tomb of that man.

I knew him only as a very young man knows an older man at the bar. I knew him better as one of the older men who came back to us each year to attend our bar association annual meeting. He never failed to come. He was one of our honorary members, and he never failed to be with us once a year. He had the respect of the bar when he had left it and was out of practice, in accordance with the spotless reputation which he had always borne, and which had been handed down to the men of my generation from those with whom he had practiced and the courts before whom he had earned his daily bread.

When he went into a broader field, sir, as I said before, he displayed the same characteristics; he displayed characteristics which, I think, endeared him to the sober second thought of all the people of this country, no matter what their political affiliations or political prejudices may have been. No man can truthfully say that he was a representative of anything but what we all believe is the highest type of man this world can produce—a patriotic, God-fearing American citizen. That was Rutherford B. Hayes.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to recount any of the deeds or exploits of Gen. Hayes, because I suppose the members of this House are familiar with matters of history, but I wish to say a word about the man. I was personally acquainted with him. I am informed that as a soldier he was brave and honorable; I know that as a politician and statesman he was fair, courageous, and honest. In saying this I have in mind all the controversy that arose about his title to the office of President of the United States. I was near him at that time. I was in the Ohio Senate when he was governor, and I know that he took no part in the controversy to which I have referred.

Whatever may have been the unfair action of his party, he had no hand in it. He was honorable, honest, and fair. And I want to remind gentlemen who come from the South that Mr. Hayes gallantly wiped away the carpet-bag rule that had persecuted and oppressed that portion of our country. President Hayes was infinitely better than his party, and for that reason he received but one term at its hands. The Democratic party should feel no unkindness towards him. He was a fair, honest, noble citizen; a good man. That, Mr. Speaker, is all that I desire to say at this time.

Mr. DOAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add but a single word to what has already been so well said. Let it stand to the immortal honor of Rutherford B. Hayes, as a white shaft to the clouds, that in all the relations of life, whether public or private, at home or abroad, there was no stain upon him or upon his record in any shape or form whatever. His motives and his objects were at all times pure. His very simplicity made him grand. To know him was but to love him. In whatever position he may have been placed he always sought to carry out faithfully and honorably the duties intrusted to him with all the ability which God has given, and I can say with truth that in my own State of Ohio no man was closer to the hearts of the people than Rutherford B. Hayes. In all the relations of life, in every matter intrusted to him, whatever may have been the circumstances by which he was surrounded, he acted well his part, and his character and his life, as he lays it down, stand without a scar upon his helmet or a stain upon his shield.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add but a few words to the sentiments which have been expressed touching the life and character of President Hayes. I met him for the first time on this floor in the closing hours of the Thirty-ninth Congress. I shook hands with him in the aisle to my right for the first time. I was charmed by his unassuming, cordial, and kindly manner, and notwithstanding the fierce political controversy that afterwards arose between the two great political parties of our country over the question of his election to the Presidency, I always entertained a great admiration for his character.

The sensibilities of all our people will be deeply touched by his death. He held the greatest office known to the world and filled it well. The Administration of President Hayes will go into history, gentlemen, as the expression of the whole American people, as well those who differed with him in political opinion as those who agreed with him, that he gave to our country one of the purest administrations our Government has ever known. He was himself a pure man, a Christian gentleman. His noble and patriotic efforts to reform the civil service of the Government, greatly demoralized by the war for the Union, deserved, especially in view of the hostility which those efforts encountered within his own party, imperishable honor.

He in the main failed in his purpose, but that was because his party was not up to his own high standard of public duty. To me the earnest efforts of his Administration, to secure pure and honest government appear, in the midst of all his high honors, his highest honors. How noble his efforts to heal the wounds of our intestine war. He was a man of a kindly and forgiving spirit, and I know of no quality in the human heart more to be admired. How admirably this humane sentiment adorned his character:

> Forgiveness! it is an attribute of God Himself,
> The sound that openeth heaven,
> Restores once more fair Eden's faded bloom
> And flings Hope's golden halo o'er the waste of life.

The country, greatly demoralized by war, was restored to peace and purity under his Administration, and the Union of the States was in spirit restored.

Standing by the open grave of this illustrious citizen, how natural the thought that greater than being President, better than to have commanded an army, history will write down that he was a just and good man.

> Peace to the good man's memory. Let it grow
> Greener with years and blossom through the flight
> Of ages.

Mr. PATTISON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that I was associated with Gen. Hayes as a member of the board of trustees of the Ohio Wesleyan University, of Delaware, Ohio, I had not thought of saying anything at this time. I wish, however, to add simply a statement, which possibly may have been forgotten by the gentlemen who have said so much in respect to his memory. I think one and perhaps the most preeminent characteristic of Gen. Hayes has been overlooked. You will pardon me, I am sure, if I attempt in a few words and in plain and simple language to add a tribute to his memory. I surely would not attempt to add anything to the many beautiful eulogies that have been delivered.

Nothing more perhaps need be said to his purity and patriotism as a citizen, his bravery as a soldier, his greatness and ability as a statesman, and his success as the President of the United States. But it seems to me that no eulogy to Gen. Hayes would be entirely complete, or do full justice to his character, without calling attention not only to the fact that he was an honest man, an upright citizen, an able and distinguished statesman, but also that he was a Christian. This, to my mind, was the foundation of his glory and the great secret of his remarkable career. Possibly no other man ever occupied the White House who had a greater reverence for God and the divine truths of Christianity, and it was his abiding faith in the Almighty, his sense of human weakness, and dependence, and his strong belief in a Divine government of the world that gave him courage and strength to meet the emergencies of perhaps one of the most important Administrations during the last half century of our history. He, I believe, like every other man who has occupied the Presidential chair, not only recognized the God of the universe, but also believed that there was an overruling Providence directing all the affairs of this great Republic.

Gen. Hayes had the highest respect for law and order, for the sanctity of the Sabbath, and never in all his public life forgot that this was a Christian nation; and it should be remembered, and to their credit, that all the great men of this country have recognized the hand of an Allwise Being in the shaping of its destiny. As one of the younger members of this body, from the great State of Ohio, of which Gen. Hayes was an honored and most distinguished son, I pay my simple tribute not only to him as an honored citizen, a brave and gallant soldier, but also to him as a Christian gentleman.

Mr. HAYNES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to the memory of ex-President Hayes, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Tennessee at the election held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governor of that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF UTAH SCHOOL COMMISSIONER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting the fifth annual report of the commissioner of schools for Utah Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in accordance with law, the first annual report of the Suburban Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND ARLINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Washington and Arlington Railway Company, transmitting a list of stockholders in that company, the amount of stock held by each, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEFFER presented a memorial of pastors of sundry churches of Russell, Kans., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PEFFER. I present a petition of 268 citizens of Oklahoma Territory, and I desire to call the particular attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to it, as I shall ask to have the petition referred to that committee. The petition is as follows:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States and of the Territory of Oklahoma, do most respectfully represent to your honorable body, that we have entered, under the provisions of the homestead laws and the act of March 3, 1891, (26 Stat., pp. 989 to 1044, sec. 16), certain lands that were ceded to the United States by the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians, the Absentee Shawnee Indians, and Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians. That the law requires the payment by entrymen of said lands of $1.50 per acre, one-half of which shall be paid within two years from date of original entry. That a large majority of the people who have entered said lands are poor and will be unable to pay any portion of the purchase money within the time first payment is therefore required.

Wherefore, we ask that you amend said law so as to extend the time for the first payment for said lands to five years from date of entry; and for such relief your petitioners will ever pray.

I desire to state in connection with the petition that it relates to a subject of very great importance to the persons interested. Those of us who are living near that region understand very well the difficulties and hardships under which those poor people labor. I most respectfully urge the early attention of the Committee on Public Lands to the petition.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to state in regard to the petition that I think a bill containing such a provision is before either the Committee on Territories or the Committee on Indian Affairs. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he had better examine the record and see whether the petition should not go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have no objection to its going to the Committee on Public Lands, and we shall give it such attention as the subject deserves if the Senator chooses to have it so referred, but I know that sometimes the Committee on Indian Affairs have been careful to protect their jurisdiction in regard to the lands which have been purchased from Indians or which have been Indian reservations.

Mr. PEFFER. I will make an inquiry and ask for any further order that may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas desire that the petition shall lie on the table?

Mr. PEFFER. Yes, for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. DAWES presented petitions of Cigar-Makers' International Union, No. 255, of Lowell; the Iron-Molders' Union of Lawrence; and of the Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 49, of Springfield, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of D. N. Williams and other citizens of Stockbridge, Mass., and the petition of E. L. Burnham and other citizens of Westminster, Mass., praying that the purchases of silver under the so-called Sherman act be discontinued; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Boston (Mass.) Stock Exchange, praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying for the appointment of a commission to thoroughly investigate the evils of immigration in sections colonized by aliens during the last decade; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. McPHERSON presented petitions of citizens of Metuchen, New Brunswick, Deans, Dayton, Monmouth Junction, West Creek, and Trenton, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for an amendment of the laws relating to immigration, so as to prohibit the landing within our border of any and all immigrants, whether at seaports or along our borders, for the space of one year after the passage of such law, excepting foreigners who may come here as visitors during the progress of the World's Columbian Fair; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BRICE presented memorials of Rev. William Wallace, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church of Delaware; of Rev. S. J. Hatfield, of Sidney; of Mrs. Robert Mehaffey, of Lafayette; of J. J. Culberson of Owensville; of Rev. John P. Robb, of Sidney, and of Mrs. D. P. Morgan, ex-corresponding secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cincinnati, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act of 1890; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the boards of health of Millersburg, Mechanicsburg, Ashville, Chicago Junction, Milton, Sidney, and Ashtabula, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of a bill to suspend immigration, and that the control of the maritime quarantine be placed in the hands of the National Government; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of W. P. Anderson, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the petition of Alfred Cavileer, of Springfield, Ohio, praying for the establishment of a national road department; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 18 citizens of Wyandotte County, Ohio, praying for the passage of the antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of Andrew H. Smith and 39 other citizens of Danbury, Conn., praying for one year's prohibition of all immigration, excepting visitors to the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3350) donating a Napoleon gun to the Society of the Sons of the Revolution of Pennsylvania;

A bill (S. 2767) to deliver to the State of Colorado certain guns; and

A bill (S. 2687) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of Colorado four 3-inch Rodman guns in exchange for two brass Napoleon guns.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5049) to remove the charge of desertion against Lucius L. Dyer, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3181) for the relief of Luster P. Chester and Freeland Chester, and Luster P. Chester and Freeland Chester, executors of Thomas R. Chester, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3555) for the relief of George W. Jones, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3734) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 730) for the relief of James A. Finley, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5649) for the relief of Lieut. F. W. Davis, and granting him an honorable discharge, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4758) for the relief of Charles E. Heuston, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably three amendments intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BUOYAGE IN LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. CULLOM. I report back from the Committee on Commerce favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3707) making an appropriation for establishing buoyage on the water front of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinios. As it is a very short bill and one about which I think there will be no controversy, I ask that it be now considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $29,500 or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of establishing proper buoyage on the water front of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that this appropriation is regularly estimated for, and it is a very important one to be made.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6797) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahawba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway;

A bill (H. R. 9053) to punish trespassers on the lands of either of the five civilized tribes;

A bill (H. R. 9069) for the further continuance of the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 9610) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to offenses against the United States;

A bill (H. R. 9611) to amend section 847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to commissioners' fees;

A bill (H. R. 9612) to amend section 833 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to semiannual returns of fees by district attorneys, marshals, and clerks;

A bill (H. R. 9613) to amend section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to clerks' fees;

A bill (H. R. 9979) to regulate the right of appeal in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. 10062) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River between the mouths of the Pomme de Terre River and Buffalo Creek, in Benton County, Mo.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1307) to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city, further insisted upon its amendments to the bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. HEARD, and Mr. POST managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3580) to amend the proviso to be found in connection with the free-delivery service, page 569, twenty-fourth volume, Statutes at Large.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Elisha Brown;

A bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. S. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 4844) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to school district numbered 12, of Kittery, Me., a portion of Fort McClary military reservation, in exchange for other land; and

A bill (S. 1292) to remit the penalties on the light-house steamer Pansy.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3735) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for semiannual statements by foreign corporations doing business in the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 3736) requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to secure a bond from the corporation known as the World's Columbian Exposition before the coins provided for by chapter 381, Statutes of the United States, first session, Fifty-first Congress, are delivered to said corporation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3737) to prevent desertions from the Navy, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3738) granting a pension to Fred S. Chamberlain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3739) granting a pension to Miss Sara B. Stebbins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3740) for the relief of S. J. Block and A. P. Baurman, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3741) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3742) granting a pension to Evarts Ewing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SALE OF COLUMBIAN STAMPS.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire at this time to introduce a joint resolution, and I ask its immediate consideration, if there be no objection. It is very short.

The joint resolution (S. R. 137) instructing the Postmaster-General to discontinue the sale of so-called Columbian stamps was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Postmaster-General of the United States be instructed to discontinue the sale of the so-called Columbian postage stamps, except to such persons as may specially call for them, and be instructed to continue to keep on sale the ordinary postage stamps in use before the printing of the so-called Columbian stamp.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I apprehend there will be no objection to the joint resolution. I know of nothing more ridiculous than the great plasters which are now being delivered to us as postage stamps, which cover half an envelope, and a few dollars' worth of which would require a dray to carry them from the Senate to one's residence. The old postage stamps were such as met the demand of the public. I apprehend there will be no objection to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DOLPH. Let the joint resolution go over. The new postage stamps have been sent to the various postmasters to be sold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution, being objected to, will go over.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall require bond from the corporation known as the World's Columbian Exposition before the souvenir coins are delivered to it; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select), and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I ask to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I call the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to it, and I hope there will be an early report from the committee, so that the amendment may go to the Committee on Appropriations. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

To reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion, under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1861, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, being the sums of money shown by the reports of the Secretary of War to have been paid by said States in the suppression of the rebellion:

To the State of California, the sum of $2,451,366.56.
To the State of Oregon, the sum of $224,526.53.
To the State of Nevada, the sum of $404,040.70.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment proposing to increase the appropriation to carry into effect the Chinese exclusion act; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposing by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 3423) for the repeal of certain parts of the act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1890. As the amendment is very brief I ask to have it read.

The amendment was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed as follows:

To amend Senate bill 3423, for the repeal of certain parts of the act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1890.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 3 of the act entitled an 'Act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1890,' be so amended as to read as follows:

"'That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin the silver bullion purchased under this act as rapidly as possible, after such purchase, into standard dollars, and shall also coin into silver dollars as rapidly as possible all the silver bullion now in the Treasury, purchased under the provisions of said act of July 14, 1890, and any gain or seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury.'"

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3423) for the repeal of certain parts of the act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of the Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1890; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT ON ALASKA SALMON FISHERIES.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report of the special agent having in charge the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, for the relief of the Columbian University, in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 113) providing for the printing of the Agricultural Report for 1892.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. PEFFER. I gave notice a few days ago that yesterday morning I would ask the consent of the Senate to proceed with my remarks upon Senate joint resolution No. 96, but on account of the adjournment yesterday the opportunity was not afforded me. I beg leave now to renew my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The Senator from Kansas will suspend for a moment. The Chair will ascertain if there is further morning business. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] If not, the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order——

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7845, being the antioption bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], who asks the indulgence of the Senate for the purpose of making some remarks. The title of the joint resolution called up by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 96) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to limit the office of President to one term for each incumbent.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, on the 17th day of July, the subject of the election of the President was again considered, the question being on the proposition that "the national executive" should be "chosen by the National Legislature." The discussion on that day brought out the views of some of the stronger men of the convention, and they are suggestive. I shall very briefly refer to them:

Mr. Gouverneur Morris [of Pennsylvania] was pointedly against his being so chosen. He will be the mere creature of the Legislature, if appointed, and impeachable by that body. He ought to be elected by the people at large—by the freeholders of the country.

Mr. Sherman [of Connecticut] thought that the sense of the nation would be better expressed by the Legislature than by the people at large. The latter will never be sufficiently informed of characters, and, besides, will never give a majority of votes to any one man. They will generally vote for some man in their own State, and the largest State will have the best chance for the appointment.

Mr. WILSON [of Pennsylvania]. * * * It might be answered, that the concurrence of a majority of the people is not a necessary principle of election, nor required as such in any of the States. But, allowing the objection all its force, it may be obviated by the expedient used in Massachusetts, where the Legislature by a majority of voices decide, in case a majority of the people do not concur in favor of one of the candidates.

Mr. PINCKNEY [of South Carolina] did not expect this question would again have been brought forward, an election by the people being liable to the most obvious and striking objections. They will be led by a few active and designing men. The most populous States, by combining in favor of the same individual, will be able to carry their points.

Mr. WILLIAMSON [of North Carolina] conceived that there was the same difference between an election in this case by the people and by the Legislature, as between an appointment by lot and by choice. There are at present distinguished characters, who are known perhaps to almost every man. This will not always be the case. The people will be sure to vote for some man in their own State, and the largest State will be sure to succeed.

Mr. L. MARTIN [of North Carolina] moved that the Executive be chosen by electors appointed by the several Legislatures of the individual States.

The motion was lost.

On the question on the words "to be chosen by the National Legislature," it passed unanimously in the affirmative.

The subject was continued on the 19th of the same month, when Messrs. Patterson, Wilson, Madison, and Gerry participated. The debate that day throws more light on the subject, and will be found on page 337 of the book from which I am reading, Elliott's Debates. I will read a portion of the remarks of Mr. Madison as they are given:

Mr. MADISON [of Virginia]. If it be a fundamental principle of free government that the legislative, executive, and judiciary powers should be separately exercised, it is equally so that they be independently exercised. There is the same, and perhaps greater, reason why the executive should be independent of the legislature, than why the judiciary should.

Mr. GERRY [of Massachusetts]. If the Executive is to be elected by the legislature, he certainly ought not to be reëligible. This would make him absolutely dependent. He was against a popular election. The people are uninformed, and would be misled by a few designing men. He urged the expediency of an appointment of the Executive by electors to be chosen by the State executives."

Here we find that the great men who composed the convention had varying views upon this important subject and that a majority of the members and a majority of the States believed that it was not safe to trust so important a matter to the suffrages of the people at large.

Without pursuing the details further, it is sufficient to state that the discussion was continued from time to time in Committee of the Whole and by special committee until the 24th day of August, when the question was on election by "ballot by the Legislature." Mr. Gouverneur Morris moved "that the President shall be chosen by electors to be chosen by the people of the several States." The motion was lost by a vote of 5 to 6. Mr. Carroll's motion to elect by the people was lost by 2 votes for—Pennsylvania and Delaware—to 9 votes against—New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia. A similar vote with the same result had been taken early in the session—two direct votes against the people.

The whole matter was referred to a special committee on the 8th day of September, and on the 12th day the final report submitting the draft of the whole Constitution as adopted by the convention was presented. As finally agreed upon, the clause relating to the choice of President and Vice-President was as follows:

The electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each; which list they shall sign and certify and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted.

The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President, and if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such majority and have an equal number of votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by ballot one of them for President; and if no person have a majority then from the five highest on the list the said House shall in like manner choose the President.

But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. In every case, after the choice of the President, the person having the greatest number of votes of the electors shall be the Vice-President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal votes, the Senate shall choose from them by ballot the Vice-President.

When so much time and thought were expended on this particular piece of governmental machinery, it might reasonably have been expected that the electoral plan would work perfectly; but the truth is it was a failure from the beginning, though its principal defects were not very troublesome until the fourth election took place. Some trouble had been occasioned by reason of different methods of choosing the electors in the several States. In some of them the choice was made by the Legislature, either by joint ballot or by concurrent vote. In some of the States they were chosen by the people by general ticket, the whole number of electors being voted for on one ballot throughout the State; in other States they were chosen by districts.

The district system approached nearer a direct vote of the people than any other, and it gave the fullest expression to public opinion, but it was abandoned because it divided the votes of States and thus weakened them in final results. The other methods of choice resulted in confusion which became more apparent as the people divided themselves into political parties.

The popular demand for Gen. Washington's services made the work of electors in the matter of his election merely formal—they but recorded the verdict of the people at their homes. All of the electoral votes were cast for him at the first and at the second election. So far as the President was concerned there was no division among the people. The first appearance of a divided vote was with respect to the Vice-President in the second election, the electoral vote being divided between Adams and Jefferson.

At the third Presidential election the electoral votes were pretty nearly evenly divided between John Adams, who received 71 votes, and Thomas Jefferson, who received 67 votes for President.

It was not, however, until the fourth election, which occurred in 1800, that the defects of the electoral system were clearly manifest. The theory was that by this means there would be so much of independence among the electors of the several States, they being permitted without instruction or restriction to cast their individual votes for the persons of their choice, that the popular opinion would be thoroughly represented in the general result of the voting. But from the first election the electors were governed not by their own individual preferences but by what they understood to be the wishes of the people whom they represented locally.

It so happened that in the first and second election, as before stated, the general judgment of the people was so much centered on one man that the electors, in obedience to the general will, cast their votes unanimously for George Washington; but as soon as divisions appeared, and they did in the second election in the case of the Vice-President, the electoral vote was divided. At the third election the division, drawn on party lines—Federalist against Antifederalist—the electoral vote was accordingly divided. So, in 1800, when party feeling was running high, though the Republicans (Antifederalists) were successful in the general election, it so happened that two of their candidates—Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr—received an equal number of votes, 73 each.

Then, under the provisions of the Constitution, the election devolved upon the House of Representatives, each State having one vote. Naturally the people were anxious and restive under the suspense occasioned by the prospective excitement with the new mode of electing the Chief Magistrate. The anxiety was much increased as the time for the choice approached and it became evident that there would be great difficulty in securing an election by the House because of an equal division in that body for the leading candidates. When the balloting began and there was a tie between Jefferson and Burr public interest became intensely watchful. Personal preferences had much to do in fomenting divisions and discord among the people.

As the balloting continued from day to day excitement spread among the people. It was not until seven days had passed, with thirty-four ballotings, and a conference among Federalists, and pledges from Mr. Jefferson that in case of his election he would respect the public credit and would not remove persons from office upon purely partisan grounds, that there was any immediate prospect of a successful result from the proceedings in the House. On the thirty-sixth ballot Thomas Jefferson received a majority of the votes and was declared elected.

So greatly had the people been wrought up to excitement during this period of suspense that Mr. Jefferson wrote to James Monroe that they were prevented from passing an act to vest executive authority in the Chief Justice or some other high officer, in case of failure to elect the President by the House, only by threats on the part of the opposition that the Middle States would rise in arms and call a convention to form a new Constitution. It is said that "had Congress been sitting in Philadelphia instead of Washington it would have run no small risk of being invaded by a mob."

The effect of this experience in the effort to elect a President by the House of Representatives was to satisfy the people that the constitutional provision for electing the President was fatally defective. The judgment to this effect was so general and uniform throughout the United States that in December, 1803, a proposition to amend the Constitution in this respect passed both Houses of Congress and was ratified by the several States within eleven months thereafter.

The principal difficulty which had been felt in the mode of election was the evident tendency, because of the number of candidates to be voted for, to bring the choice into the House of Representatives.

This—

As is clearly expressed by Mr. Justice Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution—was early foreseen; and even in one of the State conventions a most distinguished statesman, and one of the framers of the Constitution, admitted that it would probably be impracticable to elect a President by the immediate suffrages of the people, and that in so large a country many persons would probably be voted for and that the lowest of the five highest on the list might not have an inconsiderable number of votes.

It can not escape the discernment of any attentive observer that if the House of Representatives is often to choose a President the choice will, or at least may be influenced by many motives independent of his merits and qualifications. There is danger that intrigue and cabal may mix in the rivalries and strife, and the discords, if not the corruptions generated by the occasion, will probably long outlive the immediate choice and scatter their pestilential influence over all the great interests of the country.

The amendment as ratified has remained from that time to the present a part of the Constitution and has been followed in all of our Presidential elections from that time to the present. It is as follows:

The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each; which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted—the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President.

But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March, next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list the Senate shall choose the Vice-President. A quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice, but no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. President, it will be seen that the amendment provides "that the ballots of electors shall be separately given for President and for Vice-President, instead of one ballot for two persons as President, as it was under the original provision; that the Vice-President (like the President) shall be chosen by a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; that the number of candidates from whom the selection of President is to be made by the House of Representatives shall be three instead of five (as under the old provision); that the Senate shall choose the Vice-President from the two highest numbers on the list; and that, if no choice is made of President before the 4th of March following, the Vice-President shall act as President."

The electoral system under the amendment as well as under the old provision of the Constitution has been a failure. So far from its being a useful part of our system of Government, it was from the beginning without value in any respect, for while the theory was that the electors should cast their votes as their own individual judgment dictated, and that therefore the selection of a chief magistrate would be all the more carefully and wisely done, it was never effectual in practice—the electors merely casting the vote of a particular faction or party which they favored as individuals.

So it has been under the amendment. In the early history of our politics, Presidential nominations were made in Congressional caucuses. Members of Congress of the different parties, in caucus assembled, dictated the candidates for their parties. These nominations were accepted by the people, and the electors cast the popular vote for the caucus candidates. This proved to be very troublesome in the election of 1824, when the last Congressional nominating caucus was held. By reason of the failure of the electoral college to make a choice of President the election was thrown into the House of Representatives, and the country was reminded of the exciting contest of 1801. The utter uselessness of the electoral plan and its dangerous tendency were completely demonstrated in the memorable contest of 1824.

I will ask the Secretary to read an extract from the first volume of Benton's Thirty Years' View, found on page 47, chapter 26, concerning the election in the House in the year 1825.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

The second Presidential election in the House of Representatives was after the lapse of a quarter of a century, and under the amended Constitution, which carried the three highest on the list to the House when no one had a majority of the electoral votes. Gen. Jackson, Mr. John Quincy Adams, and Mr. William H. Crawford were the three, their respective votes being 99, 84, 41, and in this case a second struggle took place between the theory of the Constitution and the democratic principle, and with eventual defeat to the opposers of that principle, though temporarily successful. Mr. Adams was elected, though Gen. Jackson was the choice of the people, having received the greatest number of votes, and being undoubtedly the second choice of several States whose votes had been given to Mr. Crawford and Mr. Clay (at the general election).

The Representatives from some of these States gave the vote of the State to Mr. Adams, upon the argument that he was best qualified for the station, and that it was dangerous to our institutions to elect a military chieftain, an argument which assumed a guardianship over the people and implied the necessity of a superior intelligence to guide them for their own good. The election of Mr. Adams was perfectly constitutional, and as such fully submitted to by the people; but it was also a violation of the demos kratco principle; and that violation was signally rebuked. All the Representatives who voted against the will of their constituents lost their favor and disappeared from public life. The representation in the House of Representatives was largely changed at the first general election, and presented a full opposition to the new President.

Mr. Adams himself was injured by it, and at the ensuing Presidential election was beaten by Gen. Jackson more than 2 to 1—178 to 83. Mr. Clay, who took the lead in the House for Mr. Adams, and afterwards took upon himself the mission of reconciling the people to his election in a series of public speeches, was himself crippled in the effort, lost his place in the Democratic party, joined the Whigs (then called National Republicans), and has since presented the disheartening spectacle of a former great leader figuring at the head of his ancient foes in all their defeats, and lingering on their rear in their victories.

The Democratic principle was again victor over the theory of the Constitution, and great and good were the results that ensued. It vindicated the Democrats in their right and their power, and showed that the prefix to the Constitution, "we the people do ordain and establish," etc., may also be added to its administration, showing them to be as able to administer as to make that instrument. It reëstablished parties upon the basis of principle, and drew anew party lines then almost obliterated under the fusion of parties during the "era of good feeling," and the efforts of leading men to make personal parties for themselves.

It showed the conservative power of our Government to lie in the people more than in its constituted authorities. It showed that they were capable of exercising the function of self-government. It assured the supremacy of the Democracy for a long time and until temporarily lost by causes to be shown in their proper place. Finally it was a caution to all public men against future attempts to govern Presidential elections in the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEFFER. So well satisfied were the public men of the time that our electoral system was a failure that a joint committee of the Senate and House was appointed to consider and report a proposition to amend the Constitution in that particular. The committee was composed of seven eminent statesmen, three members of the Senate, to wit: Messrs. Benton, Macon, and Van Buren; four members of the House, namely: Messrs. White, of Tennessee; Findley, of Pennsylvania; Dickerson, of New Jersey; Holmes, of Maine; Hayne, of South Carolina, and Johnson, of Kentucky. After careful consideration of the subject the committee reported the following plan:

I will not read it nor ask that it be read, because I will have some occasion to refer to it as I proceed, but will ask that it may be incorporated with my remarks. It will be found in the first volume of Benton's Thirty Years' View, at page 79, marked:

That, hereafter the President and Vice-President of the United States shall be chosen by the people of the respective States in the manner following: Each State shall be divided by the Legislature thereof, into districts, equal in number to the whole number of Senators and Representatives, to which such State may be entitled in the Congress of United States; the said districts to be composed of contiguous territory, and to contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of persons, entitled to be represented, under the Constitution, and to be laid off, for the first time, immediately after the ratification of this amendment, and afterwards at the session of the Legislature next ensuing the appointment of Representatives, by the Congress of the United States; or oftener, if deemed necessary by the State; but no alteration, after the first, or after each decennial formation of districts, shall take effect, at the next ensuing election, after such alteration is made.

That on the first Thursday and succeeding Friday in the month of August of the year 1828, and on the same days in every fourth year thereafter, the citizens of each State who possess the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature shall meet within their respective districts and vote for a President and Vice-President of the United States, one of whom at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with himself; and the person receiving the greatest number of votes for President and the one receiving the greatest number of votes for Vice-President in each district shall be holden to have received one vote; which fact shall be immediately certified to the governor of the State, to each of the Senators in Congress from such State, and to the President of the Senate.

The right of affixing the places in the districts at which the elections shall be held, the manner of holding the same, and of canvassing the votes and certifying the returns is reserved exclusively to the Legislatures of the States. The Congress of the United States shall be in session on the second Monday of October, in the year 1828, and on the same day in every fourth year thereafter, and the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, shall open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted.

The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be President, if such number be equal to a majority of the whole number of votes given; but if no person have such majority, then a second election shall be held, on the first Thursday and succeeding Friday in the month of December then next ensuing, between the persons having the two highest numbers, for the office of President; which second election shall be conducted, the result certified, and the votes counted in the same manner as in the first; and the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President. But if two or more persons shall have received the greatest and equal number of votes at the second election, the House of Representatives shall choose one of them for President, as is now prescribed by the Constitution.

The person having the greatest number of votes for Vice-President, at the first election, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be equal to a majority of the whole number of votes given, and, if no person have such majority, then a second election shall take place, between the persons having the two highest numbers, on the same day that the second election is held for President, and the person having the highest number of votes for Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President. But if two or more persons shall have received the greatest number of votes in the second election, then the Senate shall choose one of them for Vice-President, as is now provided in the Constitution.

But when a second election shall be necessary in the case of Vice-President, and not necessary in the case of President, then the Senate shall choose a Vice-President from the persons having the two highest numbers in the first election, as is now prescribed in the Constitution.

The features of the plan were first the abolition of electors and a direct vote of the people; second, a second election between the two highest on each list when no one has a majority of the whole; third, uniformity in the mode of election.

The prominent features of this plan of election are: 1. The abolition of electors, and the direct vote of the people. 2. A second election between the two highest on each list, when no one has a majority of the whole. 3. Uniformity in the mode of election. The advantages of this plan would be to get rid of all the machinery by which the selection of their two first magistrates is now taken out of the hands of the people and usurped by self-constituted, illegal, and irresponsible bodies, and place it in the only safe, proper, and disinterested hands—those of the people themselves. If adopted, there would be no pretext for caucuses or conventions, and no resort to the House of Representatives, where the largest State is balanced by the smallest.

If anyone received a majority of the whole number of districts in the first election, then the Democratic principle—the demos kratco—the majority to govern, is satisfied. If no one receives such majority, then the first election stands for a popular nomination of the two highest—a nomination by the people themselves—out of which two the election is sure to be made on the second trial. But to provide for a possible contingency—too improbable almost ever to occur—and to save in that case the trouble of a third popular election a resort to the House of Representatives is allowed, it being nationally unimportant which is elected where the candidates were exactly equal in the public estimation.

The proposition failed to secure the necessary two-thirds vote of both Houses, and the subject was not taken up again until twenty years had passed, when Senator Benton again called attention to the need of revising the Constitution in the matter of electing the President, and he urged his plan upon the attention of Congress and of the people. Nothing, however, came of this second and last effort of the great Senator to place the Presidential election in the hands of the people.

After the heated campaign of 1824 a new way of placing Presidential candidates before the people came into vogue—that of national conventions, with party platforms. At that time the names of the two great parties of the country were changed.

What had been before known as the Republican party now became the Democratic party, and the Federalists took the name of Whig. The first Democratic national convention was held in 1832, when General Jackson was named the second time for the Presidency by that party. The nomination was ratified in Washington by members of Congress and other distinguished partisans, and a brief platform consisting of three resolutions was adopted. From that time until the present, Presidential candidates have been regularly nominated and put before the people by national conventions, and the electors chosen in the several States are selected with reference to these party nominations.

Each party in the several States is permitted to name its own Presidential electors, and when chosen they understand it to be their duty, though it is not so named in the law, to cast their votes for the candidate of the party to which they belong. They are simply tools by which the leaders of the great parties designate their choice for President, and there is no service beyond that which the electors do or are expected to perform. Their only excuse for existence is that the Constitution requires it. A Presidential elector who would now cast his vote for any other person than the candidate of his party would be ostracised from society by an indignant public sentiment which would know not mercy or forgiveness. Such conduct would be regarded a base betrayal of a party trust, and the guilty person would go down into history as one who had bartered his conscience—a traitor.

We have learned from this fact what a useless and yet how dangerous a body the electoral college is or may be. In calling attention to the fact that the functions of the electoral college have been superseded by party conventions, I do not wish to be understood as commending these bodies, for it is becoming apparent to all observing men that the ordinary party convention, while it appears to be a popular body representing the party will, it is in fact the reverse. It is a body composed largely of persons bent upon their own individual advancement, assisted by office holders and local partisans who expect to be rewarded for their service by official patronage in the event of party success. The tendency of these conventions was foreseen and their dangerous character ably portrayed by eminent men of the last generation—Calhoun, Benton, McDuffie, Jackson, Kent, and many others.

After having carefully considered all the circumstances of danger attending the elections in 1800–'01 and 1824–'25, and after having given due weight to the same, it is not too much to say that the defects of our electoral system were never so painfully apparent, and the public patience never so much strained on account thereof as in the election of 1876–'77, when there was evident danger of a popular insurrection. Public feeling ran so high, party resentments were so strong, that the best thought and judgment of the best and the bravest men of both parties were required to secure a peaceful inauguration of the new President who was chosen by a majority of but 1 vote in a body of fifteen members—a tribunal chosen as a temporary expedient to save the country from trouble.

The effect of the Electoral Commission's work so impressed itself upon the public mind that it can not be forgotten. However, no serious attempts have since been made to prevent the recurrence of such scenes as we had at that time by any amendment of the Constitution that would effectually do the work. There have been suggestions, but nothing beyond that. Our party methods are growing worse instead of better.

Modern party conventions have all the vicious attributes of the earlier bodies of like nature, and they have added many new ones which are still more reprehensible. They are made the occasion for exhibitions discreditable alike to our intelligence and our civilization. They attract hordes of disreputable persons whose presence serves to swell the throng and give it the appearance of a "popular outpouring" of the people.

While the membership of a convention may be 1,000, its sessions brings a hundred times that many persons to the place. Hotels, restaurants, and boarding-houses are filled to overflowing by an excited throng. Rooms are procured long in advance, and "headquarters" for all candidates are established at convenient places long before the convention is called to order. Delegations by the hundred go on special trains, and claqueurs and whippers-in swarm at every turn.

The expense attending one of these conventions is very great, and even the public business is affected by the proceeding. There was nothing of importance done in either branch of Congress during the month of June, 1892, because the national conventions of both great parties were held that month, and many of the Senators and Representatives attended.

National nominating conventions, though not illegal, for they are not prohibited, are without legal authority for their existence. They are in no sense the creatures of law. They are machines invented to perpetuate party unity, by keeping party discipline in the hands of a few leaders. They superseded the Congressional caucus, and have all the vices with none of the virtues of that historic usurpation. John C. Calhoun, in a published address nearly fifty years ago, compared the party convention with the old caucus system as follows:

> I object, then, to the proposed convention, because it will not be constituted in conformity with the fundamental articles of the Republican creed. The delegates to it will be appointed from some of the States, not by the people in the districts, but, as has been stated by State conventions en masse, composed of delegated appointed in all cases, as far as I am informed, by county and district conventions, and in some cases, if not misinformed, these again composed of delegates appointed by still smaller divisions, or a few interested individuals.
> Instead, then, of being directly or fresh from the people, the delegates to the Baltimore convention will be the delegates of delegates; and of course removed, in all cases, at least three if not four degrees from the people. At each successive remove the voice of the people will become less full and distinct, until, at last, it will be so faint and imperfect as not to be audible. To drop metaphor, I hold it impossible to form a scheme more perfectly calculated to annihilate the control of the people over the Presidental election, and vest it in those who make politics a trade and who live or expect to live on the Government.
> And here let me add that as objectionable as I think a Congressional caucus for nominating a President, it is, in my opinion, far less so than a convention constituted as is proposed. The former had indeed many things to recommend it. Its members, consisting of Senators and Representatives, were the immediate organs of State Legislatures or the people, were responsible to them, respectively, and were for the most part of high character, standing, and talents. They voted per capita, and what is very important, they represented fairly the relative strength of the party in their respective States.
> In all these important particulars it was all that could be desired for a nominating body, and formed a striking contrast to the proposed convention; and yet it could not be borne by the people in the then purer days of the Republic. I, acting with Gen. Jackson and most of the leaders of the party at that time, contributed to put it down, because we believed it to be liable to be acted on and influenced by the patronage of the Government, an objection far more applicable to a convention constituted as the one proposed than to a Congressional caucus.

Among the many other defects of the electoral system I will mention several of the more important. First, it disfranchises minorities of voters in every State. At every election when this plan is put in practice the electors are named, as before stated, by the parties, and they are voted for on a general ticket. The majority party, even though the majority be by but a single vote, carries the whole State with it, and the entire electoral vote of the State is counted for the party which has secured the majority. The minority vote is not counted at all; it is absolutely lost, and has no effect in making up the general verdict.

Take a single illustration. The popular vote of the State of Pennsylvania in the recent election was Republican, 516,011; Democrat, 452,264; Prohibition, 25,123; Populist, 8,714; making a total of 486,101 votes in opposition to the Republican vote, lacking only 14,956 votes of a majority in a total vote of 1,002,011; yet the entire electoral vote of the State was given to the Republicans, and these 486,101 opposition votes—nearly half a million—were not considered at all in the final result. The same is true in every other State of the Union. The minority, be it large or small, is wholly disfranchised.

Second, the electoral plan frequently disfranchises majorities in the different States. This happens in all cases where pluralities elect—where there are three or more parties with candidates and electoral tickets to be voted for; no one having a majority, but the one having the highest number of votes, carrying the State. The entire electoral vote of the State is given to the candidate having the highest number of votes though that number may be far short of a majority of all the votes cast. This point is illustrated in the cases of Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Virginia, and other States in the recent election.

Take the case of Michigan. The Republican vote of that State was 222,708; the Democratic vote was 202,296; the Prohibition vote was 20,569; the Populist vote was 20,412; making a total of 243,277 votes opposed to the 222,708 Republican votes, clearly a majority of 20,569 votes over the Republican vote, yet the electoral vote of the State is given to the Republican candidate because that candidate received a larger number of votes than any one of the other three. Here the majority is disfranchised—more than a quarter million votes.

Take the case of New York, where the Democratic vote was 654,908, the Republican vote 609,459, the Prohibition vote 38,190, the Populist vote 16,429, making a total of 664,078 votes in opposition to the Democratic vote, clearly a majority of 9,170 over the Democratic vote, yet the total electoral vote of the State is given to the Democratic candidate because he received a larger number of votes than any one of the other three candidates who were voted for—a disfranchisement of 664,078 voters, largely over half a million. Similar facts appear in the vote of many other States, as mentioned above.

It is proper to state here that these figures are not given as absolutely correct; they are taken from the reports which have been published in the press of the country as being correct.

And in cases of mistakes, or through ignorance or neglect of voters, or through frauds of officials having charge of the elections or of the returns, it sometimes happens that even the conceded legal rights of pluralities and majorities are defeated in certain States by dividing the number of electors between two parties, when the votes of the people as actually cast were for only one party. This was illustrated in the recent election in the States of North Dakota and California.

Third, the electoral plan frequently defeats the will of a majority of the people of the whole nation as expressed in the popular vote. This has happened in nine of the eighteen national elections since a record of the popular vote has been kept, beginning in 1824, as will appear from an inspection of the following tables, which show that in 1844, in 1848, in 1856, 1860, 1876, 1880, 1884, 1888, and 1892, the person who was chosen President of the United States did not receive a majority of the popular vote.

I have prepared a number of tables here giving the popular vote at each of the elections for the years whose numbers I have just read. I will call attention to one or two by way of illustration, and ask that the others may be incorporated with my remarks without reading:

1844.

Names of persons voted for.	Popular vote for each.	Votes short of a majority.	Electoral vote for each.	Majority of electoral vote.
James K. Polk	1,337,243	12,063	170	65

A. J. Streeter	146,836
Clinton B. Fisk	246,876

Grover Cleveland	5,567,990	446,019	299	77
Benjamin Harrison	5,176,611		117
James B. Weaver	1,025,060		28
J. W. Bidwell	258,347

*These figures are taken from press reports, the official footings not being attainable when the table was made up. They are not, therefore, given as correct. An accurate and reliable statement can not be given until the Congressional count is made. Mr. Cleveland has probably a larger vote than these figures show; but these give him 81 votes more than one-half the total. They give him 182 votes more than Mr. Harrison received, and 154 votes more than both of his opponents received, though his ticket received, of the popular vote, 882,028 votes less than Harrison and Weaver together—446,020 less than one-half the total vote.

Take the election of 1844. The total vote polled was 2,698,611, of which 1,399,606 constitutes a majority. It appears that Mr. Polk received 1,337,243 votes, which were 12,063 votes short of a majority. Yet Mr. Polk received 170 electoral votes, while Henry Clay received but 105 electoral votes.

Then take the case of the last election, that of 1892, when the total vote was 12,028,008 votes, of which number 6,014,005 votes constitute a majority. Grover Cleveland received 5,567,990 votes, being 446,019 votes, nearly half a million, short of a majority. Yet Mr. Cleveland received 299 electoral votes, while Benjamin Harrison received but 117 electoral votes, and James B. Weaver 28 votes.

These demonstrate the proposition that the electoral system as at present applied in practice frequently defeats the popular will, giving to the person chosen less than a majority of the entire vote.

But, Mr. President, the electoral plan does not fairly represent even the will of voters in the different parties. It often happens that the person who is made the Presidential candidate of the party is not the choice of a majority of the members of that party. The electors vote for the party candidate as his name appears upon the party ticket, yet it appears occasionally that the candidate was not much thought of in that connection before the balloting of the national convention began. The following tables, which have been made up largely from a valuable little publication compiled and edited by Henry H. Smith, and published by the J. M. W. Jones Stationery and Printing Company, Chicago, Ill., are full of interest in this connection.

I have drawn up a number of tables giving the votes of the different national conventions for a number of years mentioned, showing that in many instances persons whose names had not been mentioned or barely mentioned, not generally thought of by most of the members of the party or the people generally, were chosen as the party standard-bearer at the particular convention and made the choice of the party. This happened in 1844, and I will mention that as one case, where Lewis Cass, Richard M. Johnson, Martin Van Buren, and James K. Polk were voted for; but Mr. Polk's name was not brought before the convention until the eighth ballot, when he received 44 votes. On the ninth ballot he received 266 votes. His name was not presented to the convention at all in the beginning.

I have separated the tables into the Democratic conventions and the Republican conventions. The table from which I have commented was that of the national Democratic convention of 1844. Then I have half a dozen others of a similar nature, and without reading them or commenting upon them further I ask that they may be incorporated with my remarks.

There is still another defect in the electoral system which, though not yet forced upon our attention by a case in point, is well worth considering at this time. For under existing constitutional provision it may occasion trouble any Presidential year. This defect is stated clearly by Judge Story:

SEC. 1471. Another defect in the Constitution is that no provision was originally, or is now, made for a case where there is an equality of votes by the electors for more persons than the constitutional number, from which the House of Representatives is to make the election. The language of the original text is that the House shall elect "from the five highest on the list." Suppose there were six candidates, three of whom had an equal number, who are to be preferred? The amendment is that the House shall elect "from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three." Suppose there should be four candidates, two of whom should have an equality of votes, who are to be preferred?

Such a case is quite within the range of probability, and may hereafter occasion very serious dissensions. One object in lessening the number of the persons to be balloted for from five to three doubtless was to take away the chance of any person having very few votes from being chosen President against the general sense of the nation. Yet it is obvious now that a person having but a very small number of electoral votes might under the present plan be chosen President if the other votes were divided between two eminent rival candidates, the friends of each of whom might prefer any other to such rival candidate. Nay, their very hostility to each other might combine them in a common struggle to throw the final choice upon the third candidate, whom they might hope to control or fear to dislodge.

But, Mr. President, getting closer to the subject, there is one reason greater than all others why the President should be chosen by the people themselves without the interference of any intermediate tribunal. The people of the United States constitute a nation and the President represents the people, not the States but the people—the people of the States in their collective capacity. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, and the President is its special protector and defender. "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

The States have their own governments, conducted by officers elected by their own people, and they are represented in the National Legislature by persons specially chosen for that purpose. Senators and Representatives come here not to represent the whole country, but only their own constituencies. They confer with others here who like themselves come from the several States, but they are expected to guard the local interests of their own people in all the legislation of Congress.

The President in this respect differs from every other officer; it is his business, primarily and always, to look after the affairs of the whole people. He is required, upon the assembling of Congress, to inform that body what is the state of the Union, and to suggest measures which in his opinion will be helpful in promoting the general welfare. The people are therefore more directly interested in this than in any other office of the National Government. And this interest is constantly growing.

It must be so, because our national industries and productive forces are extending in all directions, producing wealth in fabulous proportions with a diversity of great interests never before equaled in the history of men. With every new year come new inventions and multiplied processes of production and the interchange of commodities. Our territorial area has expanded until it reaches across the continent; our agricultural industry leads that of the foremost nation; our manufacturing interests are not equaled by those of any other people; our mines exceed those of all Europe in extent and value; our railroads measure nearly one-half the mileage of the world; and our internal commerce exceeds in weight and in value the combined foreign commerce of all the nations of Europe. The traffic of the Pennsylvania Railway alone exceeds the foreign commerce of Great Britain, the mistress of the seas.

These great facts are the product of the energy, skill, and labor of 65,000,000 people. These things are bringing about social and political conditions that are nationalizing all our great interests. In our commerce with one another, in our social and religious intercourse, in our habits, we know nothing about State boundaries. It would be practically impossible to be or to do otherwise. An edict to stop the machinery of our interstate traffic that we might change every time we reach the limit of a State's territory, would provoke a revolution instantly. The people would not because they could not, submit to it.

In the rapid rush of modern trade we stop only when we must. Within the present generation, and since the great war was fought, our railway interests have been consolidated so that we have continuous lines from sea to sea and moving in the same way and with the same characteristic impetuosity in every direction across our great country. We are impatient at every delay even though it be necessary. We are applying electricity as a force in the propulsion of traveling machines. We are straightening our lines of railway, and our engineers, our scientists, and inventors are busy solving the problem of rapid, safe, and cheap transportation. We can not stop until the surveyor locates legal boundary lines.

The public school, the distribution of Government publications, the associated press dispatches, the metropolitan newspapers, and the active, enterprising movements of the restless Anglo-Saxon are bringing us closer and closer together. The great war taught us to respect American manhood. It taught us that the union of the American States is to be perpetual, that the Republic is an entity, a nation of freemen with only one flag, and with but one face to every enemy, foriegn or domestic.

Briefly, every new phase of our wonderful development tends to cement more strongly our loyalty to the country and to our form of government. We are to-day the most powerful and the most prosperous nation on the earth, and there is not one man or woman on American soil who does not love the country in its entirety. Not one public man, even though he had the power, would take his State out of the Union and revive the sovereignty which it claimed and enjoyed before the Constitution was formed. Not one sect of religion, not one association of men or of women, not one political body in any part of the country would be willing to see one star or one ray of a star eliminated from our galaxy of States.

We all want to retain our local jurisdiction. We all want to retain and to exercise every attribute of sovereignty which we need for purposes of local government; but none of us would withdraw a single grant of power to the nation necessary for the proper execution of national powers. These things all tend to bring the office of President close to the people, and they show to us the importance of removing every barrier between the voter and the man who is to execute the laws of the Union. They are conclusive to the unprejudiced mind that if we would purify our politics, if we would perpetuate our institutions, and if we would grow stronger and better from year to year, the more simple our elections are, the closer we bring the people and their officers together, the more directly will the just responsibilities of official station be measured by the persons with whom we intrust the management of our public affairs.

The people are sovereign. Our Constitution and our form of government under it were ordained and organized by the people for their own benefit and protection. They have the right to require that their votes shall operate upon the object for which their suffrages are exercised. The reason for the invention of the electoral system has passed away. The fear that the people would not be competent to choose wisely in so grave a matter as the choice of a President of the United States was unfounded.

It would be strange indeed that a nation of people such as we, having more than 12,000,000 voters and 13,000,000 of our children in school, with colleges and universities in every State; with a newspaper circulation reaching every house in the land; with a post-office within an hour's ride of every citizen's door; with a railway station in easy reach of every farm, and with numberless appliances for ready and rapid production of necessary articles of food, clothing, and shelter, and with abundant facilities for rapid transit from place to place, it would be strange, I repeat, having grown to this marvelous development in a century, if we could not safely be intrusted with the election of our Chief Magistrate.

As to the particular plan of election proposed, it is not as important as the idea upon which the plan is based. The great thing is to bring the election of President close to the people.

In the study of the particular plan and in the preparation of the joint resolution (No. 32) I have had the benefit of assistance and suggestions from a friend in New York, who has devoted much time and study to the subject, with the view of having a similar plan adopted in that State.

The citizen who desires to cast a vote which may be effective in influencing the policy of his Government through the choice of the agents or officials whom he would intrust with power, must necessarily vote either with the party representing or the party opposing that policy. A vote cast independently may be an expression of the dissatisfaction or discontent of the citizen with both parties, but so far as it is an expression upon the real issues involved it is more than that. It is half a vote in behalf of the principle he condemns, since he withholds from those with whom he is most in sympathy upon those issues, however slight may be his preference, a vote which might be made to contribute to their success.

Only by making some provision, which, recognizing the tendency in the public mind to form into two great bodies as a means by which the people may vote either for or against the policy of the Government, shall seek to perfect and popularize these methods, can the political convention and the existing primary or caucus be displaced, and the best means suited to that end would seem to be such as provide a method by which the citizens representing the principles or issues in favor of the Government can cast their votes in selecting their candidate to represent those principles, and the citizens opposed to that policy can also attain the same end as to their candidate and their principles.

The proposed method, I believe, will accomplish this. The citizen casting a ballot with the caption of the Republican or the Democrat or Populist party, knows that in doing so, in voting for any candidate he may choose to select from its ranks, he is not contributing to the success of the opposite party. He possesses entire freedom of action. He knows that if his candidate does not receive 2,000 votes out of 2,000,000 cast by his political associates, yet his principle is protected for the reason that a canvass must be made first to ascertain the sense of his associates in the selection of the candidate, and thereby placing upon his ballot the words incorporated in the proposed amendment he has contributed, to the full extent that he can contribute under present methods, a vote in behalf of the principles which represent his convictions.

There might still be political conventions held prior to the election. But they would only present candidates; they would not nominate them. They would suggest and recommend, but they would not choose; their power would be advisory, not mandatory. Instead of one there might be several Democratic conventions or Republican or other conventions, but each would submit its recommendation as to candidates and issues to the voters of its own element to be chosen or rejected by those voters. The power of the convention, to choose, to dictate, to enforce its wishes upon the voter, would be gone.

An election, instead of being one in which the voters are to be cajoled, threatened, bribed, or driven to the polls, would be an expression of the thoughtful and intelligent voice of the people, every voter exercising to the extent of his capacity his powers of discrimination and giving his ballot as an expression of his deliberate choice. At such an election bribery would be futile. The candidate whose methods were tainted in the slightest degree with corruption would lose thousands where he could by any possibility gain hundreds of votes.

As to the agencies which would be displaced by this method, they are not responsible to the people.

Instead of being directly or fresh from the people—

Said Mr. Calhoun—

the delegates to the Baltimore convention will be delegates of delegates, and of course removed in all cases at least three if not four degrees from the people. At each successive remove the voice of the people will become less full and distinct until at last it will be so faint and imperfect as not to be audible. I hold it impossible to form a scheme more perfectly calculated to annihilate the control of the people over the Presidential election and vest it in those who make politics a trade, and who live or expect to live on the Government.

The truth of this description is attested by common observation. One needs but to attend a national convention to behold, not a gathering of men intent upon the duty of discovering the fittest representative of a great people, but a gathering made up of officeholders and lobbyists, who make the selection best suited to the attainment of their own selfish ends.

From the primary meeting to the national convention nothing is to be found which should characterize a dignified and intelligent expression of the public will with reference to the grave questions which are reflected in the workings of Republican institutions. At the primary meeting deliberation is entirely wanting; the meetings are frequently packed with those who under the rules of the party have no right to be present. The election officers are vested with absolute power over the count of the votes, the political committees alone have authority to select the places of meeting and they are often designedly chosen with a view of securing the presence only of particular individuals or elements, without adequate public notice.

The feature most serious of all is that in the selection of the delegate to the district convention, the voter at the primary finds that his vote possesses no value to advance his own conviction by reason of the fact that he is unconscious of the real aims or purposes of the delegates presented to his choice; so the delegate to the district convention has no knowledge of the aims of the delegate he selects for the State convention; and the delegate to the State convention is in most cases in the same condition of ignorance regarding the wishes or choice of the delegate to the national convention.

Only those vested with or intent upon the possession of patronage are informed upon this point, and they alone are really the selecting or nominating body. It is this element that fixes the time for the meeting of conventions and primaries; it is this element which selects the election officers; it is this element which selects the delegate, and it is this element which stops not at any means by which its own designs may be attained and the popular will suppressed.

The plan in question is a substitute for these objectionable methods. Under it the people may meet in one grand primary meeting, distributed throughout the entire country but held upon a given date, upon a day known to every voter in the Union; the election laws protect them in the full exercise of their rights; they select no delegates who would frustrate their will, but with their own ballots by one act express their voice first in the selection of a candidate to represent their principles, and then, by a simple direction upon their ballots, contribute all the power they at present possess to advance the principles which they would have embodied in the policy of their government.

Mr. President, the arguments thus far advanced in favor of the popular election of President have added force when applied in the discussion of the pending resolution which proposes to confine the services of that high officer within the limits of one period whose extent was known before he qualified.

In advocacy of a single term for the President it may be said, to begin with, that the length of the term is a matter of detail. Four years is too short. Whether eight years is too long is debatable. Whether the term should be an even or an odd number of years is a matter worth considering. I will spend no time now considering these minor matters.

As I have already shown, in every draft except one proposed for a new Constitution by the members of the Federal convention, the provision relating to the executive office contained a limitation of the tenure to a single term. And it was not until the proceedings of the convention were well advanced, and not until the electoral system was substantially agreed upon that the limitation was removed, making the President eligible to reëlection. The single term has been advocated by many of our most accomplished statesmen, and our Presidents have frequently called attention to the importance of the subject.

While, so far as the record shows, there is no instance of a President refusing to accept a second term, there are many instances where the candidate for the Presidency and the President himself when entering upon the duties of his great office, took occasion to remind the people that one term for the President would be better for them. It is probably true at this time that a very large majority of our voters favor the single-term idea. They would extend it beyond the length of the present length of term, but the general opinion is that it would be better to limit the office to one term.

President Jackson, in his first annual message to Congress, recommended a change of the electoral system to one that would give the people a direct choice in the election of their President, and in connection with that recommendation he also expressed himself in favor of the limitation to a single term, and in subsequent Congressional debates on this subject the Jacksonian idea was conspicuously in favor.

The arguments in favor of a single term are numerous, and they all play around one central idea—the sovereignty of the people. It would relieve the Presidential office from many embarrassments which now environ it. It would tend largely to relieve the country of the quadrennial scandals which we witness upon the incoming of a new administration. It would, to a very great extent, do away with the dread which business men entertain when there is prospect of a great conflict between parties contending for different methods of fiscal policy. It would rid the country of swarms of place-hunters which now buzz about the sources of patronage, whose habits vitiate our political morals.

It would restore to many of our citizens the manhood of their younger and better years before the allurements of office drew them into the whirlpool of politics. It would give to the office of President a security, an independence, and a dignity which it has not now and never can have again as long as it is made a citadel to be continuously attacked by a hungry horde whose only ambition is to appropriate the spoils. As it is now, when the President assumes office his friends set about to secure his reelection that they may profit by it, while his enemies of the same party conspire to compass his defeat in order that through his retirement they in turn may procure office. A single term for the President would relieve us of all that.

If it be suggested that to elect the President by a direct vote of the people and to limit his tenure to a single term, would have the effect to destroy the cohesion of parties and render useless the splendid machinery of party organization, it may be answered, first: The resolution which I have been discussing proposes to save to the voters of every party all their privileges in that respect; and, second, that to weaken party ties would not be an unmixed evil; indeed, it sometimes becomes necessary in the common interest to defeat and disband great parties. This always happens when a new issue of grave import is brought forward—an issue on which party leaders take one side and the voting masses take the other. This took place in 1860, and I expect it to occur again in 1896.

Political parties as now managed are among the great things that could be safely dispensed with. Their methods do not reflect the will of a majority of their membership; they are made the tools of powerful factions and large speculative enterprises, all more or less controlled by forces which operate at the money and trade centers. The political campaign of the modern type has dropped to so low a level that the managers, like commanders of armies in war, think only of success. Means to be employed are not put to the Christian's test.

Acts that would not pass muster in the ordinary affairs of life go unchallenged in a political contest when party interests are at stake. So far down have we gone that we purchase votes as we would days' works. And this sort of moral profligacy always involves at least two specific crimes, the bribe and the concealing and defending of the perpetrators.

The cost, in dollars, of one campaign is enormous; the loss to our public morals is great beyond estimate.

So large have our election expenses grown that in some of the States laws have been enacted requiring public statements showing how much money is so used and for what particular purposes. This brings out part of the amount disbursed by committees, but it does not bring to public view the greater amount paid out by local candidates and by individual workers on their own account. Concerning the amount of funds raised by the national committees during the last Presidential campaign the New York Sun of November 3 published the following. I omit irrelevant matter.

Submitted herewith is the authoritative statement of expenses of this campaign up to date. This is not hearsay evidence; it comes from the highest source. In the first place the nomination of President Harrison at Minneapolis cost $100,000. Since then the Republicans have raised $2,500,000. * * *

The expenses of the Democrats in the national fight, dating from February 22 last, when at Albany the antisnap movement was inaugurated, have been large. All told, that movement cost $200,000.

The nomination of Mr. Cleveland at Chicago cost approximately $300,000. This statement is made on the authority of a member of the national Democratic committee. The expenses at national headquarters have been larger proportionately than at Mr. Carter's shop.

The Democratic committee has been compelled each week to face a salary list 2 yards long. * * * The distribution of funds from the two headquarters in the last two days will perhaps demonstrate clearly more than anything else just where the fight is. There may be one or two errors in the Republican schedule, for the reason that one or two statements could not actually be confirmed, but it is approximately correct.

The Republican schedule is as follows: New York, $600,000; New York City, $50,000; Indiana, $250,000; Connecticut, $100,000; Alabama, $100,000; Delaware, $25,000. Total, $1,125,000.

Funds have also been sent to Virginia, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas.

The Democratic schedule is correct. It is furnished by an eminent authority.

The funds distributed by the Democrats within the last forty-eight hours have been sent as follows: New York State, $300,000; New York City, $100,000; Indiana, $140,000; Ohio, $50,000; Virginia, $15,000; West Virginia, $35,000; Connecticut, $75,000; North Carolina, $40,000. Total, $755,000.

In the foregoing schedule the amounts sent into New Jersey and distributed from the branch headquarters of the national Democratic committee in Chicago are not included. These amounts could not be ascertained.

And by way of showing where the money in large measure comes from, here are a few extracts from an Albany, N. Y., telegram to a Socialist paper:

ALBANY, N. Y., November 29, 1892.

The Evening Journal of this city has been delivering itself of some famous truths. The frankness with which it has been making its statements is what gives them an interest that they would not otherwise have. * * *

Here are some of the curious passages:

"The politics of the business men is the politics of their business. Wall street and what adheres to Wall street is their political creed. * * * It was Republican financiers in this city who nominated Grover Cleveland, and who felt that to control the nominations of the two conventions would be easier than to elect their man at the polls. It is the acme of the science of modern politics.

In view of this remarkable conspiracy to control the nominees of the popular conventions it will be recalled how frequently wealthy but inactive Republicans were heard to remark during the recent campaign that they were glad Cleveland was nominated; that in any event the country was safe, and that they cared little whether Harrison or Cleveland won. This idea found no expression in the public press, but every man knows how deeply rooted it was in the minds of the men whom he met in daily intercourse.

Business men said simply: "We are safe with either. This is the cheapest election that we have experienced for twenty-five years. Heads we win, tails you lose." And the poor, deluded Populists of the West fell into the trap and helped to down Harrison.

We shall have parties, Mr. President, as long as we have issues to determine, and that is well. But the general welfare does not require that political organizations should grow gray before they die. Old parties drift away from the toiling masses and drop into dangerous ways. They become arbitrary and oppressive. Their leaders grow rich and powerful or they become subservient to great interests that are able to pay campaign expenses. Parties ought to be always young. Then they are vigorous and responsive, quick to catch the people's voice and prompt to execute their will.

Once give to the people the privilege of casting their votes directly for the chief officer of the Republic, knowing that he is not eligible to a second term, and you bring about a new and better education of voters, who would then divide themselves on present issues; they would rise to a higher plane of political thought; they would organize on principles and not on prejudices, taking care of to-day rather than of yesterday, and they would hold to parties only as long as they were useful in promoting the general welfare.

Great measures of public policy would then be originated by the people themselves, whose representatives in Congress would proceed without party bitterness, engendered in a heated party struggle, to execute the will of the voters. The campaign caravan would be abolished, the noise and the glamour, the pyrotechnics and the gaudy displays of party gatherings would cease to attract and amuse, and the tone of political literature would be in corresponding degree purified and improved. It would permit the birth of new parties without placing weights and manacles on them, for then all will have learned that new parties are needed to handle new issues. Voters would change their party alignment with every change of issue, and when a victory is won it would be a victory of the people.

DISTRICT IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives in relation to Senate bill 1307.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE, June 30, 1892.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives disagree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the House to Senate bill 1307, to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities.

IN THE HOUSE, January 18, 1893.

Resolved, That the House further insist upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1307) to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities, and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. HEARD, and Mr. POST be the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate grant the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. PERKINS were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 9611) to amend section 847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to commissioners' fees;

A bill (H. R. 9612) to amend section 833 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to semiannual returns of fees by district attorneys, marshals, and clerks;

A bill (H. R. 9613) to amend section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to clerks' fees;

A bill (H. R. 9979) to regulate the right of appeal in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. 9610) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to offenses against the United States.

The following bills were generally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 10062) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River between the mouths of the Pomme de Terre River and Buffalo Creek, in Benton County, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 6797) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahawba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway.

The bill (H. R. 9053) to punish trespassers on the lands of either of the five civilized tribes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 9069) for the further continuance of the publication of the supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.

CALIFORNIA DÉBRIS COMMISSION.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9286) to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California. I think it will take but a little time. It is a short bill, and it is quite important that it should be passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I think it would facilitate the consideration of the bill to have the amendments of the committee considered as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], on which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, when at the last meeting of the Senate for business I addressed myself to this question the interruptions, of which I did not and do not complain, led to the extension of my remarks to a length which I had not contemplated when I commenced, and I do not intend to occupy a great amount of time this morning.

On Tuesday I endeavored to show, and I think I did show, that the proposed legislation was in no sense whatever an exercise of the taxing power. Other Senators had said that it was not a legitimate use of the taxing power of the Constitution; that it was an abuse of the taxing power of the Constitution. I maintain that it would be in no sense an exercise of the power to lay and collect taxes which is found in the Constitution of the United States, because the penalties or exactions, whichever they may be called, which the bill imposes upon those who deal in property which they have not in hand at the time they propose to sell it can not be called taxes. They are not intended to raise revenue, and it is a primary and essential purpose of a tax that it shall raise revenue. Whatever else may be intended by the laying of a tax, it must be in addition to the purpose to raise revenue and not disconnected from it.

I will not go over the ground of my argument on a former day, but I want to call attention once more to the danger of the doctrine which is to be proclaimed by the passage of this bill, the doctrine that the power to tax is the power to destroy, and therefore Congress has the right to destroy.

Mr. President, there has been no question of such momentous consequence before Congress since the war of the rebellion. The deliberate announcement that Congress may destroy individual property of any kind in any State and may prohibit individual business of any kind in any State is the most dangerous doctrine ever proclaimed in this Chamber since it was announced that States had a right to secede from the Union and that the Government had no power to coerce them.

I beg Senators who think that in an incautious moment they have in some way become committed to the passage of this bill to stop and consider what they will be committed to if the bill passes. Can a Senator commit himself to the doctrine that Congress may destroy all individual property at will in every State of the Union, may prohibit all individual business at will in every State of the Union? For that is the meat and the essence of this bill.

The bill is defended upon only what has been called an aphorism, that the power to tax involves the power to destroy, upon what it was supposed the Supreme Court decided in the case which related to the tax, as it was called, upon the circulation of national banks. I have shown, I think, that that case decided no such thing; that that case was put directly upon the power of Congress to pass an act to provide for a uniform currency, and that no dicta in it can be held to commit the court to the terrible doctrine that Congress may destroy what it may tax.

The only other ground or show of authority upon which it is claimed is a magazine article written by Judge Cooley in the number of the Atlantic Monthly for April, 1892. Probably no Senator has a greater respect for that eminent man than I have. If that article had been written by Judge Cooley with the same deliberation and care displayed by him in his great work on Taxation, I should have entertained more respect for its authority than I do now. But I submit that in that article Judge Cooley did not answer the objections which he therein so well stated to such proposed legislation. I wish to read his statement of the objections:

It would, in other words, be making practical application by the Federal Government of the legal aphorism that "a power to tax is a power to destroy."

It is here that the chief question of contention will arise. Lotteries could not be directly reached by the General Government by such hostile measures as might be employed by the State under whose authority they had been set up, with a purpose of rendering their operations illegal. Congress, for example, could not take from a lottery company the charter which a State Legislature had granted; it could not make the issue of its tickets illegal; it could not punish as a crime the action of its officers by which its ordinary business is carried on. Federal power, if exercised against it, must be altogether indirect, and the act by which the injury is inflicted upon it will seem to profess one thing while intending another.

It will not be denied that, under a constitutional government, there are serious objections to the powers conferred upon it being exercised in an indirect way, which keeps the actual purpose out of view. What it has been empowered to do should be done directly, and what it has not been empowered to do, or what it can not do directly, it ought not, in general, to do at all. That which is plainly within the jurisdiction of a member of the Federal Union ought not to be drawn into the jurisdiction of the Union itself by any indirect means.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Connecticut read the last sentence again?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly. Judge Cooley says:

That which is plainly within the jurisdiction of a member of the Federal Union ought not to be drawn into the jurisdiction of the Union itself by any indirect means. The indirect method, though employed in such a manner as to be, when considered by itself, a benefit to the people, will constitute a precedent which may possibly be troublesome hereafter; and any citizen, though not disposed to be overstrict in the construction of sovereign grants, may well be excused if he finds it difficult to give ready assent to any indirect measure which may appear to him to embody within itself the possibilities of unknown future mischief.

I venture to say that Judge Cooley does not answer that statement of the objection to such legislation in the whole of his article. He simply says at the conclusion of the article that he would destroy such transactions by taxing them out of existence. Against that conclusion of Judge Cooley and against the construction which he puts upon the language of Chief Justice Marshall that the power to tax involves the power to destroy, I want to quote Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation, and see what power he then thought was given to Congress under the taxing power. In the second edition of Cooley on Taxation, in a note, he says:

Chief-Justice Marshall says, in McCullough vs. Maryland, that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." And again, "if the right to tax exists, it is a right which, in its nature, acknowledges no limits. It may be carried to any extent within the jurisdiction of the State or corporation which imposes it, which the will of such State or corporation may prescribe." Westen vs. Charleston, 2 Pet., 449.

Now, listen to Judge Cooley's comments:

The learned Chief Justice, in these cases, was arguing against the existence of the power; and the idea he expresses so forcibly is that the power to tax is so vast, and rests upon reasons which at times are so imperative, that it may be exercised again and again, as the exigencies of the State may demand, until the property taxed is exhausted or the privilege taxed can no longer be exercised.

That is what Judge Cooley says that Chief Justice Marshall meant by saying that the power to tax involved the power to destroy; not that there might be a destruction by taxation out and out, but that legitimate taxation might be imposed so frequently that at last it would operate to destroy the business upon which the tax was laid. He proceeds:

This statement has abundant illustrations in history, of people absolutely impoverished by taxation, and even in individual cases sold into slavery because they could not meet the demands of the State upon them. It may justly be questioned whether this strong statement, which was put forth as a defense against an injurious tax, will fairly justify an affirmative exercise of power that has not revenue in view, but is only called a tax in order that it may be employed as an instrument of destruction. In other words, whether the unavoidable incident to the exercise of a power to demand and collect revenue can lawfully be the inducement to the exercise of the power when revenue is not contemplated or sought.

I appeal from Judge Cooley in the Atlantic Monthly to Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation.

Mr. President, once more I want to look this proposition in the eye. I wish those Senators who feel that in some thoughtless moment, by some incautious word, they have in some way pledged or committed themselves to the passage of this bill, or fear that they will be considered as having in some way committed themselves to the passage of the bill, to look it in the eye.

What is this proposition? It is that Congress may lawfully destroy or prohibit within the several States any business or methods of business it regards as injurious to a class of citizens of the United States by calling the penalties it prescribes or imposes for the purpose taxes or the regulation of commerce. The statement of the proposition ought to refute it.

But many Senators, agreeing with me both as to the untenability of the doctrine that you may destroy under the guise of taxation and to its danger, feel that they may safely prohibit directly these transactions by criminal penalties under the power to regulate commerce among the States, and that is the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I understand from his remarks that that Senator himself denies the power to deal with this question under the taxing power of Congress, but thinks we may make the dealing in futures, whether fictitious or real, a crime, because that business is an obstruction and a restraint to commerce.

Now, I submit to that Senator and to those who feel that they could follow him in the passage of a bill when so amended, that the argument against that proposition is practically the same as the argument against the attempt to destroy by taxation, and it comes right back to a definition of the question, what is the regulation of commerce among the States? The word "commerce" in its widest sense extends to all trade, to all traffic wherever it may take place the world over. No matter how broad its signification may be in the general sense, when used in the Constitution in the clause from which the power is now sought to be derived, it means commerce among the several States and nothing else. It gives Congress no power to regulate commerce in the several States; it gives Congress no power to regulate commerce generally under the wide and general meaning of commerce that it is trade and traffic; it simply gives Congress power to regulate the commerce which exists or takes place between the several States of the Union.

There is nothing so potent to destroy a fallacy or a sophistry as definitions. Let us look for a moment at what commerce among the States is. I refer again to the authority referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, Justice Miller's Lectures on Constitutional Law, who says on page 446, under the side note, "What is commerce?"

We must next, in order to ascertain with any philosophical nicety what is meant by this clause, take some of its parts into the field of definition. And first let us consider what is commerce. You remember that the commerce to be regulated by Congress is that "with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;" but the word "commerce" is applicable to all these, and it is essential to have some idea as to what is meant by the word. It is defined in Gibbons vs. Ogden, as well as in some later cases, but it is difficult to give in any one sentence its entire meaning as employed in the Constitution. The ordinary meaning is trade and traffic—intercourse between different peoples—and that will perhaps answer for our purpose as a general definition of the word as used in this clause. But traffic and trade are composed of a great many elements so far as the means are concerned by which, and the persons by and between whom, they are carried on.

Later on he says:

Having ascertained, then, what commerce is, and what are some of its elements which may be the subject of the action of Congress or of the attempted action of the States, we next come to consider what it is to "regulate" commerce. You will observe from the extracts quoted from the Federalist, and still more if you study the history of the formation of the Constitution, that the word "regulate" was one much more frequently used in those days than it is now; undoubtedly our forefathers used it in a larger and wider sense than it would generally be used at this time. But we have, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, that magazine of constitutional law upon this subject, a definition by Chief Justice Marshall of what it is to regulate commerce, which perhaps can never be excelled in its brevity, accuracy, and comprehensiveness. He says that "to regulate commerce is to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. Commerce—

And I call especial attention to this—

"Commerce being intercourse and traffic between people, to regulate it is to prescribe rules by which it shall be conducted."

Mr. President, can there be a claim that the power to regulate commerce among the States is anything more than this, that it goes one inch beyond the power to regulate commerce as it flows from one State to another?

A recent case which I think has already been referred to in this discussion, but not at length, settles this question absolutely. The case of Coe vs. Errol, as I understand it, lays down and establishes the proposition that property within a State does not and can not come within the jurisdiction of Congress under the power to regulate commerce among the States until it has been actually delivered to a common carrier for transportation to another State or is in the process of shipment to such State; that no matter of whom it may have been purchased, no matter for whom it may have been purchased, no matter that the purchaser lives out of the State and in another State and has directed the property to be sent to him, and has paid for it to be sent for him, yet Congress obtains no jurisdiction over that property until it has been actually delivered to a common carrier for shipment to the other State.

A gentleman from New York may come to my home in Connecticut and purchase at a manufactory property manufactured in Connecticut, may pay for it, may superintend the packing of it, to be delivered in New York and start with it in a wagon to be delivered to a common carrier at the depot for transportation to New York, and it still is in no sense interstate commerce; it is still within the power of the State of Connecticut to tax it without interfering with the power of the United States to regulate commerce among the States.

Mr. FRYE. Is that the log case?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, decided in 1886.

Mr. DAWES. Read it, please.

Mr. PLATT. I will read the syllabus:

Goods and chattels within a State are equally taxable whether owned by a citizen of the State, or a citizen of another State, even though the latter be taxed in his own State for the value of the same goods as part of his general personal estate.

Goods, the product of a State, intended for exportation to another State, are liable to taxation as part of the general mass of property of the State of their origin until actually started in course of transportation to the State of their destination, or delivered to a common carrier for that purpose; the carrying of them to and depositing them at a depot for the purpose of transportation is no part of that transportation.

When goods, the product of a State, have begun to be transported from that State to another State, and not till then, they have become the subjects of interstate commerce, and as such, are subject to national regulation, and cease to be taxable by the State of their origin.

Let me repeat that:

When goods, the product of a State, have begun to be transported from that State to another State, and not till then, they have become the subjects of interstate commerce, and, as such, are subject to national regulation, and cease to be taxable by the State of their origin.

Goods on their way through a State from a place outside thereof to another place outside thereof, are in course of interstate or foreign transportation, and are subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and not taxable by the State through which they are passing, even though detained within that State by low water or other temporary cause.

Now, the logs which were in question were cut in New Hampshire and hauled down to the town of Errol, on the Androscoggin River, in that State, to be transported from thence upon the river to Lewiston, Me., and waited at Errol for a convenient opportunity for such transportation. It was—

Held, That they were still part of the general mass of property of the State, liable to taxation, if taxed in the usual way in which such property is taxed in the State.

The opinion of Justice Bradley in this case is one of the clearest, most incisive and conclusive opinions ever written on the subject as to when the United States, under the power to regulate commerce among the States, gets jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Now, what is the contention on the part of the Senator from Mississippi? That there may be a restraint against commerce among the States; that there may be an obstruction to commerce among the States long before the product of one State starts for another State. Further than that, that the methods of dealing with property in one State which may never be the subject of interstate commerce may still be an obstruction to the regulation of commerce among the States. I deny both propositions in toto. I affirm that no dealing, legitimate or illegitimate, in any property in a State can in any way be an obstruction to commerce between that State and another State; that no method of purchase, legal or illegal, that no method of transacting business, so long as the property is in the State and not delivered to a common carrier for transportation from that State to another State, can in any way be an obstruction to, or an interference with, or an injury to, commerce which shall flow from the State to another State.

It seems, Mr. President, as if this were a self-evident proposition. Is a contract of sale within a State interstate commerce? Is it commerce between the States? Why, it is expressly decided that though that purchase were made by a man from outside of the State for the purpose of removing the property out of the State, it is not interstate commerce; that it is not commerce among the States. If, then, it is not interstate commerce, if it is not commerce among the States, it can not be prevented by Congress; it can not be regulated by Congress.

Mr. President, this contention does violence not only to the use of language but to the well-established ideas of every lawyer, and it is as broad and far-reaching in its consequences for injury as is the claim that Congress may destroy everything which it has the right to tax. It does not rest on the ground whether the business proposed to be prohibited is moral or immoral—there is no distinction as to the power of Congress with regard to such contracts—but it rests upon the broad ground that before the articles which are the subjects of the contract of sale have in any sense become subjects of interstate commerce the contracts themselves may be an injury to interstate commerce, and are therefore properly suppressed and made criminal.

If that be true, there is no contract of sale which can be imagined in this broad land which can not be made criminal. I care not whether it is a gambling contract or a legitimate contract; I care not whether it is made on the board of trade or in the store of the wholesale or retail merchant or in the home of the citizen; I care not whether it is a contract for immediate delivery or for future delivery, if the power exists as claimed, every business contract can be made criminal, if only Congress can be impelled by outside clamor and by demagogism to declare it illegal, and the further contention is correct, that Congress having declared the fact, it can not be questioned. It is a dangerous doctrine. It will be like that class of "instructions which return to plague the inventor" if it be adopted.

But are we told how these dealings in options and futures obstruct or restrain commerce between the States? We are not enlightened on that subject. We are asked to declare the fact and make it forever a fact which can not be questioned by the Supreme Court. I do not know whether the Senator would go so far as to say that after having been declared by Congress it could not be questioned by the Executive. We are asked to declare the fact without any proof on the subject, without showing any reason or any way in which such contracts affect, or injure, or restrain, or obstruct commerce between the States.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he understands the contention of those who advocate the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to be that the statement of the fact that a given contract is an obstruction to interstate commerce is conclusive upon the Supreme Court or upon any court of the United States?

Mr. PLATT. I understand that that is the proposition. I will come to that. Did the Senator ask me or ask the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRAY. I asked the Senator from Connecticut, but if the Senator from Mississippi would like to answer it I should like for my own information to have him do so.

Mr. PLATT. I beg the Senator from Mississippi to answer it after I get through my speech if it is just as agreeable to him.

Mr. GRAY. Just say "yes" or "no," for I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut to address himself to that proposition in the very interesting argument he is making.

Mr. PLATT. I expect to address myself to that proposition before I get through.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to know first whether the proposition is maintained by the other side.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that claim is made—I do not know whether it is made by the Senator from Mississippi—but the claim is made by the advocates of his amendment that when Congress has once said that a certain thing is an obstruction to commerce among the States, an injury to it, or a restraint upon it, that is the end of it, and that the Supreme Court is bound by that legislative declaration. I do not know whether they go so far as to say that the Executive is bound or not. I will come to that later on; but I want to say that this claim, if it can be sustained, is as utterly subversive of State government as the claim that you may destroy everything that you may tax.

If there was any one thing which was understood when the Constitution was formed it was that the States which took part in the formation of that Constitution, and the new States which should come in on an equal footing with the other States, did not, and would not, surrender their right to self-government except as to those matters which they committed to the General Government.

Now, there may questions arise as to the line of distinction between what belongs to the State and what belongs to the General Government, and when those questions arise I admit that I am very apt to find myself contending for the power on the part of the General Government. But here is a case where no question can arise. The trading in a State has never until this good, nay, this bad moment, been claimed to be within the jurisdiction of Congress to prevent.

For the first time, with all this hundred years and more of history behind us, here in the year 1893 it is now proclaimed that Congress shall determine how trade shall be carried on in the States as to matters exclusively within the States, as to the products of the State, raised on the soil of the State, sold in the State by one citizen of the State to another, and to be consumed in the State.

Mr. President, was there ever a more dangerous doctrine proclaimed, and was the argument for a doctrine ever more tenuous than in this case? I said that we were not told how, in what way, in what respect, the making of these contracts was an interference with, an obstruction to, or a restraint upon commerce. Is it because it tends to depress the price of an article which may by some possibility be shipped out of the State and into another State?

Mr. President, we took a great deal of pains when we passed what was called the pure-food bill here to provide that Government should not lay its hands upon an article manufactured in one State upon the ground that it was calculated to destroy the health of the people, and was about to be shipped to another State, until it had in fact got into the actual course of transportation. Why were all the Senators so anxious to preserve the power in the State of having complete supervision over articles that were calculated to destroy the health of the people in all sections of the country? Upon the ground I now stand for, that to break down the line between Government authority and State authority as to trade is to wipe out the rights of the States in all respects except as to the mere instrumentalities of government, and to hold that Congress may muzzle the mouth of the Supreme Court of the United States is to hold that a State has no right which Congress is bound to respect.

This question is so large, so far-reaching in its consequences, and may be so disastrous in its results, that it seems hardly worth while to argue whether in any sense as a matter of fact these contracts in any way obstruct or injuriously affect the movement of goods thereafter from one State to another. It was well remarked, however, by a Senator that the lower the price of an article the greater will be the volume of commerce among the States; that the higher the article the less of commerce among the States there will be. That is unquestionably true; but the contention of these farmers combined with millers and elevator men—a strange combination that, by the way—is that whatever lowers the price of their products is an obstruction to commerce among the States, and a restraint thereon.

I beg to submit that even if it were admitted that you might touch these articles in any way under the clause to regulate commerce among the States the lowering of the price upon them would increase the commerce among the States. But how far is this to go? Is it every method of business, is it every transaction, honest or dishonest, moral or immoral, which reduces the price of agricultural products that is to be declared an obstruction to commerce, an injury to commerce, and a restraint upon commerce, so that everyone that takes part in it shall be put into the penitentiary? It is a broad field as well as a dangerous field that we are opening. Are auctions obstructions to commerce among the States? They tend to depress the price. Universally at auctions goods are sold for less than they are sold for at private sale. Are they therefore obstructions to commerce between the States, and is the man who purchases at an auction or who sells at an auction to be declared a criminal and put in the penitentiary?

As I said, there is no operation of business, there is no contract which man makes with man which can not be declared criminal if this doctrine prevails. I do not say it will be declared criminal, and yet when we look at the tendency of events we do not know what clamor, what pressure, what threatened loss of political support may drive Congress to so declare. Is not overproduction as much obstructive of commerce among the States and a restraint upon commerce among the States as the depressing of the price of agricultural products by means of contracts of future sale and delivery? There is a rising sentiment, nay, there has already arisen in this country among the very class of people who are calling for this legislation, a sentiment which holds that no man has a right to cultivate large tracts of the soil.

How shall we remedy it? We may say that the overproduction shall cease. Congress may say that every man who cultivates a hundred acres of corn or wheat, or who cultivates over fifty acres of cotton, obstructs commerce and restrains commerce among the States, and he shall be punished by fine and imprisonment. If it were not thought best to go to that extreme length, then Congress might appoint, as we in the Senate attempted to appoint this morning, a commission. The commission under that bill is to take into consideration hydraulic mining in the State of California; but what prevents Congress, upon the theory that it has the right to regulate commerce, from appointing a commission whose business it shall be to prevent overproduction in the country, and who shall parcel out to every landholder in the country the acres which he may plant with corn, or cotton, or oats, and the number of hogs he may raise on his farm, all because to go beyond what that commission would parcel out would be an obstruction and injury to and a restraint upon commerce?

It is not so improbable that that might be done. The power contended for goes to the extent of saying that any business in any State by any man, legal or illegal, moral or immoral, may be prohibited and made penal and criminal under the power to regulate commerce among the States.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has just alluded to a bill which I called up this morning.

Mr. PLATT. I did not mean to allude to it as a bad bill.

Mr. STEWART. I was going to say that is a system to protect the farmer, and it is based solely on the right to protect commerce in that respect.

Mr. PLATT. I am in favor of the bill. I sat here and it was called up without objection.

Mr. STEWART. I think when the Senator examines the bill he will see that it is entirely in the line of the Constitution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish while the Senator is arguing against the power to do this thing by the authority given to regulate commerce among the States he will define where he thinks the limit of legislative discretion is in regulating commerce among the several States.

Mr. PLATT. It does not go beyond the commerce itself among the States, and the commerce itself does not begin to exist until the goods begin to move from one State to another by the ordinary lines of transportation. That is where the limit is.

Is the business of a merchant's store in Connecticut commerce among the States? If a merchant in Connecticut, not having a hundred bushels of corn, is called upon to sell a hundred bushels of corn to his neighbor, who in turn wants to sell it to a consumer, is that commerce between States; and if he made that bargain can he, under the power to regulate commerce among the States, be held a criminal and be put in the penitentiary because he has made it? It is utterly untenable.

But it is said this is a very immoral practice. I am willing for the purpose of this argument to admit it, but there are a great many other immoral practices which the advocates of this measure will not for a moment pretend can be touched in the States under either the power to regulate commerce or the taxing power.

Take the liquor traffic. Does not that interfere with commerce in its broadest sense? Does not that carry in its train evils ten times, nay, a hundred-fold more than the most ardent denouncer of options or future contracts can claim to follow that practice? Does it not remove from the productive capacity of the country a large portion of the workers of the country?

Mr. President, I believe it is the greatest evil in the country to-day. I believe that in its effects it is more potential to interfere with and destroy the business of the country than any other one thing. But will any Senator here say that because it thus remotely interferes with commerce we can pass a law making it penal to sell liquor in any State in this Union, and enforce it by the power of the Government and put the liquor seller in the penitentiary? If you contend for this legislation you must admit that. It can be reached either under the commerce clause, by the same reasoning which the Senator from Mississippi proposes to reach the dealing in contracts, or it can be reached under the taxing power, upon the same reasoning which the Senator from New Hampshire proposes to adopt the bill in that form. Under the taxing clause, how easy to destroy the liquor traffic of the country.

Admit once that the power to tax is the power to destroy, and why do you not destroy the liquor traffic of the country? There would no longer be any excuse. We could make a man who sells liquor in any State of the Union pay a license fee of a thousand dollars for the privilege to the Government, then make him keep an account of his daily sales, and make him pay what you call a tax to the General Government equal to the whole amount of his daily sales. Why not? It is said the power is there. The obligation is there if the power is there. But the power is not there; the States never surrendered their right to punish crime or immoral practices.

Why do you not punish stealing in New Hampshire by act of Congress? Because the States in the formation of the Union reserved the right of self-government in all the affairs which pertain to life and business in the States except such as it becomes necessary under our Constitution and form of government for the General Government to assume.

Take horse-racing. Why is it that a few months ago in passing a bill against the selling of pools on horse-races we confined it to the District of Columbia? Horse-racing is as much an interference with commerce in the widest sense as dealing in options and futures is. It affects commerce. It withdraws a large number of people, a hundred thousand a day undoubtedly in the racing season, from the productive operations of life. It leads to idleness, to loss of money, to loss of character. It takes, I think, young men and leads them as far away as gambling in futures does. Why not stop it everywhere—in Massachusetts, in Kansas, in Mississippi, in New York? Simply because that until this bad day it was never supposed that the Government had any power to do it.

But it is said this is gambling. Why not prohibit all gambling? Why stop with this gambling? Why not tax out of existence gambling houses everywhere? Why not visit the penitentiary penalty upon the man who gambles in a private house? It is all immoral. If the power to tax is the power to destroy, you have the power to destroy it in every city and every village and every hamlet in the United States. Will the advocates of this bill claim that we may destroy all gambling by imposing exactions upon gambling in the States which gamblers can not pay, or by declaring gambling to be an obstruction to commerce among the States? The course of reasoning which makes this business an obstruction to commerce would easily make all gambling an obstruction and an injury to commerce. Then you might punish by imprisonment in the penitentiary any one who was found gambling anywhere in any State.

So I might go on. Take life insurance. With the stimulated opposition to corporations, with the mutual insurance associations which are springing up among the laboring classes, how long will it be before there shall come up here a clamor to suppress life insurance by corporations in the United States? We shall be told it is gambling; we shall be told that a young man is induced to bet that he will not pay in annual premiums before he dies as much money as the company agrees to pay at the time of his death, and so he is led into immorality, to play that game, which it has been said "is the only game where a man must die to beat the game."

We might certainly be required to tax it out of existence under the taxing power. If we may lay a tax for the purpose of destruction in any case, we may lay it for the purpose of destruction upon the business of life insurance, and we would have just as good ground to defend it upon the plea of immorality as we have in this case.

I will not go further with illustrations, Mr. President; but there is no business of life, there is nothing which man has heretofore held sacred as to the right of property or the right of occupation which can not be overthrown, trampled upon, and taken away from him under the doctrine which is proclaimed here by the advocates of the pending bill. Though Senators may say there is no danger, we do not know what danger there is.

I desire to read in a moment a word of warning from one of the justices of the Supreme Court, both with reference to the question of danger and with reference to the power which still exists to meet that danger.

Mr. President, the time is fast drawing on when, if we do not stand firm to the Constitution, against encroachments on the rights of the States and the liberty of the citizen, there is no telling where we shall stop. If we admit the argument of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] and of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that because the farmers want this legislation it is our duty to vote it, there is no stopping place. We shall find other classes of people engaged in other productions who will make their demand. The right of petition has already nearly turned into the right to demand.

I want to read a single sentence from Mr. Justice Brewer's address at Albany before the Bar Association on the "Permanence of tenure of judicial office and its relations to the perils of popular government:"

> Who does not see the wide unrest that fills the land; who does not feel that vast social changes are impending, and realize that those changes must be guided in justice to safety and peace or they will culminate in revolution? The black flag of anarchism, the red flag of socialism, or that colorless piece of cloth which suggests that the State take all property and direct all the work and life of individuals may seem to fill the air with their flutter. But as against these schemes, or any other plot of vagary or fiend, fool or fanatic, the eager and earnest protest and cry of the Anglo-Saxon is for individual freedom and absolute protection of all his rights of person and property, and it is the cry which, reverberating over this country from ocean to ocean, thank God, will not go unheeded.

I am inclined to think that Justice Brewer had not learned the temper of the Senate as it appears to be exhibited towards this bill.

> And to help and strengthen that good time, we shall yet see in every State an independent judiciary, made as independent of all outside influences as possible.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made use of a Latin phrase, which he translated for the benefit of the unlearned, such as myself, and I beg leave to borrow it from him. Incredulus odi. I disbelieve and I hate this doctrine that the Supreme Court can be muzzled by the Legislature, that Congress can compel judges to stultify themselves, that when you wish to accomplish a purpose which there is no power to accomplish under the Constitution you may disguise it by calling it a tax, or you may assert that you pass your criminal law to prevent an obstruction to commerce, and that is the end of it with the court. There is no authority for such a doctrine. Once admit it, and the power of Congress is arbitrary and supreme.

I do not know whence this claim that Congress can put a bandage over the eyes of the court and a gag in its mouth derives its authority. It is based only on some loose expressions from time to time made by judges and text-writers, that the judicial branch of the Government would not question the motives of the legislative branch of the Government. But no case, no decided authority, no text-writer has ever gone so far as to say that Congress could compel a court to stultify itself, that Congress could compel the nine judges who sit on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States to say that the exactions imposed by this bill were a tax calculated to raise revenue, when every other individual in the United States knew it was not so. Such a doctrine is preposterous.

The true doctrine is well stated in a recent case by Judge Harlan, the case of Minnesota vs. Barber, where this claim was set up. There the State of Minnesota had passed an act that no beef, lamb, or mutton should be sold in Minnesota unless it should have been inspected in the State before it was slaughtered. In that case the court held that the act was unconstitutional because it attempted to regulate commerce between the States, though called an inspection law under the police powers of the State. Mr. Justice Harlan says:

> The presumption that this statute was enacted in good faith, for the purpose expressed in the title, namely, to protect the health of the people of Minnesota, can not control the final determination of the question whether it is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.
> There may be no purpose upon the part of a legislature to violate the provisions of that instrument, and yet a statute enacted by it, under the forms of law, may, by its necessary operation, be destructive of rights granted or secured by the Constitution. In such cases, the courts must sustain the supreme law of the land by declaring the statute unconstitutional and void. This principle of constitutional interpretation has been often announced by this court.

Then Mr. Justice Harlan goes on to cite cases, to some of which I will refer:

> In Henderson, etc., vs. New York, etc., 92 U. S., 259, 268, where a statute of New York imposing burdensome and almost impossible conditions on the landing of passengers from vessels employed in foreign commerce, was held to be unconstitutional and void as a regulation of such commerce, the court said that "in whatever language a statute may be framed, its purpose must be determined by its natural and reasonable effect."

Can the court not understand and see what is the reasonable and natural effect of the statute?

> In People vs. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S., 59, 63, where the question was as to the validity of a statute of the same State, which was attempted to be supported as an inspection law authorized by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, and was so designated in its title, it was said: "A State can not make a law designed to raise money to support paupers, to detect or prevent crime, to guard against disease, and to cure the sick an inspection law within the constitutional meaning of that word by calling it so in the title."

I commend that decision to the advocates of this bill. Congress can not make an act framed to destroy business within the States an exercise of the taxing power of the Constitution by calling it so in the title or in the body of the act.

> So in Soon Hing vs. Crowley, 113 U. S., 703, 710: "The rule is general with reference to the enactments of all legislative bodies, that the courts can not inquire into the motives of the legislators in passing them except as they may be disclosed on the face of the acts or inferable from their operation, considered with reference to the condition of the country and existing legislation."

This case expressly holds that where the true purpose of an act can be inferred from its operation, considered with reference to the condition and existing legislation, the court will look through the pretense or disguise, discover the real purpose of the act, and deal with it accordingly.

Many other cases cited to the same point I omit.

Justice Harlan says:

> Upon the authority of those cases, and others that could be cited, it is our duty to inquire, in respect to the statute before us, not only whether there is a real or substantial relation between its avowed objects and the means devised for attaining those objects, but whether by its necessary or natural operation it impairs or destroys rights secured by the Constitution of the United States.

I commend that language to the advocates of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. It has been said that this was an invasion and a denial of the police powers of the States. The State has other rights besides the police power; it has inherent rights as a self-government, except in so far as those rights have been surrendered either in terms or by necessary implication to the United States Government. That is a power wider than the police power. The principle now contended for not only interferes with all the police powers of the State, but with every other reserved power, with every right inherent in the State; and when this legislation has once been passed and carried out to its logical conclusion we shall have a government without States, or, if the States exist, such existence will be but in name. There is no escape from this conclusion; and there is no language in which can be portrayed the danger which hangs over the Republic and the States if this legislation shall prevail.

I am surprised and appalled that it should be thought possible that Senators can deliberately vote to give the Congress of the United States power, under either of these clauses, to cut up root and branch all business in the States, to destroy at its own sweet will all individual property in the United States. The advocates of the single-tax theory will find here an easy way to the accomplishment of their ultimate purpose, that all the lands shall be gathered, as it were, into the Treasury of the General Government and be owned by it; the advocates of taking control of all corporate agencies in the United States will find here an easy and smooth path by which their ends may be accomplished when they make Senators fear that to vote against such a measure is to lose their party support.

I have not dealt with the probable practical results as to the farmers themselves of the passage of this bill, for, Mr. President, the question of whether we shall observe the Constitution of the United States so far transcends the question of whether the farmers of the United States are to get 2 or 3 cents a bushel more for their wheat or a cent or two a pound more for their cotton or other agricultural products that I do not stop to discuss it at any length.

I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary which took the testimony in reference to the matter, and nothing in that testimony convinces me that the farmers of the United States will derive the slightest benefit from the passage of the pending bill. I believe they will be the first to complain of it. I believe that in their present mood they will be the first to turn upon the men who advocate it.

But a single word in conclusion, addressed to the farmers of this country. They have made an alliance with the millers and the elevator men of the country in trying to secure the passage of this bill. I will not say that it is an unholy alliance, but it is a marvelous one. Their complaint is that the price of their productions is fixed by people who pretend to deal in them, and that it is fixed too low.

In passing I wish to call attention to the strange fact that never before in the history of the world's legislation was a bill proposed to advance the price of the necessaries of life, and advocated upon that ground. For a thousand years laws have been enacted against forestalling, regrating, and against combinations calculated to put up the price of agricultural products and the other necessaries of life, but never until this time have we had a law proposed, the avowed purpose of which was to raise the price of agricultural productions to the consumers of those productions.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. PLATT. I shall be through in a moment, and then I shall answer any question the Senator may wish to propose.

The farmers complain that dealers in options and futures improperly, illegally, if you please immorally, fix the price of their products. I do not believe it. I do not believe that the price of wheat or of cotton is much affected by such dealings. There may be fluctuations from day to day as the result of these dealings, but I do not believe that the average annual price of any of the cereals or any of the productions named is affected. I do not believe that the average price for a year of wheat or cotton is a cent lower or a cent higher by reason of such dealings.

But who is to fix the price of the productions of the farmers if this bill passes? Have they thought of that? Do they not understand, with the present power of concentration of capital, with the present haste to make riches, that the price will still be fixed by some one else, and not by themselves? Has it ever entered their minds that the price hereafter for those agricultural productions will be fixed in the matter of grain by the millers and the elevator men and the commission merchants, and in the case of cotton by the commission merchants? Do the farmers expect that the price will be fixed by the millers and elevator men and the railroad and commission men any more to their advantage than they now suppose it to be fixed by the men who deal in future contracts?

Mr. President, it is not five years' time since the farmers of the West were almost on the point of open resistance because their rights were not respected and because of the wrongs which they supposed were being inflicted upon them by the elevator men of the West. Pass this bill, and it will not be five years more before they will believe that the millers and the elevator men of the West are unconscionably making and fixing the price of their grain. How can it be otherwise with regard to all crops raised by the farmers of the United States, three-fourths of which must be sold within ninety days from the time they are harvested?

Who is to buy except the men who by the consolidation and aggregation of capital have the means of buying that immense quantity which is not required for immediate consumption? Do the farmers suppose that the millers and the elevator men will consult them as to what the price shall be? Do they suppose, when the millers and elevator men have stored their elevators and their warehouses full and have all they want, they will not say "we do not want to buy?" Then, with this immense quantity coming upon the market, how is the price to be fixed except to the disadvantage of the men who produce the crops?

Mr. President, I commend to the advocates of this bill the scriptural phrase, "They who take the sword shall perish by the sword." We have come to the parting of the ways. Shall we stand by what has been understood to be the uncontested principles of the Constitution, or shall we depart from them at the demand of the anarchistic, the socialistic, and the populistic agitators of the country?

I firmly believe that the passage of this bill will open up a highway along which every constitutional heresy can make progress, along which the cohorts of social disorder and fanaticism may march to the ruin of the Republic.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, in judging of my duty I take for my text the Constitution of the United States. The provision requiring Senators to take an oath to obey that instrument seems to imply that they themselves have some responsibility to judge of its meaning. When the Constitution is plain and its scope is obvious, it is our duty to follow it. It is a bad practice to go outside to find where the Constitution has been violated, or where the Supreme Court, to avoid meeting the main issue, have given excuses and based their decision on other grounds, out of courtesy to a coördinate department of the Government.

The first clause of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution reads as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Congress may collect taxes for the purpose of carrying on the Government. I have no doubt that in levying these taxes Congress has a wide discretion and may levy them upon such articles as will be least burdensome or injurious to the community. There is no doubt about that. Congress can raise revenue so as to encourage or discourage; but when they go further than that and say that their primary object is to control the business in the States, or to do other things which are not permitted to the General Government or to Congress, and make a false pretense of a tax, that is violating the spirit of the Constitution.

I think it is confessed that the object of this bill, if it should become a law, is to destroy a business carried on in several of the States. It is not to raise revenue; it is not to collect taxes to defray the expenses of the Government; that is not the object. It seems to me a statement of that kind makes it the duty of everyone who regards his oath to vote against such a bill.

No matter what bills have been passed, no matter how many times the Constitution has been violated, the language of the Constitution does not warrant the enactment of legislation for purposes not for the benefit of the Government, such as regulating the internal affairs of the States. That is manifest to me. It is not an abstract question, and I think any lawyer, taking up this Constitution and giving it a fair construction, will say that while Congress has the power to discriminate so as to do the least injury in levying taxes, to make the burdens as light as possible, it has no right to use the taxing power for the purpose of regulating the internal affairs of the States.

The boards of exchange deal in the products of the States in which they exist. The wheat of Illinois is dealt in by the boards of trade in that State. By what power can Congress say how the people of Illinois shall trade in wheat? If Congress can say that it can determine how they shall trade in anything else and can stop them from trading in anything it pleases. It seems to me that when it is confessed that the object of the bill is not to raise taxes, but is for some other purpose not authorized by the Constitution, there is an end of the argument.

It is alleged, however, that this bill is for the relief of the farmers. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if it is not the object of the bill to allow the farmers to get better prices for their wheat and cotton?

Mr. WASHBURN. No, sir; not primarily. The object of the bill is to destroy a system of manipulation by operators on boards of trade, which creates abnormal and unnatural conditions, so that the great products of this country are not sold on the basis of supply and demand. The bill interferes in no way with the sale or purchase of actual products, but is for the purpose of destroying this method whereby the prices of the actual products are not made on the basis of supply and demand, but by artificial methods. That is the primary object of the bill; and my belief is when we can return to natural conditions the raiser of cotton and the raiser of wheat will get a larger price than he does today, when those prices are manipulated artificially on the different produce and cotton exchanges.

Mr. STEWART. Would the Senator be in favor of the bill if he thought the farmers and cotton-growers would get less for their products?

Mr. WASHBURN. I am in favor of any bill which allows the products of this country to be sold on the basis of supply and demand, and the farmer must take his chances on prices so made. My belief is, and that is one sufficient ground, that the passage of this bill will increase the prices. Of that I have no earthly doubt. As a matter of fact to-day, with the probability of the enactment of this bill into a law, all of those great products, wheat, pork, and cotton, are advancing in price, and I am satisfied it is, because there exists a general belief that the pending bill will become a law.

Mr. STEWART. I asked, would the Senator favor the passage of the bill if he thought it would reduce the price of wheat and cotton?

Mr. WASHBURN. I should favor a bill of this kind for some other reasons. I should favor a bill of this kind to prevent the universal gambling which is going on in this country, whereby fortunes and characters are being wrecked every day and every hour. I would favor it for that if there were no other reason for its passage.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] allow me to ask the Senator from Minnesota one question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the price of wheat is going up on the exchanges in anticipation of the passage of this bill, why is the Senator from Minnesota in a hurry to pass it?

Mr. WASHBURN. I think the price will go up faster, and the sooner this bill becomes a law the faster it will go.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Wheat seems to be doing pretty well as it is.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator from Minnesota confident that no other combination will be formed to reduce prices?

Mr. WASHBURN. I am. All the talk of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is the merest rubbish so far as it refers to the millers and the elevator men making any combination to control the price of this great product. It is impossible. How are a few millers or a few commission men to control the product of 600,000,000 bushels of wheat? The fact is if they went onto the markets of the country to buy wheat, it would naturally increase the price rather than depress it and at the same time would make a legitimate and fair demand. Therefore, the idea of combining with the view of depressing prices is the most absurd and irrational proposition that was ever suggested by a man of ordinary common sense.

Mr. STEWART. That may be so; but I know of great combinations which have been formed for the purpose of affecting prices. We spent several weeks here over an antitrust bill to prevent combinations increasing prices to the consumer.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he is familiar with the business of the wheat elevators in the Northwest?

Mr. WASHBURN. I am entirely familiar with it, although I have never owned a dollar of stock in an elevator and have no interest in any of them.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator know what the average profits of the elevator owners are and have been for the last five or six years?

Mr. WASHBURN. In some years their profits have been large and some years nothing. Several elevator companies have failed. At other times they have made large profits.

Mr. MILLS. How large?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not know, because I have never had any connection with them.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator suppose they have made as large as 30 or 40 per cent on an average?

Mr. WASHBURN. I have been told they have made that much on some occasions, but certainly not on an average.

Mr. MILLS. How could that be done except by depressing the price of wheat?

Mr. WASHBURN. The depression of the price of wheat has nothing whatever to do with the earnings of the elevator companies. They have certain fixed charges for the receiving and storing of wheat. When the crop is large, their profits are large, when the crop is small the profits are small, and sometimes absolutely nothing. It is not to the interest of the elevator men to depress the price of wheat. It is to their interest to increase the price and encourage the growth of wheat. There is no difference, so far as the elevator charges are concerned, whether the crop is large or small.

Mr. MILLS. Do not the proprietors and owners of these elevators, when they send their agents out to buy wheat, fix the price they are to pay?

Mr. WASHBURN. They do not.

Mr. MILLS. That has been charged.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is not the fact. The elevator company, whenever a farmer hauls his wheat into an elevator, simply issues a ticket, which is current all over the United States and all over the world. He can go and draw that wheat or he can sell his ticket. The elevator men have no control whatever and no interest in the price of wheat. As a matter of fact, the elevator men are generally against this bill, because whenever they buy wheat they sell against it, or insure themselves by selling short or for future delivery.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the Senator if he would favor an amendment to this bill, prohibiting, under a severe penalty, combinations and agreements among elevator companies to fix the price of wheat?

Mr. WASHBURN. I would.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was not in his seat when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] attributed so much absurdity to his suggestion about combinations of millers. It seems to me that it is quite proper to remind the Senator that all the ancient statutes and common-law rules from the earliest history of civilized governments against forestalling and monopoly and all that kind of oppression, which this bill claims to attempt to reach, had been rendered necessary by the conduct of millers, and that the "miller's thumb" has been proverbial for a thousand years.

Mr. STEWART. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for recalling to my mind what was a contest for ages. The books abound in statutes against millers; but it appears from the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] that we have different kinds of millers now, that human nature has changed, and that the millers of this time can not possibly be guilty of the same transactions as they were in the olden time, when they were not so particular as they are to-day. I am glad we are so rapidly approaching the millennium that there can not be such combinations among the millers and elevator companies, when they have the power in their hands, as are formed by men in other pursuits.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to suggest that the miller has no interest in the world, nor can he have, in low prices. The market for flour fluctuates with the price of wheat just as sensitively as the barometer responds to changes of the atmosphere. If you depress the price of wheat, the price of flour goes down with it. So that the miller has no earthly interest in the depression of the price of wheat, but, on the contrary, his interest is in favor of the high price of wheat, because he then has an active market and a sharp demand for his flour, in which case there is almost always an advance in price.

Now, I wish to explain the miller question, as several allusions have been made to it. The time was when the millers bought and held large stocks of wheat. They bought it on their judgment, on their instinct, or on their knowledge of the situation. They held it and ground and sold the flour. Now they do nothing of the kind. The millers have no interest in this thing except to see that business is done on business principles. The miller buys his 1,000,000 bushels of wheat or 2,000,000 bushels of wheat and has it stored in his warehouses. He does not dare to take the chances of holding that wheat with the depression in the price of flour that may come at any moment, and so he sells short. The miller is compelled to do what everybody else is compelled to do in order to secure himself from the manipulations of the boards of trade.

A man may own 2,000,000 bushels of wheat to-day for his mills, which he expects to grind, but has to sell 2,000,000 bushels in Chicago to protect himself. So that he has no earthly interest in these things except to be allowed to go back and do business in legitimate and businesslike methods. The selling of this wheat short is an additional burden put upon the market to that of the short selling by those who do not own a bushel of wheat.

Mr. STEWART. The constant trading and bartering makes it impossible for the miller to manipulate the market now. No doubt he is an honest man now, and probably the reason we are approaching the millennium is that he has not the opportunity he formerly had.

Mr. WASHBURN. I suppose the miller is just like anybody else, and probably is as good a man as the miner. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. The miller ought to be as good as the miner, but probably he is not in all cases. I think if he is good, he is made good by the dealings in the market which fix the price. I think they have made the miller honest more than anything else. The miller, like other people, if he has not the opportunity to do wrong, will be likely to do right; but is it perfectly certain that if the millers and the elevator companies had the power they formerly had they would not form a trust as well as anybody else?

Mr. WASHBURN. They never had any such power.

Mr. STEWART. They can form a trust as well as anybody else.

I was going on to speak of the trouble we had with trusts. It was said that wheat and cotton and other farm products were depressed by these trusts. The country became very much agitated; petitions were presented from all over the country to stop trusts. We passed a bill for that purpose, and we have heard no more of them since.

I am opposed to misleading the people. I am opposed to distracting their attention from substantial truths. It is not the trusts; it is not the boards of trade; it is not any business of this country that depresses prices. There is one thing, one grand trust, however, one combination which controls the general range of prices throughout the world. You may try with little pin-hooks like this to raise prices, while the great trip-hammer of fate is pounding them down, but you will fail.

The general decline of prices has been 40 per cent in twenty years, and it will continue if the same system is pursued. It is a strange thing that we have before us, pending in the Senate at the same time, two bills; one pretends to benefit the farmers by raising prices, and the inevitable result of the other, according to the experience of mankind and according to mathematics, will be to send prices down year by year, and nothing can prevent it.

Glance a moment at history and see how prices have been controlled. In the commencement of the fifteenth century prices were extremely low. There were from one hundred to two hundred million dollars of metallic money in that part of the world which formerly constituted the Roman Empire. At the commencement of the sixteenth century prices had risen more than 100 per cent, and the quantity of metallic money had increased over 400 per cent; it amounted to about $700,000,000 in the same territory.

A curious fact happened by the raising of prices in England. At the commencement of the fourteenth century there were 30,000 landowners in England, and at the end of that century there were 100,000. As prices went up, the farmer prospered; he could buy the land he rented. This state of affairs continued until the Napoleonic wars, when prices were inflated by paper. Again, after those wars, when the resumption act of England was passed, the property of the masses was confiscated, and the land again fell into the hands of 30,000, where it now remains. There is an example of the effect of the amount of metallic money upon prices.

At the commencement of this century prices had been sustained by a reasonable supply of the precious metals for three hundred years. Then came a deficient supply of the money metal. The Spanish-American war cut off more than one-half of the supply. From 1810 to 1829, inclusive, making twenty years, Jacob tells us that the entire output of the world, of both gold and silver, was only $25,000,000 per annum. The stock of gold and silver in existence in Europe and America decreased $300,000,000, according to the estimate of this writer, and he is the best authority whoever wrote on this subject. From the time he wrote until 1848 similar conditions prevailed, but nobody has investigated the facts sufficiently to make an accurate statement. The probability is that $500,000,000 was deducted from the world's supply of gold and silver in the thirty-eight years between 1810 and 1848. The general range of prices fell during that period over 50 per cent.

From 1850 to 1875, when the mints of Europe and the United States were closed against silver and that metal was rejected, prices rose over 30 per cent, according to the common estimate of statisticians, and business prospered. Since that time prices have fallen fully 40 per cent, and must continue to fall.

Why talk about these little outside things to attract the attention of the people when you are moving forward with giant strength to reduce the price of their property and enhance the price of money. It is trifling with the people to pretend that the dealings of men in the common transactions of life control the general range of prices. It is not so.

It is estimated that twenty years ago there was $7,500,000,000 of metal money in the world. It was about equally divided between gold and silver. Then a revolution was inaugurated, the like of which has never occurred in the finances of the world. The principal money metal, the one which had been the great regulator of the volume of money through all the ages, was stricken down by denying it the right of mintage, and soon after that silver bullion fell in the market. Then the moneyed institutions of the world declared that silver bullion could not remain at par with gold bullion while silver was demonetized and gold was monetized.

If, therefore, the silver coin was not fit for a reserve it was not good money. We have heard that from all the advocates of the gold standard; it is one of their insidious methods of putting it. They want a full dollar's worth, they say, in a dollar, and they want silver to rehabilitate itself when it is denied the privilege of coinage.

The opponents of silver are now in the act of consummating this great revolution. Silver coin being excluded from the reserves, nothing is left but gold coin. There is of the gold coin about $3,700,000,000. There has been no material addition in twenty years from the output of the mines; no one claims that there has been.

What a spectacle is presented to the farmer and to the business man for the future! We have not yet put silver out of circulation. There is $4,000,000,000 of it used in some way for money, but it is reduced to credit money according to the theory of the gold men, depending for its value upon redemption in gold, and the fabric of credit by that device is so extended that the financiers of Europe and America are now engaged in what? They are engaged in the business which Goschen told them they would have to undertake when the Barings failed, that is, in reducing credits and increasing reserves to avoid bankruptcy. Some of the stronger concerns will survive, but the crash is inevitable, because more than half of the base has been removed. The credits of the world, if silver is credit money, are extended far beyond the danger line.

The slightest movement of gold, the shipment of two or three million dollars of gold from New York, shakes the whole fabric of stocks throughout the United States and makes every man who has investments in any kind of property tremble for the result. No man feels safe. That the financial world is in a critical condition all agree. Why is it? Because you remove the principal foundation stone, the one upon which the fabric rested, and it is proposed here and now to take out the last prop which remains under silver, to repeal the act of 1890, cut off the entire market for silver, reduce its price to thirty or forty or maybe twenty-five cents an ounce, and stop silver mining. How long will it be before the silver coin we have in this country and which other countries have would be depreciated under such an operation? When it has been determined by this Government that silver shall not be used as money any longer what may happen?

It has been said that the way to secure the free coinage of silver is to repeal the act of 1890. Ah, no; it is the way to do another thing; it is the way to get an argument for continuing the demonetization of silver. The only argument used now by the gold standard contractionists against the free coinage of silver is that silver has depreciated, that the market price of silver has declined, that the coin money is not good money, because the bullion is not on a par with gold. That is the argument. You give it a further decline by cutting off what market there is, and you will strengthen that argument and lay the foundation for the revolution which was inaugurated by the owners of gold and gold obligations to enhance the value of their property and rob the masses.

Suppose you accomplish that what, will be the consequence? It is a well-known fact that a large portion of the annual output of gold comes from the silver mines. Some estimate it as high as one-half, some more and some less, but it can be confidently affirmed without contradiction that a large portion of the supply of gold comes from the silver mines. The silver mines of Nevada alone have produced $200,000,000 in gold. A similar proportion is produced in Idaho and Montana, and it is produced to a great extent in Colorado and Mexico. In South America the quicksilver mines do not contain much gold, but whether one-half or one-third of the product of gold comes from the silver mines, the amount is very large.

When you have further depressed the price of silver you will stop silver mining. It has been stopped by the recent fall in silver in many of the mining districts. There is no mine in Nevada paying dividends. The product of Idaho has fallen off in the last year from twelve to six million dollars. There has been a similar decline in the product, perhaps not quite proportional, in Montana. In Utah there has been a great falling off. Colorado has been saved by two new discoveries—those of Cripple Creek and Creede, but her Leadville and other mines are fast being closed because they will not pay for working. Strike this last blow, and you will end silver mining in the United States, except where there is some very large bonanza to be worked out in a short time; strike this blow, and then your supply of gold coin will not remain stationary, but the arts will continue to consume it year after year.

Prudent financial men will curtail their credits and discard silver and paper year after year. They will have to be retired, and the process of contraction for the next fifty years, if this fatal revolution is effected, will be more rapid and more destructive than it has been in the last twenty years. There is no escaping it.

While we are trampling upon the rights of the people, robbing them of their property by a change in the value of money by legislation, it is idle to talk about helping them by questionable legislation, legislation which I believe to be unconstitutional, and which, if consumated, will do no good, but the effect of which will simply be to substitute for the men who now do harm, as it is claimed, other speculators in another form. I think it is an insult to the farmers to pretend that you can relieve them in any such way.

This question I know is not a new one, but it is such a violent revolution, it is so far reaching in its consequences, it is so destructive to civilization, that I must on all proper occasions raise my voice in protest against it.

I have said a good deal in criticism of bankers, but I find that all rules have their exceptions and that there is a banker in Kansas City, Mo., who can see both sides of the question. He has stated the situation so far as it affects prices in such an admirable way that I believe it will be beneficial to the Senate to listen to a part of what he has said. I will send to the desk the paper I hold in my hand and ask to have read what I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the paper, and after having read some time, he was interrupted by—

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada desire the further reading of the paper?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. I wish to have it read a little further.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think that the paper which is being read is a most important one, and that every Senator should hear it. There is evidently no quorum present, and I ask that the roll be called. The Senator from Nevada, I suppose, will not object to being interrupted until we can have a quorum here to hear the paper read.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The suggestion being made that no quorum is present, the Chair will order the roll to be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dubois,	Irby,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Frye,	Kyle,	Sherman,
Berry,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	George,	Manderson,	Squire,
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Mills,	Stewart,

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is absent by leave of the Senate on pressing business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The reading of the matter sent to the desk by the Senator from Nevada will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading, and was interrupted by—

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada to allow the matter to be put into the RECORD without reading.

Mr. STEWART. Let the Secretary read a few passages more and then it can all go into the RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator ought to let it be put into the RECORD without reading it, inasmuch as it has no relevancy to the pending bill. If it had reference to the pending bill I would not ask the Senator to forego the reading.

Mr. STEWART. I regret the Senator has not paid attention, or having paid attention has not comprehended, the fact that it relates to falling prices, and that I believe is the pending question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was intending to wait for the exposition from the Senator afterwards as to its relation to the subject.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to letting the whole pamphlet be printed in the RECORD. I think it is worthy to be printed there. It is not long.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what I suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada that the pamphlet be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HOAR. What is the pamphlet?

Mr. STEWART. It is a production by a banker by the name of Mr. Holden, of Kansas City, treating of the fall of prices in consequence of the demonetization of silver. It is well stated. It is an able pamphlet. It did not come from a miner, it came from a banker.

Mr. HOAR. It contains good, sound views on the silver question?

Mr. STEWART. It does.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; if the Senator vouches for it I will not object.

Mr. STEWART. It illustrates the fact that a banker can see both sides of the question, which I think is very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SILVER QUESTION.

[By Howard M. Holden.]

To the editor of the Journal:

You have asked me to write an article for the Journal on the silver question, with some historical statements respecting the status of silver in the past and the events leading to its present position and with some observations as to effect upon values.

That question has been the subject of discussion in and out of Congress and by international conferences and government commissions the world over during the last fifteen years and more, and the pending conference at Brussels has attracted renewed attention to it.

It is the most momentous and far-reaching question that confronts mankind to-day. Beside it the tariff and all the subjects that have been at the front in the recent campaign pale into utter insignificance. It has been relegated to the rear for assumed political expediency, but it will not down. Like a combination figure of the specters of famine, bankruptcy, and general distress over the world, it stands behind in colossal stature, awaiting the attention which, if not voluntarily yielded, it will enforce. These are strong words, but I will justify them, not merely by my assertions, but by the irresistible logic of facts and figures and by the abundant opinions of high authorities, before I close this article.

In the market columns of the daily papers, a few weeks ago, appeared the following paragraph:

"It is figured that the decline in silver during the last year (1891) was equal to a bonus of 16 cents per bushel on wheat to importers from India."

The statement is undoubtedly approximately correct. What does it mean?

It means that the importations of wheat from India were laid down in England and on the continent at 16 cents less than they would have cost had this decline in silver not taken place; it means that American wheat in Europe had to compete with Indian wheat at such a reduced price, and as the price of our whole crop of wheat is measured by the value of our exported surplus, it means in a general way that the value of our entire American wheat crop was affected to the same extent.

What does this imply to the wheat-growers of Kansas? The last year's wheat crop of that State was about 58,000,000 bushels, upon which, at 16 cents there is a loss of over $9,000,000 from this cause.

What does it imply to the wheat-growers of the country generally? The entire wheat crop was about 600,000,000 bushels. Upon this a loss of 16 cents amounted to $96,000,000. It may be possible that, though the extract quoted be exactly correct, the figures named may not precisely measure the extent to which our whole crop was affected, but, however that may have been, the loss to the American wheat-grower from the cause stated was a stupendous one.

There are other leading articles of American production that are likewise affected. Cotton is exported from India to Europe in enormous volume, and the depressing effect of the course of the silver market upon American cotton is quite as decided as it is upon American wheat, and is productive of an equal or greater loss. In 1873, when silver was demonetized in this country, India exported almost no wheat. Her exports of cotton, which developed to large proportions under the impulse of the high prices for that article during the American civil war, had greatly declined.

Up to 1878 her highest exports of wheat in any one year were only about 4,000,000 bushels. From that time on her annual exports of wheat steadily increased to upwards of 50,000,000 bushels, and last year they much exceeded that figure; and her exports of cotton have been correspondingly large. What has been the stimulating influence leading to this great change? It has been the course of the silver market, whereby, in consequence of demonetization and the withdrawal of a fixed legal value and support, silver became a commodity, to be the football of speculators and manipulators, the same as other commodities.

India is a vast country, with a slow and backward population of over 250,000,000, who are separated in their habits of life and thought almost as far from the people of the Western world as if inhabitants of another planet. It has no banks to speak of, except in a few seaboard cities. Its trade conditions are controlled by Great Britain, of which country it is a dependency. Its money is the silver rupee, which is coined at the ratio of fifteen silver to one gold, or about equivalent to $1.32 per ounce. Its people know no other money. For ages it has been "the sink of silver."

England, with the farsightedness and money-making proclivities which have made her the mistress of the seas and the clearing house of the world, has found vast profit in importing wheat and cotton from India, paying therefor in silver rupees coined from silver bullion bought at depreciated values. This process has been going on since 1873, when silver was demonetized by the United States. So great has been the profit to the Englishman that railroads have been built in India for the necessary transportation, and every effort made to stimulate the production of wheat and cotton in that country.

For a long time the purchasing power of the rupee in India was unaffected by the depreciation of silver in London and the United States, and, while the influence of depreciation elsewhere finally penetrated even India, and has, during recent years, affected to some extent the value of the rupee there, the decline of its purchasing power in India has always been far less than the decline in silver bullion in London, so that the great margin of profit to the English importer from India has continued, and his interest has manifestly been to manipulate the silver market toward lower prices, so as to buy as cheaply as possible the bullion he required in payment for his importations.

Evidence of the correctness of these points can be multiplied without end. One of our city papers lately quoted "a New York financier" as saying:

"There can be little doubt that silver is depressed in London to knock the price of our wheat. The price of wheat will be governed by the price of silver."

The New York Evening Post, a gold standard paper, of August 11, said:

"This week's silver trading has been of very unusual character. It is unmistakably in the nature of a bear movement against the metal. If indications are to be believed, the certificates being sold here are for the account of a London syndicate which is heavily short of rupee paper. To break the price of silver in such a market as our own requires no great genius, yet if the London price follows the New York price down, rupee paper must necessarily decline along with it, giving London bears a chance to cover in Indian exchange. This is what the trade would call a very pretty speculative operation."

Walter Bagehot, who was one of the greatest of England's economists, in writing some years ago on these subjects, said:

"The silver price of Indian commodities in India has not as yet risen much, though silver has fallen here as compared with gold, and there is, therefore, more profit than there was in exporting them; they can be bought for the same sum in silver, and that silver can be obtained more easily. The depreci-tion of silver is an encouragement to English capitalists to buy commodities—jute, cotton, indigo, or whatever it may be—in India; such commodities are sold in rupees—that is, in silver—in the Calcutta markets. Now, an English capitalist must first buy his rupees. The cheaper, therefore, he can buy such rupees, the better his operation.

"The necessary effect of a depreciation of silver as against gold is to give a bounty on exports from India and other silver-using countries to England. * * * An English merchant can now buy many more rupees than he formerly could with the same number of sovereigns, and, therefore, he can import from India, though prices at Calcutta are not at a level at which it would have paid him to operate if he had not had that novel facility for getting rupees. We must observe that this process is not at all bad for the trade of England."

Beerbohm, who lately died, was long the accepted authority and statiscian of the English grain trade, as all grain dealers will admit. In one of his "Trade List" issues of this year, reviewing the more favorable conditions of the English wheat trade with India over last year, he says:

"The material decline in the price of silver and in the rupee exchange has naturally facilitated shipments considerably. * * * Indian wheat can be sent to this country for about 2 shillings per quarter less than at this time last year, leaving the Indian producer the same net result."

The difference he refers to amounts to about 8 cents per bushel.

In an interview published in the Denver Republican of October 15, Mr. Provend, a member from Glasgow of the British Parliament, said:

"The decline in silver has made wheat cheaper. The wheat market takes its quotations upon a silver basis. India is paid for its wheat in silver, and as that country is a competitor of the United States in cereals, it has forced the price of wheat down in America."

The evidence could be multiplied ad libitum.

Against this state of affairs the American wheat and cotton growers have for the last nineteen years had to contend.

The following table shows the average prices of wheat, cotton, and silver for the years named. It is from a source deemed reliable, and is believed to be correct. It is certainly approximately so:

Years.	Silver per ounce.	Wheat per bushel.	Cotton per pound.
1873	$1.29	$1.17	$0.17½
1879	1.11½	1.07	.11⅜
1884	1.10½	.83	.10¼
1887	1.09	.81	.10⅞
1890	1.09	.92	.11¼
1891	1.01½	1.01	.08⅝
September, 1892	.83	.73	.07½
December, 9, 1892	.82¾	.72¼	.09¼

The prices of wheat are Chicago prices; of cotton, at the seaboard.

It will be seen how closely the ratio of value has been maintained during all these years between cotton and wheat on the one hand and silver on the other hand. Special and temporary causes have affected the prices of wheat and cotton, as short or abundant crops here or elsewhere. This is illustrated by the present sharp advance in cotton, caused by the partial failure of that crop this year. But when the special conditions cease to exist the prices again fall under the general rule, and again travel arm in arm with silver. If any difference, it has generally been in favor of silver, so that while it may be said that silver has declined with respect to gold, its purchasing power has been more than maintained with respect to the commodities, which have declined in larger measure in their relation to gold.

In 1873 1 ounce of silver would buy about 1$\frac{1}{9}$ bushels of wheat; in 1876, 1$\frac{1}{9}$ bushels; in 1879, 1$\frac{1}{9}$ bushels; in 1884, 1$\frac{1}{4}$ bushels, in 1887, 1$\frac{1}{4}$ bushels; in 1890, 1$\frac{1}{4}$ bushels; in 1891, 1 bushel; in September, 1892, 1$\frac{1}{8}$ bushels; December 9, 1892, 1$\frac{1}{8}$bushels. In 1873 1 ounce of silver paid for about 7$\frac{1}{2}$ pounds of cotton: in 1876, 9$\frac{1}{4}$ pounds: in 1879, 10 pounds; in 1884, 10$\frac{1}{4}$ pounds; in 1887, 9$\frac{1}{2}$ pounds; in 1890, 9$\frac{7}{9}$ pounds; in 1891, 11$\frac{7}{8}$ pounds; in September, 1892, 11$\frac{1}{2}$ pounds; December 9, 1892, 8$\frac{5}{8}$ pounds.

Wheat and cotton are selected as being leading articles, and as being most directly affected by Indian competition, made possible by the demonetization of silver. An examination of the course of prices of other products would show the same general decline. In his able speech at Sedalia, Major Warner stated that in 1870 cultivated lands in Missouri were worth on an average $43 per acre, while in 1880 they were worth but $22.50 per acre. Part of this decline he attributed to local causes, and part to "the decrease in value of real estate throughout the country." He stated that in Illinois the decline for the period was about 18 per cent. His figures were presumably official and correct. Why should there have been any decline? Will somebody rise and explain? The population of the country has been rapidly increasing, while the great unpeopled areas of arable land have long since been absorbed. The result should have been a gradual increase in the values of land.

Iron has rarely, if ever, been so low as now. There has been a general and progressive fall in prices all along the line since 1873, measured by the gold standard. If it be claimed that in 1873 gold was at a premium in paper, it can be said that specie payments were resumed on January 1, 1879, and the largest declines in values have taken place since that date, and after the inflation of the war period had been fully eliminated. It is the custom to speak of the depreciation of silver, but in view of the fact that generally all commodities have kept company with silver in its downward course, as we have seen in the case of wheat and cotton, it is pertinent to ask, has silver depreciated or has gold appreciated in its relation to lands and commodities? Is it a fall in silver or a rise in gold?

I read in a reliable paper a quotation from the New York Tribune, stating that the general level of pieces fell 16 per cent during the year 1891.

The Bankers' Magazine, an old and recognized conservative authority, in its October number, says:

"It can not be denied that the low price of silver bullion is a very power ful factor in depressing the world's trade."

It may here be asked by the casual thinker why it is that commodities in general—commodities which, unlike wheat and cotton, are not directly involved in the competition of silver-using countries—are thus affected by the silver situation. The answer is that the vast combined stocks of gold and silver, which are the slow aggregations of the ages, stand opposite to the commodities of the world as their measure of value and the medium of exchange.

A recent writer says:

"Nature has provided silver and gold with physical qualities utterly inimitable by man, special to each, and both absolutely homogeneous, no matter from what part of the world the two metal are extracted. Furthermore, nature produces them in limited quality, which all the efforts and desires of men can not increase. For these reasons silver and gold have been spontaneously used by all nations as an equivalent of exchange, and have been selected by legislators as the only two appropriate metals for money."

Aside from special conditions, such as unusual supply or demand, values of commodities have become adjusted to the existing stock of these metals. The money of the world stands opposite to the property of the world.

The world's stock of each metal is about equal to that of the other, half silver and half gold. If one-half of this stock is obliterated, if the measure and the referee of the values of commodities is reduced, the values of commodities must correspondingly decline. The vast credits of the world, including the paper-money issues, all rest upon the gold and silver stocks as their basis, and as the only money of ultimate redemption. If the basis is narrowed the superstructure of credit must contract.

After the passage of the Sherman bill in 1890, providing for enlarged purchases of silver, the temporary effect of which was to enhance the price of that metal, Secretary Rusk, of the Agricultural Department, realizing the disastrous effects upon our agricultural interests of the decline in silver, wrote the following in his annual report to the President: (See page 8, report of 1890.)

"The recent legislation looking to the restoration of the bimetallic standard of our currency, and the consequent enhancement of the value of silver, has unquestionably had much to do with the recent advance in the price of cereals. The same cause has advanced the price of wheat in Russia and India, and in the same degree reduced their power of competition. English gold was formerly exchanged for cheap silver, and wheat purchased with the cheaper metal was sold in Great Britain for gold. Much of this advantage is lost by the appreciation of silver in those countries. It is reasonable, therefore, to expect much higher prices for wheat than have been received in recent years."

Could any statement more forcibly illustrate the situation than the above by this high authority? His hopes of the permanent advance of wheat were not realized, for the reason that silver declined again and both wheat and cotton followed it both up and down. In January, 1890, wheat was at 75 cents, cotton at about 10¼ cents and silver at 97 cents. The Sherman bill passed in July, and in August silver rose to $1.21, wheat to $1.09, and cotton to 12½ cents. Silver soon declined again, and about the end of the year reached $1.05, and wheat and cotton, like faithful satellites, went with it to about 86 and 9¾ cents respectively. The reason why silver did not stay up, as Secretary Rusk hoped, was because the Sherman bill, like all legislation since 1873, treated it as a commodity and not as a money metal. Whatever other causes may have operated upon the general course of prices and values, it is clear that the leading and principal factor has been the decline in silver, resulting from its demonetization.

What, during these years, has been the aggregate effect upon the American farmer, planter, and stock raiser? And through him what the effect upon the entire country? What upon railroad earnings, upon the extent and profitableness of manufacturing and mercantile pursuits, and upon the material welfare of all classes? Who can estimate it? It aggregates into many hundreds of millions of dollars. What has it implied to the farmers of Kansas and Missouri, and what to the trade and progress of Kansas City and like cities? How much of improvement to the house and barn, how much of home comforts and enlarged life, of education to the children, does wheat at 40 to 50 cents per bushel make possible to the farmer?

Our resources are so boundless in this country and our energies so great that, in a measure, we prosper in spite of these conditions. But what will be the situation if they continue in their downward course? The Chicago market report of August 12, telegraphed to our morning dailies, said: "The bears were talking cheaper silver and cheaper flour." From the unrest which these conditions produce spring strikes, third-party movements, and a prolific brood of impracticable projects.

It has been the fashion in certain quarters to speak of this question as one that principally affects the owners of silver mines, and to apply to them such epithets as "silver barons" and the like. Certainly, if this were true, their interests would deserve the profoundest consideration, for the United States is the largest producer of silver, and the mining sections are large consumers of the manufactures of the East, and contribute enormously to the general business of the country; and the work of the miner is of inestimable benefit to mankind.

The precious metals which are the result of his labors are to civilization what the blood is to the arteries of the human frame. Without them in abundant supply our present civilization would be wholly impossible, and we should be reduced to the state of barter that prevailed among the primitive generations of men. To nothing else was the midnight of the Dark Ages so attributable as to the disappearance of the precious metals from among men. According to the best authorities the stocks of gold and silver at the commencement of the Christian era, when the Roman empire was at the height of its greatness, amounted to about $1,800,000,000, and in the fifteenth century they had declined in Europe to less than $200,000,000; and the awakening did not come until, following the discovery of America by Columbus, the silver and gold, chiefly the silver, of the New World poured into the lap of Europe. She then awoke from her lethargy of centuries, and entered upon a career of intellectual, commercial, and industrial progress never before known. The British historian, Sir Archibald Allison, says:

"Columbus led the way in the career of renovation; when he spread his sails across the Atlantic he bore mankind and its fortunes in his bark. The mines of Mexico and Peru were opened to European enterprise. The annual supply of the precious metals for the use of the globe was tripled; * * * the weight of debt and taxes insensibly wore off under the influence of that prodigious increase in the renovation of industry; the relations of society were changed; the weight of feudalism cast off, the rights of man established. Among the many concurring causes which conspired to bring about this mighty consummation the most important, though hitherto the least observed, was the discovery of the mines of Mexico and Peru." (History of Europe, volume 1, page 10.)

After depicting in graphic language the distress which prevailed in England and on the continent for much of the time from the peace of 1815 to 1849, caused by the contraction of the currency, the value of the continued work of the miner is recognized by the same author in the following eloquent words:

"If the circulating medium of the globe had remained stationary or declining, as it was from 1815 to 1849, from the effects of South American revolutions and English legislation, the necessary result must have been that it would have become altogether inadequate to the wants of men; and not only would industry have been everywhere cramped, but the prices of produce would have universally and constantly fallen. Money would have become more valuable, all other articles measured in money less so. Debts and taxes would have been constantly increasing in weight and oppression; the fate which crushed Rome in ancient and has all but crushed Great Britain in modern times would have been that of the whole family of mankind.

"All these evils have been entirely obviated and the opposite set of blessings introduced by the opening of the great reserve treasuries of nature in California and Australia. * * * A fate the precise reverse of that which destroyed Rome and so sorely distressed England is reserved for the great family of mankind. When the discovery of the compass, of the art of printing, and of the New World had given an extraordinary impulse to human activity in the sixteenth century, the silver mines of Mexico and Peru were opened by Providence, and the means of conducting industry in consistence with human happiness was afforded to mankind.

"When, by the consequences of the French Revolution, the discovery of steam conveyance, the improvement of machinery, and the vast extension of European immigration, a still greater impulse was given to the human species in the nineteenth century, the gold mines of California and Australia were brought into operation, and the increase in human numbers and transactions was even exceeded by the means provided for conducting them. If ever the benevolence of the Almighty was clearly revealed in human affairs it was in these two decisive discoveries, made at such periods, and he who, upon considering them, is not persuaded of the superintendence of an ever-watchful Providence would not be convinced though one rose from the dead."

Little did he think that the very means which made possible the prosperity which he anticipated for mankind would so soon be abridged and sought to be destroyed.

But the miner's interest in this question is insignificant when compared with that of the farmer, the planter, and other classes of the country. The total production of silver in the United States last year was about $58,000,000 ounces. The decline from the price of the past year to the lowest price of this year amounts on this to about $10,000,000, which is the extent of the interest of the miners in this question. This is probably not more than the loss upon the year's wheat crop in Kansas alone.

It will be seen therefore, that while their interest in the question may be more direct and apparent, it sinks into insignificance when compared with that of other classes of people.

II.

These questions will naturally arise: First, how is it that silver has thus changed in its relation to gold? Second, can gold be made to answer for the sole standard throughout the world? And third, if gold will not suffice, what is the remedy?

The answer to the first is familiar to many, though perhaps not to all. From the dawn of history until recent years gold and silver, but especially silver, were the money metals of the world. In the earliest years of this Government the subject of coinage received the profound consideration of its founders. In his report to Congress in 1791, on the establishment of a mint, Alexander Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury, said:

"To annul the use of either of the metals as money is to abridge the quantity of the circulatory medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full, with the evils of a scanty, circulation."

And Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Hamilton, concerning this report, said:

"I concur with you in thinking that the mint must stand upon both metals."

The double standard was adopted, with the silver dollar as the monetary unit.

At the beginning of this century every nation of the earth was either upon a silver basis exclusively or upon a combined gold and silver basis. In 1816 England adopted the gold standard. The cause which history assigns for this is that her ratio for most of the preceding century having been higher than that of other countries and, therefore, the market value of silver having been above her coinage value, she came to possess chiefly a gold currency.

At a much later date Portugal also adopted the gold standard. Until 1871 every other nation in the world was either upon a silver basis alone or upon a gold and silver basis together. In 1871, after the Franco-Prussian war, Germany, having to reorganize the monetary system of the new empire, adopted the gold standard. Germany's deep purpose undoubtedly was to exhaust France of her gold supply by the payment of the required $1,000,000,000 of war indemnity, and then by discrediting silver, of which France had large reserves, to further weaken and impoverish her, and render impossible any renewal of the war. In the execution of this programme Germany was aided and encouraged by the attitude and legislation of this country.

In 1873 the United States passed a new law, revising its mint and coinage laws, and left out all provision for the coinage of the silver dollar. Prior to that time the ratio in this country was 16 to 1, while the ratio in France and other European countries was 15½ to 1. The silver bullion of the world, therefore, naturally gravitated for coinage to those countries where less of it was required in their coinage in proportion to gold. In consequence of this but little silver had been coined in this country except the subsidiary coinage, and but little silver was then produced here. The subject of silver coinage was, therefore, not one which attracted much attention in this country at that time. Numerous leading members of that Congress afterward declared that they were totally unaware that the measure excluded or interfered with the coinage of silver, which, with gold, had been the coinage of the country since the adoption of the Constitution.

Concerning this piece of legislation, the report of the United States Monetary Commission, organized under joint resolution of Congress of August 15, 1876, vol. I, p. 89, says:

"The act when passed was not read, except by title, and it is notorious that this transcendent change in the money system of the country, affecting the most vital interests, was carried through without the knowledge or observation of the country. It was neither demanded by the resolutions of public meetings or political conventions nor asked for in the petitions from the people. As paper money was the actual money of the country at the time, a coinage act was not likely to attract general attention. In its relation to a single or double standard it was discussed but little in the House and not at all in the Senate.

"The press of the country was entirely unobservant or silent, when it was pending and when it was passed, and for more than three years afterward. If it had been generally known that any such vital question as the demonetization of silver was lurking in the bill, it would have aroused the most widespread discussion throughout the country. * * * The most striking evidence, perhaps, of the public inattention to the effect of the coinage act of 1873, is the fact that President Grant, who signed it, and who was critically observant of the legislation of Congress, had no knowledge of what it really accomplished in relation to the demonetization of silver, and was still uninformed about it as late as the following October."

It has been freely charged that the demonetization of silver, thus accomplished, was secretly plotted and carried through Congress with the knowledge of but very few members; and that English interests instigated the movement and sent a large fund here for use in its aid. However that may have been, it seems apparent that there were deep and secret designs behind the movement, for at that time there was no very large production of silver in the world, and silver bullion was worth more in the market than its American coinage value. The bullion value was then about $1.31 per ounce, while its coinage value here was $1.2929 per ounce; so that under the then existing conditions any considerable American coinage could not be expected; and if this had been otherwise there was then no ground for decrying silver, as it was, as has been stated, of greater value than gold.

Whatever may be said of the metal now, certainly there was no reason that could bear the light of criticism could have existed in favor of demonetization. The measure in question was evidently a link in the scheme which had for its object the breaking down of the price of silver in the American and London markets for some purpose, probably for the double purpose of creating the conditions heretofore referred to, for the more profitable trade by England with India and other silver countries of the East and South America, and for the enhancement of the value of the vast obligations which she, as the great creditor nation of the world, held against the rest of mankind.

Certain it is that as a result she has become the great broker between America and the rest of the world. We have a large trade with the countries of South America that are on a silver basis. We are always in debt to those countries, as our importations from them are large, while our exports to them are comparatively small. We, therefore, have to pay them many millions annually, but these payments are not made direct, but by shipping gold to London and drawing bills on London, which London can pay in silver at a good margin of profit.

When will this country, which has the balance of the trade of the world in its favor, and which, as the largest producer of both the precious metals, should control their status, have the statesmanship and stalwart Americanism to put an end to such a state of affairs? If somebody's politics did not stand in the way we would have the conditions established that would give our producers and manufacturers at least an equal footing with those of other countries in the South American markets and a fleet on the seas between our ports and those of South America that would forever end this tribute to Europe and give us the trade of that country, which Europe now practically monopolizes.

Following the action of this country in demonetizing silver, Germany, which had already adopted the gold standard, demonetized her vast hoard of silver. It is a notable fact that the final act of demonetization was not taken by Germany until five months after demonetization had transpired in the United States.

This action by Germany led the Latin Union, composed of the states of France, Belgium, Switzerland, Greece, and Italy, which in 1865 had adopted the French system of free coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of 15½ to 1, to limit their silver coinage, and in 1878 to close their mints to silver coinage. Other nations in Europe took a similar action, and thus the legal value of silver was destroyed and that metal was reduced to the position of a mere commodity.

The conduct of some of our statesmen with reference to the demonetization of silver has not escaped criticism. At the Paris conference of 1867, our delegate, Mr. Ruggles, argued in favor of the single gold standard, and declared that such would be the policy of the United States; and Senator SHERMAN wrote a letter for use at that conference, favoring the single gold standard. He was then chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate, and his views had great weight. In 1873 he was a member of the Senate, when silver was demonetized.

There was no reason at either of these dates—1867 or 1873—why silver should have been discredited, as it then stood at a premium as compared with gold. It is probable that if the weight of this country's influence had not been thus cast in favor of the single gold standard at the Paris conference in 1867, a date prior to any action of the German empire in that direction, such action might never have been taken, and the subsequent raid of the nations against silver, with all its train of enormous loss, might never have occurred.

At the monetary conference of 1878, replying to Gen. Walker, who was one of our delegates, Mr. Feer-Herzog, delegate from Switzerland, said:

"I think the learned delegate of the United States was wrong in noticing, as he had done, the tendencies of the conference of 1867. At that conference, in which they were represented, the United States showed themselves warm supporters of the gold standard. It was they who led the campaign in favor of gold." [Proceedings of Conference, page 80.]

In 1868 Mr. SHERMAN made a report to the United States Senate in favor of "a single standard, to be exclusively of gold." In 1878, perceiving his mistake, Mr. SHERMAN, then Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter to Mr. Groesbeck, who was one of our delegates to the monetary conference of that year, after referring to his action with the Paris conference of 1867 in favor of a single gold standard, said:

"At that time the wisest among us did not anticipate the sudden fall of silver or the rise of gold that has occurred. This uncertainty of the relation between the two metals is one of the chief arguments in favor of a monometallic system, but other arguments showing the dangerous effects upon industry by dropping one of the precious metals from the standard of value, outweigh in my mind all theoretical objections to the bimetallic system."

And he urged that the conference adopt a double standard. (Proceedings of the Conference, page 139.) In his speech in the Senate on June 1 of this year, he said, regarding the act of 1873:

"I have no doubt that if it had been known that silver was going to fall as much as it did after that, it might have made a change."

It is strange that so astute a man should have failed to realize that the withdrawal of the legal money value from silver and the consequent reducing of it to a mere commodity would destroy its status and reduce its value as a money metal. He regrets and changing of mind came too late, and after he had been largely instrumental in setting in motion a train of evils that can hardly be measured.

Was there any reason in 1873, and is there any reason now, growing out of the relative supply of silver and gold, why silver should be thus excluded from the coinage of Europe and America? Let the following figures answer.

In the report of the monetary conference of 1876, page 78, the world's production of gold and silver, from the discovery of America in 1492 to 1848, is given as follows:

Gold	$2,926,000,000
Silver	5,705,000,000
Total	8,331,000,000

It will be seen that the proportion of silver was about 68½ per cent, and that of gold 31½ per cent. No complaint was ever made in 1848 or in previous years that this proportion was prejudicial to the business interests of the world; to the contrary, as the historian, Alison, has well expressed it, Europe and America were suffering from an insufficient supply of the precious metals. It will, of course, be understood that a large part of the yearly production of both gold and silver had always been absorbed in the arts and manufactures, and vast quantities had disappeared among the people of Asia.

The production for the years 1849 to 1872, inclusive, is given in the reports of the Director of the Mint as—

For this period the proportion of the whole production was of gold 73 per cent, silver 27 per cent, and, by adding the respective productions of these years to those of the preceding period given above, it will be seen that the proportion of the gold product for the whole time had risen to about 44.7 per cent of the whole sum of both metals; and that of silver had fallen to 55.3 per cent. It therefore certainly can not be said that in 1873, when silver was demonetized, a reason existed therefor in the growing relative abundance of silver over previous periods, for, as the figures show, the relation was the other way.

The report of the Director of the Mint gives the world's production for the years 1873 to 1890, inclusive, as follows:

Gold	$1,907,569,500
Silver, coin value	1,955,142,000

For this period, counting the silver not at its market value, but at the greater figure of its old coinage value, the production was about evenly divided between the two metals, leaving the relation of the quantity of each metal to the general stock of the world practically unchanged.

In support of these statements a quotation from the report of the British silver commission in 1876 may be given:

"Notwithstanding the late rise in the production of silver as compared with gold, its proportion to gold is still considerably below what it was in 1848, to say nothing of the period when the proportion was 3 to 1; and the conclusion seems justified that a review of the relations of the metals in times past shows that the fall in price of silver is not due to any excessive production as compared with gold."

This was more than three years after demonetization in this country and Germany.

The bitter years of depression, of decling values, of commercial and business distress and disaster, that prevailed during the years from 1873 to 1880 over America and Europe, are within the memory and experience of most of us. The panic of 1873 swept the country like a cyclone. In Europe an inducing cause was demonetization in Germany and the United States and the consequent demand for gold. Mr. Robert Giffen, a statistician of high repute, in a paper read before the London Statistical Society on 21st of January, 1879, stated that the fall in the English prices of wholesale commodies between 1873 and 1879, with three exceptions only, amounted to between 26 and 36 per cent, and the cause he rightfully attributed to the extraordinary demand for gold and the narrowing of the monetary basis, caused by the exclusion of silver.

In this country the rejection of silver and the declared purpose of the Government to resume specie payments upon an exclusive gold basis, the contraction of the currency and the accumulation of gold in preparation for resumption, repressed the resilient and recuperative forces of the country and intensified the pressure year after year, until many and many a business concern that was only bent by the storm of panic in 1873 was finally driven to the breaking point; and it was not until, under the operation of the Bland act of 1878, the resumption of coinage supplied the business arteries of the country with fresh money, that the sun of a renewed prosperity to some extent dispelled the clouds that had for so long a time hung so heavily over the land.

Under the Bland bill of 1878, $2,000,000 per month of silver dollars were coined until 1890, when the Sherman bill was passed, under which 4,500,000 ounces of silver have been bought each month by the Government and silver certificates issued therefor at the cost price of the bullion purchased. These measures have not been sufficient to sustain the value of silver. Against its value as a commodity several things have operated. One is an increased supply from the mines. Another, the offering of portions of their stocks of silver, in their wild scramble after gold, by nations who are trying to get on the gold basis, as, for instance, Germany and Austria. Another the manipulators of the London market, for the purpose of buying silver bullion at a reduced price for use in paying for importations from India and other silver countries. Another, the seemingly deliberate and intentional purpose of an element of our own people for the enhancement of the value of credits, or for some other reason best known to themselves, to defame and discredit silver, stop its coinage entirely, and press toward a universal single gold basis.

Ever since the passage of the Bland bill in 1878, under which $2,000,000 of silver were coined monthly, an active opposition to that and to all coinage has existed. Predictions were freely made that gold would leave our shores and general disaster ensue. Mr. Cleveland himself, with all his caution and deference to the position of his friends and party on this subject, as early as February, 1885, before his inauguration, wrote his now celebrated letter to members of Congress urging the immediate repeal of the Bland act, on the ground that gold would leave the country and general disaster occur if it were continued. The act was not repealed, and coinage continued; and, instead of gold leaving this country, it continued to accumulate, until we now have about $700,000,000 of gold against but a small stock in 1878; and there is no banker who does not realize that but for the presence in the circulation of $300,000,000 and more of silver and silver certificates, the severe monetary stringency of the fall of 1890 would have been a widespread panic. There was a money famine then with the accumulated silver and certificates in the circulation. How would it have been without them?

So long as England alone was on a single gold basis, silver was well upheld by the rest of the world, but with demonetization by other nations of Europe and by the United States, the depreciation is likely to continue to a point where production of silver will stop, and where the continued use as money of the stocks on hand will be most difficult.

III.

With such a result accomplished, can gold be made to answer as the sole standard throughout the world?

The opinions of Hamilton and Jefferson have already been quoted. Let us see what a few good later authorities have to say on this point. They are none of them what are flippantly called "silver men."

Mr. Walter Bagehot, heretofore referred to, and who was editor of the London Economist, said:

"Probably if there were gold enough for all the world it would be best that there should be only a single standard of value throughout the world and that one gold, but this is impossible. Some have doubted if there is gold enough even for the nations that now intend to use it, and there certainly is not enough for all the world."

This was written in 1876, since which time the pressure for gold has become greatly intensified; it was before the states of the Latin Union stopped silver coinage, and before the adoption of the single gold standard by Austria and some other States.

In his testimony before the monetary commission appointed by the French Government in 1869 Baron Rothschild (not Alfred de Rothschild) said:

"Whether gold or silver dominates for the time being, it is always true that the two metals concur together in forming the monetary circulation of the world; and it is the general mass of the two metals combined which serves as the measure of the value of things. * * * I should regret the demonetization of silver in its relation to our internal circulation, our commercial intercourse with other countries, and the always uncertain eventualities of the future. But I should regret it even more if our example should be followed by other nations, for that suppression of silver would amount to a veritable destruction of values without compensation."

At the Paris conference of 1878, Mr. Goschen, late chancellor of the English exchequer, then delegate from Great Britain, said:

"I have spoken against the theory of those economists who argue that the gold standard should be everywhere introduced; I have stated that I saw in it a great inconvenience, great danger, and even great disaster. To that opinion I decidedly adhere. I believe it would be a misfortune for the world if a propaganda for a sole gold standard should succeed."

Such was his opinion, while, for manifest reasons, he tried to hold to the gold standard for England.

The Bankers' Magazine says editorially in its April number of this year:

"England, for example, has been trying to live on a gold standard, and that country has been thinking all along that it was quite able to transact its business and make its loans in gold; but the situation has become more clearly understood, even by the English, and they are at least beginning to see that the requirements for gold are greater than it can easily fulfill. They are beginning to see that the endeavor to float new gold loans in addition to completing the exchanges of the world, with the desire and intention on the part of other nations also to adopt a single gold standard, is causing such a great demand for gold as to jeopardize business interests, retard industrial development, and in other ways severely retard the world's prosperity."

In its May number the same authority says:

"The supply of gold is so small at present, in view of the world's needs, that a considerable demand from any quarter must seriously affect its value, bringing evils in its train, though these are not clearly perceived. It is unquestionably true that the depression from which the civilized world is today suffering is due to some extent to the small quantity of gold existing for the enormous requirements made on the metal."

Mr. Edward O. Leech, Director of the Mint of the United States, in an article in the Forum for June, says:

"Passing by the great question of the fall in the gold price of commodities, so far as such fall is due to monetary causes, I find that one of the most serious dangers which confront us is the insufficiency of the supply of gold as a basis of the present and prospective business of the commercial world, and the consequent disturbances attending its accumulation and movement. * * * The struggle for the possession of gold, with its consequent train of financial disturbances, is well under way. * * * If gold is to be the sole money of the world, not only will the extension of business and of foreign investments be seriously crippled, but the immense fabric of credit, already top-heavy, is liable to totter. Where is the gold to come from when the states of Europe now having a paper standard resume specie payments? As I write, Austria-Hungary has decided to resume specie payments, and adopt the gold standard, and the negotiation of a loan with which to purchase the gold necessary for resumption purposes, and possibly fresh demonetizations of silver, are sure to follow.

"The truth is, the supply of the precious metals is not more than sufficient to keep pace with the rapid increase of modern trade. What is to be gained by discontinuing the use of one of the money metals and throwing all the work upon the other? Not stability of value; for, as already shown, for nearly a century, when the bimetallic system existed in France, the relative value of gold and silver did not vary appreciably. * * * The experience of the first seventy years of this century has demonstrated that both metals can be used as money with greater stability of values than one alone. * * * Eventually the embarrassments arising from the attempt to use one metal alone as the measure of value and the medium of exchange will become so intolerable that commercial nations will find it to their advantage to join the United States in the remonetization of silver."

In his New York speech of November 17, 1891, the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Foster, said:

"It is now agreed on all sides that gold alone furnishes too narrow a basis upon which to conduct the money affairs of the world."

If time and space permitted, the testimony could be greatly extended.

The Chicago Tribune of November 3, says:

"The situation in England is far from clear. Russia is accumulating an extraordinary amount of gold within her borders, and to do that England is being heavily drawn upon. Austria-Hungary has, until recently, been able to draw from this country the gold necessary to carry on its currency operations under the new laws. Now that it is no longer able to do that, England is called upon for the required gold. All these drains on the gold supply foreshadow high interest rates there."

A table compiled from the most reliable data, submitted to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of the last House of Representatives, gave the stock of metallic money in the world as:

Gold	$3,710,000,000
Silver	3,940,000,000
Total	7,650,000,000

From which it appears that one-half of the credit and business of the world rests upon silver. On this point Mr. Leech says:

"It is seriously proposed, and the tendency of all Europe is in that direction, to demonetize the silver portion of the world's supply of money and throw the burden of our increasing population and business upon the gold stock. The annual product of gold is only about $125,000,000, of which nearly one-half is used in the industrial arts and manufactures, so that the annual supply for monetary purposes is hardly in excess of $65,000,000. If this plan is carried out it is the existing stock of gold, then, that for many years at least must form the basis of business and credit, and serve as the medium of all exchanges. That such a narrowing of the basis of credit and trade is attended by incalculable difficulties and hardships must be apparent."

The discrediting of silver can not much further proceed without undermining the value of the stocks of silver coins now existing and destroying their status as money behind the huge credit fabrics of the world. If silver should decline to 50 or 60 cents per ounce, can the mere fiat of governments sustain the existing stocks at their nominal and coinage values? A compilation from late official sources shows over $4,000,000,000 of paper money in the various countries of the world, not including the coin certificates of this country, and not including some countries from which no report is had, and the stability of this vast volume of purely credit money rests upon the metal money that is behind it, a large part of which is silver.

How can this paper money be upheld and continue current among men with its basis largely destroyed? Either specie payments must be generally suspended or the currency contracted to a suitable relation to the gold alone, with all the resulting reduction of prices and general distress that such contraction must produce, or the stocks of gold must be increased to take the place of the discarded silver. Where is the gold to come from? Let any man who is capable of intelligent thought upon the subject consider the effect upon the value of farms, houses, agricultural products, merchandise, railroad earnings, upon everything but a bond that is payable in gold, and the value of that will be largely affected by the impairment of the means of payment—upon society itself and upon civilization, by such obliteration of one-half of the world's money.

Mr. Mulvane, in his address at the recent meeting of the Kansas Bankers' Association, truthfully said: "Bimetallism is the hope of the business world."

Already there is some agitation in favor of a gold standard in India. A recent dispatch from Bombay says: "The movement in favor of a gold standard is spreading. Petitions are received daily from officials in all parts of India in favor of a gold standard." The officials referred to are officials of the British empire stationed there, who receive their pay in silver, and in remitting it to Europe find its value greatly reduced compared with gold. Let us see what Bagehot said on this point:

"As usual, however, other cures (of the effects of depreciation of silver) are suggested, which it is said will be less painful and quicker. One is, that the Indian government should demonetize silver, as the Germans have been doing, and adopt a gold standard; but in this case the remedy would be worse than the disease. We all know what the Germans have had to do, and how painful its effect upon us has been; they have had to buy gold to substitute for that silver, and the result has been an unusual disturbance of the London market, with sometimes very high rates of discount; nor is the operation yet complete.

"But the effect of a similar operation in India upon us would be altogether greater and more disturbing, because the Indian silver coinage is so very much greater than the German. To get gold enough to supply the place of all this silver the Indian Government would have to buy constantly all the supplies from the gold mines for years, and so straighten incalculably the growing money markets of the world; and then what is the Indian Government going to do with the silver? * * * Those who make this proposal can not have considered what in practice it would involve. * * * It would be nothing but financial ruin."

These words were written in 1876, long before the depreciation of silver had far progressed, and when the situation was far less difficult for the purpose than now. The estimated stock of silver in India is put at $900,000,000, or about 25 per cent of the entire stock of the world. What would be the effect of the displacement of this large sum added to the movement in the same direction in the Western world?

Whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the measures that should be adopted to remedy the situation, every American should stand by bimetallism. It is in the interest of our agricultural producer, and in fact of all classes; it is in the interest of debtors and creditors alike; of debtors, in preserving undiminished the volume of money and the status of the values of commodities wherefrom their payments are made; of creditors, in maintaining the values of securities and the means of payment; and the United States is the largest producer in the world of both silver and gold.

The bill recently introduced in the Senate by Senator VEST, providing for a reduction of duties on imports from certain European countries, in consideration of the adoption by such countries of the bimetallic standard, was a wise and statesmanlike conception, whether possible to be carried out at the present time or not.

It is incredible that any patriotic American should favor an exclusive gold basis, though, strange to say, there are some men who hold that attitude. That there has been a studied purpose to becloud and prejudice the public mind on this subject is apparent. From what source this is inspired, what great interest is behind it, whether English or other, is as difficult to state as it is to account for the agency that struck the silver dollar from American coinage in 1873. But in the face of the greatest peril that has menaced mankind in modern times, certain newspapers and magazines have teemed with articles on the "silver craze," and with maligning and misrepresenting statements. Against the high testimony that has been quoted, showing the insufficiency of gold for the world's business and against the hard and stubborn market reports, it is almost sickening to read Senator VILAS'S article in the May Forum, in which, after arguing silver down the wind, he says:

"The yellow metal alone is abundantly adequate to perform the entire office of metallic money in everything but the subsidiary needs of small dealings. This fact is conclusively proved by experience in Europe."

Is it possible that Senator Vilas considers that the condition of the masses of the people in Europe is one that should be paralleled in this country? A recent report of Consul Warner to our State Department, after giving details of the situation in Germany, says:

"In the eastern and western parts of Germany, as well as in the northern and southern parts, the workman alone can not earn sufficient to support his family."

A recent London telegram in the daily papers says:

"The St. James Gazette says that several great drapery firms are tottering under the severe general depression which has affected all ranks of society."

A lengthy cablegram in all the papers of the 11th, dated London, December 10, says among much else:

"Both in England and in Germany the signs of agricultural distress are increasing rapidly. The standing armies of the two countries combined are not so numerous as the great crowds of unemployed who walk the streets of the great cities. * * * From the remote famine-stricken provinces of Russia and the agricultural provinces of Austria-Hungary come the appeals of the half-starved peasants to swell the cry of distress."

These are mere indications of the general situation over there, with which Senator VILAS seems so well satisfied and would have duplicated here. If there is any exception it is in France, which has an immense circulation of both silver and gold, and which, financially, is the most self-balanced nation in Europe.

Much has been said about the "honest dollar." Is that a dishonest dollar which, as the figures have shown us, is to-day exchangeable, even at its bullion value, for as much wheat, cotton, and commodities of the world generally as it or gold would buy ten years or twenty years ago? And silver is condemned because, forsooth, it has declined with respect to gold, and there is much talk about its "value" and "intrinsic value." What makes the value of gold? What but a law that to-day happens to exist that says that anyone having gold bullion can take it to the mint and have it coined on a certain basis? It has not always been so with respect to gold. There is nothing new in the idea of demonetization which has been applied to silver in these later years. After the discovery of gold in Australia and California, the monometallists of Europe attacked that metal, as later on they attacked silver. During the years of the most active output from those countries the annual yield averaged approximately $150,000,000. In one year it reached $193,000,000, a sum never equaled in the production of silver.

An English writer of repute published an elaborate calculation, which led him to the conclusion that the gold production would soon amount to $350,000,000 per annum. Chevalier, a distinguished French theorist, and others, published books on the subject, predicting a great fall in the value of money as related to commodities, and under the influence of this outcry Holland, Belgium, Germany, and Austria, in 1857, demonetized gold, and adopted silver as their single standard. The American Cyclopædia, volume 11, page 740, says:

"In those countries gold only circulated as a commodity, subject to daily fluctuations in value, and as a consequence, deprived as it was of its legal support as money, it was little used."

It did not largely fluctuate or decline, for the simple reason that no large number of nations joined in its demonetization, as they have done in later years with silver. The Monetary Commission of 1876 says:

"It is probable that the movement would have become universal in Europe but for the resistance of France."

The production of gold soon declined, and it has ever been one of the remarkable features of these two metals that no large simultaneous increase of them has occurred; when the production of one has increased the other has declined or remained stationary, so that the addition of both to the existing stocks has never exceeded safe and suitable limits. From this it will be seen how their combined use, with gradual increase in volume, promotes stability in values and provides for the uses of man. And it is the magnitude of the entire stocks of these metals that gives steadiness to their value and to the values of commodities, and these are not affected by their annual supply except in very slow and almost imperceptible degrees, for the annual addition is but a small percentage of the general stock of the world, which is the measure of value of the commodities of the world.

What is "intrinsic value" as to either gold or silver? Who can tell? If gold were demonetized its market value as bullion would largely fall, for, while the production is limited, it is almost double what is required by the arts and manufactures. It is law alone that ever has made or ever can make either metal worth its coinage value, unless, indeed, the production of one or the other should at any time be less than the quantity required for other uses, in which case the market value would exceed the coinage value.

The demand for "honest money" is a proper one. What is honest money? Not wild and unlimited government issues, breeding vast general speculation and enormous inflation of prices, only to be followed by collapse and prostration. Not the issues of State banks, incalculable as to amount and uncontrolled by any central authority, issued under forty-four different State laws, many of them repeating the "wildcat" swindles of the days before the war, for in this instance, as in most others, history will "repeat itself;" but it is the gold and silver of the Constitution, the gold and silver that, as one has graphically said, "from the days of Abraham of the Chaldees to the days of Abraham Lincoln," formed the basis moneys of the world; and then, in proper proportion, resting on that, the paper money of the government. Attacks have been made upon the national banks of the country. The national banking system is the safest and best that has ever been devised and these banks should be perpetuated as banks of discount and deposit; but there would seem to be no reason why national-bank circulation should not now be replaced by the direct issues of the Government.

Such a system would constitute honest money, and with some well-ordered plan giving elasticity to the currency, and providing for its expansion and contraction with the varying demands of the seasons for a greater or lesser supply of money, would stand as a lasting bulwark against the constriction of a single gold standard on the one hand and deranging inflation of unlimited irredeemable fiat paper money on the other hand.

There never was a time in the world's history when a broad and ample supply of sound money was as necessary as now. It is the age of public and corporate debts of almost incalculable amount; of the expansion of credit unknown in former times; of enterprise unparalleled; of commercial and industrial activities wholly without precedent. The world needs a constant fresh supply of metal money, and the production of gold is stationary or diminishing.

Bagehot wisely says:

"We must remember that the currency of a stationary country requires constant renewal, and that of a progressive country constant increase, and therefore if you keep the quantity fixed, prices are sure to fall."

How shall this increase be supplied? By the new and fresh blood of the precious metals in the circulatory system or by irredeemable fiat paper money?

IV.

It is impossible within the limits of a newspaper article, however liberally extended, to do justice to this great question. A full and exhaustive discussion of it, with supporting statistics and authorities, would fill a volume. Enough has been said, the writer believes, to show, first, that the general values of our great staples, wheat and cotton, are largely controlled by the status of silver, and also that, generally speaking, in the welfare of silver is involved the welfare of all forms of property; and, second, that the demonetization of silver and its resulting degradation from its ancient position of money of ultimate redemption, coordinate with gold, was not based upon any necessity of the existing situation, or upon any changed relation of the two metals with respect to each other to the disparagement of silver, or upon any general interest of mankind calling for such action; it was at least a mistake of unmeasured sweep, and the harsher criticism seems justified that it proceeded from unworthy and speculative motives, which had for their end the profit of the few and the loss of the many; and, third, that gold can not perform the functions of both metals.

What is the remedy? Unquestionably there is but one, and that is the remonetization of silver, and the placing it again where from immemorial time it had stood. How shall this be accomplished? It is not the purpose of this article to enter into details of methods while the subject is under discussion by the monetary conference, which, at the instance of this Government, is now in session at Brussels. Concurrent action by the leading nations upon some agreed ratio would certainly be desirable. The apprehension has been expressed that if silver were readmitted to unrestricted coinage at the old ratios, the product would soon become excessive. If this apprehension be well founded there is nothing to prevent the present adoption of such new ratio, for instance, 18 or 20 to 1, as would tend to restrict the production of silver. But it is not believed that there is any reasonable ground for such apprehension.

It is the same old fear that was expressed by the monometallists and theorists of Europe when California and Australia were pouring forth their treasures of gold for the enrichment of mankind. As has been stated, it was predicted that the annual output of gold would soon equal $350,000,000. It never did, and the output of silver in any one year has never equaled the output of gold in single years. The lamp of experience illumines the days that are to come, and by the past we can judge of the future. The cupidity of man and his utmost energy have in all periods been aroused in the search for the precious metals, but while they have often been in scant, they have never been in excessive, supply.

Whether, with Alison, we reverently believe, as it seems we must, that there is a Providence at the helm of human affairs, or that there is a subtile and inexplicable Nature that directs means to ends, we must believe that so vital and fundamental a factor as this can not have been overlooked; we must believe, from the whole course of history, from the spontaneous and intuitive acts of mankind, in earlier as well as in later ages, in the choice of gold and silver for money metals, from the singularity of these metals as to indestructibility, comparative rarity and adaptability for monetary uses, from the conclusion to which all intelligent thought must lead, that upon any conceivable theory of human development, based upon lines of experience or of present human thought and knowledge, neither religion nor the intellect of man could produce an advanced general civilization without the concurrent agency of these metals, that in the general selection of means to ends that is everywhere apparent, these metals were selected and ordained for the monetary uses of man; and we can safely trust that in the future, as well as in the past, the storehouses of nature will not surrender them more rapidly than the legitimate uses and welfare of man require.

If the time shall ever come for silver to be dispensed with, it will be when the treasuries of nature shall have opened compensating supplies of gold for the uses of the world; but the likelihood of such an event is not now apparent. If, as seems probable, the product of gold that will not be required in the arts and manufactures is to constantly diminish, silver will all the more have to be relied upon to take its place and perform its functions as a metal money. It may be expected, however, that the two metals will go on in the future as in the past with alternating periods of relative production, but in their combined use sustaining the values of the world, without the fluctuations that would attend the rising and falling volume of either metal alone. And if, after the resumption of coinage upon any fixed ratio, it should develop that the fears of excessive supply that are expressed by some are being realized, a new and higher ratio can readily be adopted which would inevitably reduce the production of silver by reducing its monetary value; and future action upon this point might be provided for in any agreement that should be entered into. The ratios between the metals have been changed at various times in the past, sometimes in favor of gold and sometimes in favor of silver.

All the nations of Europe were invited to send delegates to the Brussels conference. It seems remarkable that, while such nations as Greece, Portugal, and Turkey were invited, no invitations were sent to our sister republics of South America, with whom our trade relations should be most intimate. The conference seems to be dominated by the brokerage element of the British delegation. From any narrow and selfish standpoint it is not in the interest of the London bankers to favor either the remonetization of silver or uniformity of coinage among nations. It is through varying standards and coinages that they have made countless millions in effecting the world's exchanges and speculating upon the world's trade.

Any one can see that if there were coins of uniform value, so that certain American, English, French, German, and other coins were the equivalent of each other, people would travel from one country to another without the payment of brokerages in making exchanges; and that if silver bullion were at the fixed value which free coinage by the nations generally would establish, it would no longer be purchasable at fluctuating prices for use in India and other silver-using countries.

If the conference should be permitted to go to a successful issue, the occupations of Mr. de Rothschild and Mr. Currie might be seriously affected. They, doubtless, want to hold matters about where they are, deranged and depreciated, that out of such conditions they may continue to levy tribute upon the world's trade and travel. But the depreciation has proceeded so far as to threaten the financial systems of Europe and the world; while the importers in Europe from India and other silvur countries, and while the bankers in London are fattening upon existing conditions, the exporters of England to those countries, and the British agriculturists, are suffering in like proportion. This accounts for the movements in Manchester and other English manufacturing cities in behalf of silver.

The present depreciation is seriously crippling the Indian Government, which has to pay a tribute of about $75,000,000 annually to England. Five of the leading banks of Europe hold about $450,000,000 of silver coin in their vaults as a reserve against outstanding circulating notes. These and other considerations that might be named would seem to justify the hope that the conference might take some adequate favorable action. If not, then what? It will then be incumbent upon the United States, realizing the great position she holds, with the balance of the trade of the world in her favor, to mark out a policy of her own, and in such policy, if supported by a free development of commercial relations, all the other countries of the western hemisphere would doubtless concur.

The United States is abundantly able to take care of herself, and if she desires to recall any of her gold that may be drawn to Europe, there are means at command to enable her to do that and much more.

In a speech in the United States Senate March 9, 1870, upon the question of making our Government bonds payable in London, Paris, Amsterdam, and Berlin, Senator Sumner said:

"I can not forget my own country, nor can I forget the great primacy which I hope to see her assume in the money markets of the world. New York is our natural money center. Why should we revolve about European money centers? Let us keep our own center here at home."

In closing, I am tempted to quote the words of Senator Plumb, uttered in the United States Senate but a few months before his death. After referring to the then recent disturbances caused by the troubles of the Argentine Republic, under the stress of which Baring Bros. were so deeply involved, and to the struggles of England and other nations to retain their stocks of gold, he says:

"What shall the United States do? Shall it lead or shall it follow? It is the only nation in the world towards which people are coming. It is the only nation in the world from which nobody is going. It is the only nation in the world which in actual trade has a steady and continual balance in its favor. It is a nation of 65,000,000, the best equipped for business, for production, of any people in the world, and a country in which are the best chances for investments, toward which more and more comes the current of good things of the world, including population and money. It seems to me, Mr. President, instead of waiting until we become an appanage of the outgrown financial systems of the Old World, until we too are obliged to engage in struggles of the kind of which I have spoken, in order to maintain our hold upon our scant money supply, we ought to strike out, if not for ourselves alone, at least upon a basis that will constrain other nations to yield to us, to come to our views, and join with us in establishing the most necessary and useful thing of bimetallism upon a broader and safer foundation for business, upon a sound and permanent basis."

HOWARD M. HOLDEN.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PRICES.

The vital importance of reasonably remunerative prices to the welfare of any people can not be denied. It is true that Mr. Currie, a London broker and monometallist, one of the delegates from England to the Brussels Conference, without denying the reduction of prices caused by the attempted compression to a single gold standard, is quoted in the press reports of the proceedings of the conference as arguing that low prices are not to be deprecated, but rather to be approved and encouraged as conducive to trade; but his views can hardly meet with general approval. They are the cold expressions of a broker and middleman, who is apparently indifferent to the condition of the producer, so he himself scales his percentage from the product as it passes through his hands on its way to the consumer.

It has been well said that "the true source of riches, as well as of independence, is to be found in the cultivation of the soil," but neither competency nor independence can be realized without remunerative prices. Cotton at 5 cents on the Southern plantation and wheat at 40 cents on the plains of Western Kansas, Nebraska, and Dakota can not yield a fair and living return to the producer. Prices unduly high are to be deprecated as well as prices unduly low; but prices liberally remunerative, without inflation, are essential to the prosperity of the people. Fair prices to the producer, fair wages to the workman, as well as fair profits to the middleman and manufacturer are the conditions that give purchasing power to all classes, and thereby promote trade, general education, comfort, and prosperity, and tend to that diffusion of wealth which is so essential to the permanent independence of any people.

How shall such prices be realized to the producers in this country?

It has become a self-evident truism that the volume of money controls the general prices of commodities. Special and temporary causes, such as unusual fluctuations in demand and supply, temporarily affect particular commodities, but when those transient causes disappear the general condition again prevails. The vast combined stocks of gold and silver in the world, which are the slow aggregations of many centuries, now amounting to about $7,500,000,000, of which about one-half is gold and one-half silver, have become the general measure of values, and the basis upon which all values and credits rest. It is beyond question that the demonetization of silver during recent years by various nations has so narrowed the basis as to greatly reduce prices.

By operations that are plainly apparent, and which are set forth in the preceding article, this result has particularly accrued to cotton and wheat, which have been affected by the competition of like products from silver-using countries; and by more subtle but not less sure methods, the effect has been felt upon the general list of commodities.

It has been proposed by some to fill the void produced by the obliteration of silver by huge additional issues of paper money. Can prices be restored and maintained by such means? Let us consider this question in its bearing upon wheat and cotton.

It is true that if there should be vast additional issues of paper money, whether by the Government or by banks, such as existed during the late civil war, prices of wheat, cotton, and all commodities would sympathize and advance; but this process would soon cease to operate on all articles that are largely exported (and sympathetically on other articles); for, as with wheat and cotton, there is always produced more than the country can consume, and a large surplus has to be disposed of in foreign countries; and it is well known that the price that can be obtained for that surplus in foreign lands is the main factor in determining the price at home, and the value of the whole crop.

If, therefore, values here were largely advanced through causes not common to other nations, as by the great expansion of paper money, prices abroad would not materially sympathize with the advance in prices here; the disparity in prices would cause the foreign needs to be largely supplied elsewhere, or partially met by the substitution of other articles; and thus the foreign market would be contracted, and exports checked. This would react upon and again reduce domestic values. It is, therefore, not through paper money inflation that remunerative prices can be established and made permanent, but it is alone through a restoration of silver and the upholding of its value with gold throughout the world.

The lower the price of silver bullion the cheaper the price at which wheat and cotton can be had in India and other silver-using countries; and the higher the price of silver bullion the higher the cost of those commodities in those countries, and the less disastrous their competition with American wheat and cotton, and consequently the higher the value of our productions. Whatever, therefore, tends to sustain the value of silver, also tends to sustain the values of wheat and cotton, and whatever tends to reduce the value of silver also tends to a further depreciation of wheat and cotton.

The practical operation of this cause was forcibly stated by Secretary Rusk in his report of 1890, which has been quoted from in the preceding article. While this is especially true of wheat and cotton, it is also true of all commodities. A reasonably liberal supply of paper money issued by the Government, or under Government control, is very important, but not a vast, unlimited issue. Permanently remunerative prices can only be secured to the producers of the country by an ample stock of metallic money, and this stock must continually increase in due proportion to meet the growing population and commerce of the country.

These propositions must inevitably hold good so long as the world holds to metallic money as basis money, and as the only real money of universal recognition, and until the deep-rooted financial systems which the wisdom of the ages has adopted and approved shall have been discarded and superseded by paper money without pretense of redemption; and they are of special applicability to all articles the domestic price of which is largely fixed by the value of the exported surplus.

Furthermore, with either metal eliminated the other can not by itself prove sufficient to form the basis for the vast superstructure of paper money and credit, nor can the stable conditions exist that give steady and remunerative prices. The expressions of Mr. Leech, hereinbefore quoted, are of great force on this point.

HOWARD M. HOLDEN.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think a sufficient part of the pamphlet was read to show a fact which no one who has investigated the subject will deny, that the prices of wheat and cotton have declined with silver; and that there has been no general exception. Of course the price of those articles will vary slightly according to the supply and demand, resulting from good or bad crops, but the general average price of wheat and cotton has kept pace with silver. It is very natural that it should do so, because our competitors in supplying the European market with those articles are all, or nearly all, on the silver basis.

A person can buy cheap silver and coin it into money in those countries at substantially the same price he could before. The American farmer has to stand the discount. For example, it is shown by this pamphlet that the price of a bushel of wheat in the European market is substantially, and has been during all these years, an ounce of silver, which the farmer would get if there was no middleman; but the middlemen get the most of it; however, the India farmer takes his bushel of wheat to London or Liverpool and receives his ounce of silver, and in his own country has it coined into rupees equivalent to about $1.38 at the ratio of 15 to 1. The American farmer takes his bushel of wheat to the same market, and he gets his ounce of silver, and then he gets for it 83 or 84 cents. The result is the building up of trade there and the destruction of it here.

When such glaring facts as these exist, when the average price of commodities has fallen 40 per cent in twenty years, is there any reason why there should not be unrest and discontent among the farming community? Mortgages do not decrease in their demand; of the money in which they are to be paid it takes nearly twice—30 or 40 per cent—more property and more labor than it did twenty years ago. They grow every day and every hour in their command of property. The moneyed classes are growing rich; all those who can collect their debts are growing rich. Creditors are looking out for their securities now, and if they can obtain payment in gold without interest at all the enhanced value of money is enormous.

The enhanced value of money for the last twenty years has been fully 2 per cent. The man who had deposited in a bank or a vault $100,000 twenty years ago would find it commanding as much property to-day as $140,000 would command at that time, or as much as if he had received 2 per cent on it. When he gets further interest on it it is sweeping the earnings of the masses into the hands of the few. I verily believe that if the obligations to pay money now outstanding had to be paid in the shrinking supply of gold, which has got to shrink year after year, and if silver is destroyed, they are more than sufficient to absorb the entire wealth of the civilized world.

When we see such a revolution going on, when we see this terrible robbery by corporations, when we see the emissaries of the gold kings about the Capitol, when we see the agents of foreign bondholders coming here and dictating terms, when see those men circulating petitions among bankers to be sent here, when we hear the edict go forth in the leading newspapers of the land that this shall be done, is it not time to sound the alarm?

Neither party put this issue before the country in the recent campaign. Both platforms were mere jargon, without any distinct proposition in them on this question. They were both satisfactory to the gold ring or the gold trust. The public press and the public speakers of both parties in the last canvass told the people that the money question was not an issue; that the tariff was the only important thing. But since the election we have heard nothing of the tariff.

On the other hand, the leading journals of both parties in the commercial centers, under the control of the gold ring, have demanded of Congress under threats of financial ruin the repeal of all laws recognizing silver in any way as money. They have demanded the utter destruction of all the market for silver in the civilized world to the end that the value of gold may be enhanced and the people still further robbed. I say it is a mockery to go before the people with one issue and suppress the paramount issue, and then having obtained a victory to use the power thus required to destroy the industries of this country and to rob the masses for the benefit of the few.

There was a protest put in by over a million votes against both parties. That protest was not backed by one-fifth of the men who are suffering and who demand redress because they were told there was no hope of success. When a million votes are cast without hope of success it means that there is unrest in the country. This unrest has beaten the political party in power every four years at three successive elections. It was unrest and falling prices that beat the Republican party in 1884.

The Democratic party promised relief and put a plank in its platform in favor of honest money, gold and silver. That was construed by the people and by the public speakers to mean the free and unlimited coinage of silver equally with gold, for everybody knows that silver can not be equal with gold unless its ancient privilege of coinage is recognized. It is the money demand that makes gold valuable. Take that away and it would depreciate. If silver is not to be used as money the supply on hand is ample for many years, and its price must fall.

The people, I say, believed that the Democratic party would restore silver in 1884. It did not do it, and four years from that time when the Democratic national convention met it did not mention silver. The Republican party did. It put a plank in its platform which was understood by the people and intended to be understood by those who drew it to mean that the Republican party would restore silver, and the Republican party was victorious. The Republican party did not restore silver. Its great leaders in the last campaign were making speeches in favor of its utter destruction by the repeal of the only law that furnishes a market for it. The Republican press indorsed the speeches of its great leaders. The Democratic party did not agree to restore silver, but it said "we can give relief in some other way." The people did not have much faith in the relief promised, because the vote was exceedingly light. Hundreds of thousands staid away from the polls. The Republicans had been the most deceived and they were the most disgusted and remained away from the polls in greater numbers.

As I before remarked, a million men protested, but a sufficient number to elect the Democratic candidate cast their votes in a perfunctory way, without the slightest interest or excitement. There was never in the history of America a campaign in which the hearts of the people were less engaged. All the papers, Republican and Democratic, concurred and asked, "What does it mean? There is no enthusiasm; there is no interest." There was no interest because there was no real hope of relief. Discontent will continue, and it must continue until the people have relief.

Now we are told that we can get relief by violating the Constitution; that if Congress will disregard the safeguards in that instrument and invade the States and interfere with their business there will be relief. No relief can come from doing wrong. Congress has abundant power to give the relief required, and to give it in a copious, generous manner by restoring the money of the Constitution.

What a blessing it would be if we could have as a basis of circulation nearly eight thousand million dollars! What prosperity would spring from that! There would then be no anxiety when gold goes out of the country, because it would make no difference to us whether gold went or silver went.

Senators talk about an oversupply of silver. That is absurd. It has not taken place. From the discovery of America until 1803 Humboldt tells us that there were 44 ounces of silver produced to 1 of gold. Why was it that at the end of that period the quantity of coin was not in the same proportion? The silver was about equal with the gold, and it was because four times as much silver disappeared as gold. All the people used silver, and but comparatively few used gold. Gold is a rich man's money. It never was in general circulation, and it never can be. It never was the regulator of values. It never can get into general circulation.

If nothing but gold is used the people can have no coin money; it is impossible. Gold never did circulate among a hundred million people. It is the bankers' money. It does not disappear as fast as silver.

During that period it is estimated by some—it may not be correct—that half the supply of gold came from the silver mines. I am confident that but for silver mining there would have been very little of the gold produced, because the towns in Mexico and South America, which furnished the population from which the men who go out to hunt for gold in the little ravines in the little gleanings or where the placer gold comes from, are sustained by silver mines. That is the grand supply.

This ratio of overproduction continued until 1850. Then came an accident which has upset the minds of men. Then came a great discovery, the like of which can never again take place. California and Australia with their hundreds and hundreds of millions of product poured their treasure into commerce and quickened everything. The energies of man accomplished more in twenty-five years than had ever been accomplished in any hundred years that preceded it. When the supply of gold commenced to wane, as if providential again, the great Comstock mine was discovered, and a new era of silver mining was inaugurated.

Then it was that sordid, selfish, cold-hearted misers and money-dealers conspired, for the avowed purpose of enhancing the value of their property, to cut off one of the precious metals. Nobody knew it. It was not discussed. If it had been it would have made no difference. It was either the mistake or the crime of the nineteenth century. They tried first to destroy gold to accomplish that purpose. Then they recalled the history of the metals and found that the main supply came from silver. They saw the new silver mines developing, and not on account of overproduction, for production had but just begun then, they struck down silver.

The year that silver was destroyed in these halls there was only $81,000,000, coin value, of silver produced in the world and $96,000,000 in gold. Since that time there has been an increase in the production of silver and a rapid decrease in the production of gold except from the silver mines, because, as I before remarked, the silver mines of Nevada alone have produced $200,000,000 of gold. Without the silver mines the product of gold would not to-day be $60,000,000 a year. The time is not far distant when the stock will be reduced to about what it was in former ages.

It is said that we are producing silver in vast quantities. It has gradually increased until the product is now about $170,000,000 or $175,000,000, coin value. But is that too great an increase? The two metals combined, with all the exaggeration of statistics, could not reach $300,000,000, coinage value. Is that a great increase in forty years? Look at the increase that took place between 1848 and 1852. The amount rose from about $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 in 1848 to over $200,000,000 in 1852. One hundred and ninety-six million of this amount was gold. That rapid increase injured no one. There has been no increase of both metals combined sufficient to keep pace with population and business.

When Senators tell you that silver can be produced for anything less than its coinage value on an average they try to deceive you. I will be able to make a report from statements collected from all the leading experienced men in the United States, and I will undertake to show that it is their average opinion that it costs about $2 to produce one, because you must take into account the hunting for it, for gold and silver are more or less finds, and if you do not hunt you can not find.

The cost of the prospecting that is expended in finding this metal must go into the cost of production. I have seen thousands of dollars of gold picked up in a day, but that had no reference to the general cost of the production of gold. The cost of the production of both metals is in excess of their value, and has been during all the ages. This is the opinion of Humboldt, of Jacob, and of every man who has investigated it. They say that the cost of production is enormously more than the value of the metal when procured.

But the cost of production has nothing to do with its value as money. Its value is the picture on the coin, what you will give for it. Its value as money, whether it costs much or less to produce it, is the measure by which labor and property must be gained and determined. If silver is not used as a measure it is good for nothing. That measure is the limit of quantity of the two metals. When you depart from that you are all at sea. Read history. Men, in their wisdom, thought they could depart from the measure fixed by nature in the production of the two metals

France tried it with her assignats. She first issued 400,000,000, and it was good money. Her necessities continued, and her last issue was 45,000,000,000, and her assignats were worth no more than hay. They had no power of limitation. It may be that the time will come when the genius of man will invent something to limit the supply of money that we may have, but now we have no other limitation. The talk of limiting it to the shrinking supply of gold is more radical, revolutionary, and destructive than the unlimited issue of paper money. Nothing, I say, presents such a dismal picture to man as our basis of circulation. Capital must in the next twenty years be reduced 30 or 40 per cent in every country if silver mining is stopped. That will be the consequence.

That is what is taking place, and that is what is producing the unrest. In their desire for relief from their hard condition the people sent petitions here; they blame their neighbors; they attribute their distress to false causes. We have been legislating to accommodate them in nonessentials, creating excitement over questions that can not possibly affect them, violating the Constitution to accomplish an impossible purpose in that direction when we should have been obeying the constitutional mandate to coin gold and silver and furnish the people money. We can do that. We can follow in the footsteps of the fathers, obey their command, relieve the people from the falling prices and the hard times, and give the people more money and better prices, stimulating production, making it easier for the people to live, to support their families and pay their debts, giving them the instruments of civilization, without which civilization itself can not exist.

Then you will have rest. Then you will have prosperity. Then petitions for such legislation as the measure before the Senate will cease to come here. But so long as the iron grasp of contraction paralyzes the hand of industry, so long you will here these complaints. Look at the situation of the civilized world. In Europe every nation is loaded with debt beyond its capacity to pay, and those debts are increasing every day with the enhanced value of money. There are 15,000,000 soldiers under arms. What chance have the people to obtain their rights there? A condition worse than the feudal system is growing up in that country, and the condition of the working and producing classes is tenfold worse than it was forty years ago.

There is no hope for them. They have not a free ballot. They have not free speech. We have; and it is sad in free America to have the men who are oppressing the people abroad send across the wires edicts governing our legislation, telling us to deprive our people of money for the purpose of enriching the creditor class of England, and we listen to them. One breath from them has more power with the ruling classes in both parties than all the petitions of all the people of the United States. When they petition you hear them not. You complain of them; you call them cranks; you call them hard names.

Have they no reason to complain? Has not your property in the United States increased 40 per cent when theirs has shrunk an equal amount? Have you not grown rich while they have grown poor? Look at the price of wheat and cotton, and consider for a moment. Reflect upon the fact that the property of farmers, where it has not been affected by immigration or some other local cause, has depreciated in the last twenty years from 40 to 50 per cent in value. The mortgages have not decreased. When the people are thus oppressed, do you doubt their unrest? I tell the Senate that unrest exists, and it will continue as long as the iron grasp of contraction inflicts new wounds upon the industries of the country.

Such a bill as this at a time of such distress seems to me to reflect very little credit on the hearts or consciences of the people who advocate it. The people ask for bread and you give them a stone. It will not do to say they did not know what they wanted. Perhaps they do not. They know that they are oppressed. You know the remedy. You know that you have taken their money away from them. Restore it. Give them the money of the Constitution and they will be satisfied, and the party that does it will ingratiate itself in the hearts of the people and be entitled to an indefinite lease of power. But without that, every four years the administration will change.

Every four years will show that the political parties of the country are dissatisfied; these Halls will be continually beset with petitions and memorials asking for this and that kind of legislation, which we know will not benefit the people, and which we know we have no power to enact. Let us stop this farce. I think the bill under consideration is a palpable violation of the Constitution. The bill under consideration can not grant the relief sought by the people. The bill under consideration is raising false hopes, to be cast down just as has been the case with all the other experiments in legislation such as this. They can not reach the difficulty. If we are to legislate for the people in earnest, let us enact laws that will give relief and not trifle with a serious and important question which is affecting the civilization of the age.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment wil be read.

The Secretary read Mr. GEORGE'S amendment, which was to strike out all after section 3 of the bill, except the last section, and insert other sections.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, it will be remembered by the Senate that when I submitted some remarks on the pending bill the other day I gave notice of my purpose at the proper time to move an amendment to the substitute of the Senator from Mississippi. I should like to inquire if an amendment to the amendment is now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin would be an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. VILAS. So I supposed. I therefore propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of lines 2, 3, and 4 in the fourth section of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi the words:

"Options" and "futures," as hereinbefore defined, are hereby declared to be obstructions to and restraints upon commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to be illegal and void; and

So as to read:

SEC. 4. That if any person shall be a party, either as buyer or seller, to any contract or agreement hereinbefore defined as "options" or "futures," he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I do not intend to debate the amendment, especially in view of the fact that I submitted what seemed to me to be good reasons why it should be adopted and such as I thought might even commend it to the acceptance of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi himself, who has given no expression of his view in regard to it. The general drift of that argument was, that if the fact which the words purposed to be struck out assert be indeed a fact, and if especially that fact be jurisdictional, so that the right of Congress to legislate in the manner proposed by the distinguished Senator depends upon the existence of that fact, it ought to be left to the courts to determine, and Congress ought not to attempt the absolute declaration of a thing of that sort.

Now, I wish to make one further observation in regard to the amendment which was not said in the remarks I had the honor to submit the other day, but to which attention was called by a very pertinent question of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. This declaration alleges, as it is incorporated in the amendment, that options and futures are not only obstructions to and restraints upon commerce, but illegal and void.

The question which was put by the Senator from Massachusetts is this: If anything which is illegal and void because it is an interference with interstate or foreign commerce would not be so declared by the courts, the question being properly presented in a suit or action, can there be any just right in Congress to anticipate and pronounce upon what is thus shown in truth to be a judicial question?

That it is a judicial question can perhaps be made evident by one consideration. The court has in one notable case, and I think in several others, declared that legislation of a State was invalid because it interfered with the right or power of Congress to legislate upon the subject of interstate commerce. That was in substance, I believe, the bases of the decision in the cases known as the original package cases. I understand it to have been held, generally and summarily speaking, that if the legislation of a State gives any apparent right to do a thing which is contrary to or invades the power of Congress to legislate upon the subject of interstate commerce, that legislation must fail.

Here is a class of contracts which stands upon the legislation of the States. If that legislation does thus in truth support what is an obstruction to commerce and an interference with the powers of Congress in respect to interstate commerce, might not that question be presented to the courts in a proper manner, and should Congress overstep its proper boundary and undertake to declare a judgment which under the partition of power between the legislative and judicial branches belongs properly to the courts to decide?

I again call attention to the question which I think must be very obvious to the Senator from Mississippi, whether we have the right, if the fact be not as is here declared—and I will use his own language—to steal a power we would not otherwise possess by declaring a jurisdictional fact which can not be or is not true? Upon that point it will be apparent to the distinguished Senator that it is perfectly safe to omit this declaration if the fact be in accordance with the declaration. If the evidence will prove the truth of what is here asserted, and if the fact be, as this indicates it, essential to our right to legislate, let us leave that question in proper courtesy and with proper respect to the judicial branch of the Government, to the courts for their determination.

I do not desire to protract this argument. I do not offer the amendment in any spirit of obstruction or delay, but because it seems to me an amendment which ought to be adopted if the substitute proposed by the Senator from Mississippi should be finally accepted by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment designated as an "amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi" is an amendment which was prepared by a minority of the Judiciary Committee, composed of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and myself, and in a written report which we made to the Senate was recommended to this body for adoption.

The whole question involved not only in the original bill as it came from the House of Representatives, but in the amendment which was recommended by the minority of the Judiciary Committee has been well said by Senators who oppose the adoption of either and both to be of the utmost importance, not only in a constitutional point of view, but as the bill and amendment may relate to the business interests of the country. In that assertion of the importance of this proposed legislation to the people of this country and its supreme importance I heartily agree.

I may state now that in the report made from that same committee by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] it was declared that the dealing in agricultural products by persons who did not own them and who had no right to them is a great evil and ought to be suppressed if there was any constitutional power in Congress to do it. So the Senate now at this late hour will discover that it is the opinion of Senators on both sides of this question that the matters of legislation proposed, both the original bill as it came from the House of Representatives and the amendment which was suggested by the minority of the Judiciary Committee, are of supreme importance, as they affect that most delicate of all questions which can engage the attention of the American Congress, the relative powers of the States and the Federal Government upon a question conceded to be on all sides of the gravest importance. So I say its great importance is discoverable to the Senate.

The bill has been discussed for the last two or three days with a great deal of ability and with a great deal of research into precedents made not only by the Supreme Court of the United States but also by Congress. In the last day or two the amendment which was recommended by the minority of the Judiciary Committee, and commonly called the amendment proposed by myself, has especially been assailed with a great deal of ability and a great deal of ingenuity.

It is and has been expected that before the conclusion of the debate upon that subject some member of the minority of the Judiciary Committee who concurred in recommending the amendment to the favorable consideration of the Senate would make not only some reply, but such reply as in the judgment of the Senator who should undertake that task would be considered at least as presenting the main arguments upon which the Senators who favor the amendment rely.

I confess, sir, that at this hour of the day I feel a little embarrassed about what I ought to do. The learned and distinguished Senator from Minnesota, who has charge of the bill, has expressed a wish that the Senate shall sit out to-day the debate on this question. Occupying the humble position I do, being in favor very much of having some effective constitutional legislation upon that subject, I should dislike to interfere with the arrangement desired by the Senator who has charge of the bill.

Yet I feel that with the ample preparation which has been made by the Senators who have assailed the amendment, at this late hour, with the Senate tired and weary, possibly I would not do justice to the question or to myself if I should consume an hour or two more in presenting the views which, with the minority of the Judiciary Committee, I entertain upon that subject. I dislike to interfere with the arrangement of my distinguished friend, who has, with so much fidelity to the interests of the people and with so much zeal and ability, pressed this measure upon the consideration of the Senate. I feel some embarrassment in interfering with any arrangement he desires.

Mr. WASHBURN. As the day has so far progressed and it seems hardly fair to require the Senator to go on to-night, I feel like withdrawing the request I made several days ago to reach a vote before we should adjourn to-day. I give notice that to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to remain in session until we reach a final vote, and in deference to my good friend from Mississippi, if it is agreeable to him, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator to withhold the motion to adjourn for a few minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will submit the motion when the Senator from Mississippi concludes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Mississippi does not yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. WASHBURN. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Senator from Mississippi proceeds, I wish to say a word simply to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. As the Senator from Minnesota knows, there is some executive business which ought to be attended to at an early day. Does the Senator see his way clear to give way at any time long enough to transact some executive business?

Mr. WASHBURN. As soon as the Senator from Mississippi gets through I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. We can not do it to-night.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, only one more remark and I shall take my seat.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who made such an able and ingenious speech some days ago in opposition to the amendment which I had the honor, in behalf of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, to offer, has proposed this evening to amend the amendment by striking out certain words which he seems to think are unusual in an act of Congress, a clause which he seems to think is a usurpation on the part of Congress in assuming for itself what he calls the judicial power of declaring certain contracts illegal. I desire to make a remark on that point, so that Senators, when we shall have adjourned, may take home with them at least one of the evidences of a mistake which Senators who assail this amendment have made.

I have been charged by the Senator from Wisconsin, or at least by the friends or proponents of his amendment, with dealing directly with what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in his written report declared to be a great evil which ought to be suppressed. I have been charged with introducing a novelty into the legislation of this country, so that Senators who have not given to this matter their careful attention (which possibly no Senators ever give to a question except those who propose to debate it) will go away from the Senate Chamber under the great delusion that we are here for the first time in the history of American legislation undertaking to do a particular thing which those who oppose it say is a usurpation of power.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin and Senators who may have been affected by the delusion under which the Senator from Wisconsin has labored to the fact that the phraseology to which he so seriously objects has ample, full justification in the precedents of the Senate, precedents, too, not found in hasty and undebated and inconsiderate legislation, but precedents which are the result of long, careful, learned debate in this body as well as in the Law Committee of this body.

I wish to read that, so that Senators who have listened to this debate may know that some things which have been passing current in this body as constitutional learning are no more than the delusion of Senators who have persuaded themselves that this very grave and important matter, so feelingly alluded to by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Massachusetts is not of a very recent date and wholly the result of the imagination (if I may use that word) of Senators seeking to accomplish legislation unauthorized by the Constitution and unwarranted by the legislative history of the country.

The Senator from Wisconsin objects that in the languge which he moves to strike out we assume the judicial function of declaring certain contracts illegal. Let us see what the precedent is to which I have alluded:

Every contract or combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be—

By this enactment, by this judgment of the American Congress declared it to be what?

Illegal.

That language in the first section of the statute is repeated on the subject of trusts; and to show that it was not merely a lapsus pennæ of the draftsman of the first section of the law, if you will go to section 3, you will find that certain contracts of a similar character between States and Territories are also, to use the language of the statute, "hereby declared to be illegal."

Mr. WHITE. Will it disturb the Senator if I ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. Is there not a fundamental distinction between declaring certain specific acts recited in the law as being impediments to commerce and declaring that when acts are impediments to commerce they shall be illegal?

Mr. GEORGE. There is a distinction, as suggested by the Senator, a distinction which I have carefully considered and about which I propose at some length to speak to-morrow morning.

I wish to say now, however, that I have a precedent for a declaration by Congress that certain contracts and combinations are illegal. I shall show to-morrow by a number of precedents from acts of Congress that there is nothing more common, especially in legislation under the commerce clause of the Constitution, than for Congress to declare and prohibit certain specific acts, which come up to what my learned friend from Louisiana thinks I can not find.

Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I would not consider a thousand declarations by Congress that certain acts are legal as reaching my question. My question is not whether this bill declares those acts illegal, but whether it does not declare, as a matter of fact, that they impede commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly what I am going to prove to-morrow, that certain acts named in the statutes of Congress are prohibited upon no other ground than that they either restrict or obstruct commerce, or that certain specific things are required to be done which facilitate commerce between the States.

In addition to that, I will give notice to the Senators who so much object to this declaration by the American Congress, that certain things which Congress shall adjudicate or say are or are not regulations of commerce, which restrict or facilitate commerce, by the judgment of the greatest judge who ever sat in the Supreme Court of the United States are solely within the jurisdirtion of Congress to pronounce upon.

Having said that much, so that Senators may have the night to rest and sleep upon it, to find arguments and precedents to meet that which I shall allege, I will yield to a motion to go into executive session or to adjourn, which ever may be the will of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Mississippi, before he takes his seat, permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. I have been listening to the Senator, as I always do, with great interest, and just now with some expectancy that he would fulfill his promise and give those who are so unfortunate as to differ with him in regard to his amendment, such precedents in legislation that they might take away with them to-night the precedents for Congress declaring that certain specific acts were obstructions or restraints of commerce. I shall be very much obliged to the Senator if he will, without reciting them at length, refer me to them, that I may examine them before the meeting to-morrow.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not wish to anticipate the remarks which I intend to make to-morrow morning; but to gratify my distinguished friend from Delaware, so that his slumbers upon that subject may not be disturbed by a hungering and thirsting after the information which I shall give just now, I shall read from the statutes of the United States a case exactly in point.

Section 5 of the interstate-commerce act declares—

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads or any portion thereof.

I hope my distinguished friend will see that there is no difference between the word "pooling," or the division of freights, as mentioned in this act in the section which I have read to the Senate, which "is hereby declared to be illegal," and the provision which I have read:

That it shall be unlawful.

There is a distinct fact; there is a separate and distinct contract selected by Congress from the mass of contracts which railroad companies may make, which is declared to be illegal and is prohibited, whereby Senators will see, because it is a very plain thing to see, that the great contention which they make in this matter that the effect of the contract upon interstate commerce and foreign commerce shall be left to the judgment of the court. Congress says that that particular kind of a contract shall not be made, as is provided in the amendment I have offered, to which so much objection has been made.

Mr. GRAY. I only wish to thank the Senator from Mississippi for complying so readily with my request and citing particular statutes, which he said he could cite before he took his seat, which supported the position he has taken. Having thanked the Senator for complying with that request, that is all I shall say at this late hour, except to remind him what he will more enlarge upon to-morrow, that the instance of legislation which he does cite in the interstate-commerce law is one which concerns itself directly, admittedly, on all sides, with an act of interstate commerce, one of those transactions which by the very statement of it brings it within the purview of the clause in the Constitution giving Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States, precisely upon the same ground as in the other instance which he cited in his speech last summer, where the Congress of the United States undertook to say what should or should not be an obstruction to the navigation of the Ohio River.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not intend to let the Senator from Delaware go to sleep in the darkness and mist which seems to surround him upon this question. The Senator from Delaware very skillfully evades the point of the question which he first put to me. He wanted information as to a declaration made by Congress that a specific act, a named contract, was, in the judgment of Congress, unlawful and an interference with interstate commerce.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will pardon me for correcting his misstatement of my position. I did not challenge the Senator, if he will allow me, to produce an instance. I asked him before he closed if he would keep his promise to cite an instance.

Mr. GEORGE. I will withdraw the word "challenge," if I used it.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, no; I was not making any comment on that.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; I did not intend to use that word. If I used it I take it back. The Senator suggested to cite an instance, which I did; and now what does he say? He says it is true that Congress has done that in the instance to which I have alluded, but attempts to evade the force of it by saying that whilst Congress may do that thing, may declare that a specific kind of contract is an obstruction to commerce, illegal, and prohibit it, yet in the case which I cited it happened to be a case of interstate commerce.

The question is as to the power of Congress to make the declaration. I am assailed and my amendment is assailed by the amendment offered to it by the Senator from Wisconsin upon the ground that Congress may not make such a declaration. I answered and showed that Congress can make such a declaration and has made it. Then I am gravely informed that while it is true that Congress may make the declaration, it must be in a case of interstate commerce. That is the very question at issue between the Senators upon the other side and myself. If I do not succeed to-morrow in showing that this great evil, conceded to be so by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and which ought to be suppressed if there be constitutional power in Congress to suppress it, does interfere with and restrain interstate and foreign commerce, then I shall have failed to make out my case.

Lest, however, the Senator shall still remain in the mists and fogs which seem to surround him in reference to this question for another night, I will inform him that the pooling referred to and prohibited by the fifth section of the interstate-commerce law is not only a pooling of freights earned in interstate commerce, but also a pooling of freights earned in domestic and internal commerce. Let us see whether that be so or not.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings or such railroads.

If the statute had stopped there, my learned friend might have deluded himself with the idea that it only meant earnings coming from interstate and foreign commerce; but the statute did not stop there. I will read it all as it stands on the statute book so that the Senator will see verified in this statute a great principle recognized by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons vs. Ogden, the first great case which undertook to explain the power of Congress over interstate and foreign and domestic commerce—not only recognized in that case, but never departed from by any decision of the illustrious tribunal or of any of the judges of that court who have succeeded Chief Justice Marshall.

That principle is, that when it becomes necessary to fully, completely, and effectually regulate interstate and foreign commerce, all powers, all faculties, all tradings, all acts, and all commerce which are purely domestic and internal must fall before the supreme power of Congress in the honest exercise of the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. It is well to note that. Senators who have argued against this proposition all the way through have gone upon the idea that there is a line, broad, marked, a gulf as impassable as that which separated Dives from Abraham, running between interstate and foreign commerce upon one side, and domestic and internal commerce upon the other, across which Congress can never go.

Lest I be misunderstood, I will state that domestic commerce, domestic police powers, and transactions within a State are beyond the jurisdiction of Congress, except only when it becomes necessary for Congress to execute fully, fairly, and completely the power vested in it to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. Then, and then only, the inferior, the subordinate powers, jurisdiction, and faculties of the State must yield. The that books are full of that. John Marshall stated it, and I hope my distinguished friend from Delaware will not overlook it.

Mr. PUGH. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that he read the remainder of the section which he promised to quote.

Mr. GEORGE. I am very much obliged to my friend for the suggestion, and I will read it:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act—

That is, a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce—

to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

That takes it all in.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to detain the Senate more than a moment, but I wish again to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that, though I may be in mist and darkness mentally and intellectually in regard to this great question——

Mr. GEORGE. That expression was purely Pickwickian.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to say to the Senator that one of his acute mind and power of legal discrimination must have understood when I asked him for an instance in which a specific act had been declared to be a violation of the commerce clause of the Constitution, or an obstruction or restriction of commerce, that I referred to some act which was outside of the domain of interstate commerce. When, therefore, he referred to the fifth section of the interstate-commerce law which forbids contracts for pooling, he only referred to a law which inhibited contracts which related to and referred exclusively to, notwithstanding what he had just read, transactions of interstate commerce, and none other. Of course this is not the time to argue with the Senator, but I shall be very glad to hear him to-morrow enlarge upon that point.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 20, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 19, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God, as it hath pleased Thee to take out of this world the soul of a man who once filled the most illustrious station in the land, we humbly pray that Thy truth and love may be the consolation and comfort of his children stricken by this heavy blow. Move men of all parties to pay the deserved tribute to his eminent character and services, and at the grave's mouth may all anger and strife cease and be forgotten.

As we are all here upon the earth for only a brief season, and soon must take our journey into the invisible, knit our hearts more and more closely in the bonds of brotherly kindness and charity, that we may be the children of our Father in Heaven, and that an abundant entrance may be ministered unto us into Thine everlasting kingdom. We pray through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEFICIENCIES IN POSTAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of deficiencies in appropriations on account of postal service, submitted by the Sixth Auditor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for postal service for the current fiscal year, submitted by the Postmaster-General; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BREVETS IN THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Major-General Commanding the Army, submitting reasons why Senate bill No. 2699, relating to brevets in the Army, should not become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS AND EMPLOYÉS IN NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a list of clerks and other employés of that Department during the calendar year 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOOLS IN UTAH TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the fifth annual report of the commissioner of schools for Utah Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Education, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of David Graham vs. United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of F. M. Freeman vs. United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims transmitting copies of the findings of the court in the cases of the following-named persons against United States: M. C. Baylor and Benjamin Brown; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND ARLINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the President of the Washington and Arlington Railway Company, transmitting a statement showing the stockholders and the receipts and disbursements, from its organization to December 31, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report back a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a letter from the collector of customs at Chicago, Ill., in relation to harbor lines in the waters of Chicago, and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

There being no objection, the change of reference was ordered as requested.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HUDSON.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7585) to authorize the New York and New Jersey bridge companies to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 10015), to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1312) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

THE SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Let the report be read subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report was read at length.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Before consent is given, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some further explanation of this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as set forth in the report, in 1856 Dr. Read invented a rifle shot or projectile which was extensively used by the United States Government under a contract made with him for that purpose. He had a contract with the Secretary of War to pay him a reasonable royalty on the invention in case of its use by the Government. Under that contract and after this invention had been extensively used, a board of army officers was appointed to ascertain and investigate what a reasonable royalty would be for the use of the projectile. That board of army officers, after a very thorough investigation of the subject, reported that in their opinion $17,000 was a reasonable and just price to pay for the invention.

This bill has been passed by the House on three separate occasions; it has passed the Senate on two occasions, and passed both the House and Senate on one occasion, but failed to reach the President in time for his signature. I think it is a perfectly just claim.

Dr. Read has been prosecuting this claim for some twenty years past; he has grown old in its prosecution.

It is certainly a just and proper claim; the Government owes the amount of money, and if it intends to pay its just debts to its citizens it seems to me that there can be no reasonable objection interposed to the passage of this bill.

Mr. OATES. If my colleague will allow me, for twenty years or more this claim has been before Congress, and never in a single instance has there been a report adverse to it. The reports have been uniformly in its favor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. This is a very old claim, but I am informed that the beneficiary is a deformed little girl, and so I do not object.

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1307) to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city, had agreed to a further conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. PERKINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3707) making an appropriation for establishing buoyage on the water front of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 128) "to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes."

GRUBB & ROBINSON.

Mr. BRODERICK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9413) to authorize the proper accounting officer of the Treasury Department to examine and audit, according to equity, the claim of Grubb & Robinson, a firm consisting of Alfred B. Grubb and William H. Robinson, and of Alfred B. Grubb, for building material sold and delivered to members of the Prairie band of Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BRODERICK. I ask to have the following report read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report accompanying the bill will be read.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WATSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

The regular order is the call of the standing and select committees for reports.

SALARIES OF THE RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back the bill (S. 2604) to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of railway and postal clerks; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENECA INDIANS.

Mr. HOOKER of New York, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 10206) to ratify and confirm an agreement made between the Seneca Nation of Indians and William B. Barker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

NEW YORK INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-four minutes past 12 o'clock.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the call go back to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee was passed without prejudice. I desire to take up a bill which has already been considered in part, authorizing the New York Indians to bring their claims before the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Indian Affairs had reserved to it the right to be called, and the gentleman from Arkansas now exercises that right.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill pending in the morning hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5679) to provide for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to and beneficiaries under the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, January 15, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulations of that treaty.

The SPEAKER. This bill was being considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself in the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5679) to provide for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to and beneficiaries under the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, January 15, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulations of that treaty, with Mr. TARSNEY in the chair.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will give me their attention I will say that it will be remembered by those who took notice of the proceedings in this matter, that when the hour expired the other day the committee was dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENTLEY] were acting as tellers.

Mr. PEEL. If the tellers were to resume their places now, of course the committee would be unable to remember the subject-matter, and I move that the vote by which tellers were ordered may be reconsidered, so that the subject-matter may be explained again to the committee, and so that members may know what they are voting upon.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the vote by which tellers were ordered was reconsidered.

Mr. PEEL. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will give me their attention—and especially if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who objected to this matter before, will give me his attention—I will say that the Committee on Indian Affairs reported a House bill to appropriate nearly two millions of dollars to pay the New York Indians their claim as found by the Court of Claims. The Senate committee reported a bill to refer the matter to the Court of Claims again for the purpose of ascertaining the law in connection with the facts, as well as the facts themselves. When the bill was up before, we asked to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Since that time the Senate have passed their bill referring this matter to the Court of Claims. I have the proceedings as shown by the RECORD, in my hand.

I now move that the engrossed Senate bill, which is the same as the printed Senate bill, be substituted for the House bill. The House bill appropriates the money, while the Senate bill does not, but refers the matter to the Court of Claims to find the amount due, restricting the court from finding any interest; so that the first vote should be on the motion to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. To that I do not think there can be any objection, because the House bill appropriates the money, while the Senate bill refers the matter to the court. I would like to have a vote on that, so that we may get to the substitute, and then the matter will be thoroughly explained to the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the Senate bill be read.

Mr. PEEL. I ask that the engrossed Senate bill be read. It is the bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and enter up judgment as if it had original jurisdiction of said case, the claim of the New York Indians, being those Indians who were parties to the treaty of Buffalo Creek, New York, on the 15th of January, 1838, against the United States, growing out of the alleged unexecuted stipulations of said treaty on the part of the United States. In the hearing and adjudication of said case said court may proceed upon the finding of facts already made, upon a reference of said claim to said court, filed on the 11th day of January, 1892, and transmitted to Congress by John Randolph, assistant clerk of said court, on the 16th day of January, 1892. Or said court may, if in its opinion justice so requires, take other testimony as to facts. But in any judgment it may render against the United States, in favor of said claimants, interest shall not be allowed. The statute of limitations shall not be pleaded as a bar to recovery in said case. The Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the United States in said case. And from any judgment rendered by the court, either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Said cause shall be advanced on the docket and tried without delay in any court which shall become invested with jurisdiction thereof by the provisions of this act.

Mr. PEEL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is on adopting the substitute, which refers the matter back to the Court of Claims to determine, instead of voting upon the House bill which appropriates the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], that the Senate bill now on the Speaker's table, just reported by the Clerk, be recommended to the House as a substitute for the House bill, and that the House bill do lie upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] whether this matter has been referred to the Indian Bureau and a report made?

Mr. PEEL. I am not advised; but my colleague [Mr. HOOKER of New York] can probably tell.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. It has been, and the Indian Bureau recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we will have the report from the Indian Bureau read.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. I have not the report here.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this measure should not pass unless it is recommended by at least the Indian Commissioner, and I think it should also be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PEEL. I will say to my friend that he certainly can not object to a vote being taken on the question of substituting the Senate bill for the House bill. Then the issue will arise whether the substitute should pass. I would like to have a vote taken on that, and then I will have the statement from the Senate read, which explains the matter very fully. My colleague [Mr. HOOKER of New York] states that the Commissioner has recommended it, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the letter of the Commissioner ought to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PEEL. It may be in the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will understand fully that it is obvious that this claim will be adjudicated in favor of the Indians by the court, from the finding which they have already made, the subject having already been before them. The only question is whether, in a claim over fifty years of age, the House should apply the principle of the statute of limitations or not. If the matter is referred to the court, of course the court will allow the money. That is very obvious from the facts already stated, and which appears in the report. I do not remember what gentleman interested himself in the subject when it was up before, but a question of this magnitude ought certainly to be fairly considered.

I was in hopes that the Secretary of the Interior, or at least the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, had made a full report upon the claim. This transaction occurred over forty years ago, and it seems to me almost incredible that this should have remained all this time in this way.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, it is not strange to a man who had had experience in this House why claims against the United States, by Indians or anybody else, are allowed to grow old. I am not posted why it was in this particular case; but I am never afraid of the courts of my own country adjudicating a claim against the Government for anybody. The motion which I make now is not to pass the bill, but to pass the substitute, a Senate bill, which the Senate has passed (and I have the proceedings of that body in my hand), to refer this claim back to the Court of Claims.

The court once found in favor of these Indians. Instead of going on with the other bill, and appropriating the money, in response to that judgment of the Court of Claims, the Senate thought it safer to send the claim back to the Court of Claims for further adjudication, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the Government to be represented by the Attorney-General. Therefore I can not see why any gentleman can object to adopting this substitute, and let each party take its chance in the courts of our own country to see whether the Indians are entitled to the amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. As against anybody else but Indians, the statute of limitations would have operated long ago. I do not pretend to say that the statute of limitations ought to operate against the Indian tribes, because in some sense we are the trustees of those Indians, but certainly my friend will do the committee the justice to have at least the findings of the Court of Claims read, so that we may know what we are doing.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, the report made by the Senate committee contains all that; but it will take our entire hour to have it read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Read what the Senate committee did.

Mr. PEEL. The whole report of the Senate committee was read before, at the instance of my friend from Indiana. The committee made the Senate report a part of their report. The findings of the Court of Claims have been read to this House. My friend from Indiana says now he recognizes the fact that the statutes of limitation ought not to be applied against our wards. My friend forgets that before, at his instance, I moved to strike out that portion of the bill providing that the statute of limitation should not run. It was stricken out by this committee on my friend's own motion. Now, he admits that that ought not to be done, and he is fairer now than he was then.

I hope we will have a vote upon the substitute; and then we will discuss further the merits of the substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read.

Mr. PEEL. It has been read once.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but these things pass out of our minds so rapidly.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from Indiana that this claim has not slept. President Lincoln recognized the justice of the claim in 1864——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask for the reading of the Senate or the House report?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that the House report ought to be read.

Mr. PEEL. The House report adopts the Senate report, and to have it read now would be equivalent to defeating the whole measure.

Mr. REED. Ask unanimous consent for the continuance of the morning hour.

Mr. PEEL. The report has been read once.

Mr. REED. Perhaps if you were to ask for the continuance of the morning hour until this bill is finished, you might dispose of the measure.

Mr. PEEL. The committee that has the day would object. This day is set apart for the consideration of business of another committee.

Mr. REED. I do not think the gentleman from Indiana means to defeat the bill in that way.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the information of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that President Lincoln recognized the justice of the claimants in their demand in 1864. It was also recognized again in 1868 by President Johnson, by the appointment of a commissioner to treat for the extinguishment of the Indian title to these lands. But nothing was accomplished then. Since then bills for the purpose of making appropriations to permit the Secretary of the Interior to adjust this claim have been passed on in committee, in the Forty-third Congress, in the Forty-fifth Congress, and in the Forty-eighth Congress, with favorable reports, but the question never has been reached for action.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, what was the title to be extinguished?

Mr. RAY. The title of these Indians.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, we can not hear what the gentlemen say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to hear a word.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, by the treaty made with these Indians almost the entire State of Kansas was given to these Indian tribes. Afterwards the Government went on and sold these lands at about $1.43 per acre and covered the money into the Treasury, without making any provision for the protection of the rights of these Indians. Of course the title to that land has passed to the settlers, and it was for the purpose of appropriating money to extinguish the title of the Indians and their claims to this land that this action was taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was not that grant made to those Indians on condition of their settlement upon the lands and their abandonment of certain Indian lands in Wisconsin and Michigan?

Mr. RAY. The grant of these lands in Kansas was made by that treaty to those Indians upon condition that they should surrender certain lands in Wisconsin.

Mr. MILLER. Five hundred thousand acres.

Mr. RAY. Yes, 500,000 acres of land in Wisconsin. They did surrender and relinquish to the United States Government their claim to those lands. The United States Government did sell those lands in Wisconsin, did receive the money for them, and did cover it into the Treasury, without making compensation to these Indians to the amount of a single cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. But was not the conditions upon which the grant was made of the lands in Kansas that the Indians should settle upon them?

Mr. PEEL. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. The reports that I have here show that the lands granted to these New York Indians in Wisconsin contained 1,800,000 acres—nearly 2,000,000 acres of land—estimated by the Court of Claims as worth a dollar an acre at that time. The Indians were to remove within five years or at such time as the President should fix for their removal. The President never did fix and time for them to remove, therefore they did not in my judgment forfeit their rights; but that is a legal question for the courts to try, and that is one of the reasons why the matter should go to the courts.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the grant of these lands in Kansas was made upon condition that the Indians should settle upon them at some time.

Mr. PEEL. Whenever the President should fix the time; but the President never did fix the time.

Mr. RAY. And the Government was to remove the Indians when they did go.

Mr. PEEL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the statement made the other day in the Senate by Senator PLATT when the Senate bill was up for consideration, and I ask gentlemen to pay close attention to the reading because the Senator explains the whole matter. I trust that then we shall have a vote on the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that the substitute can not be considered in the Committee of the Whole, but only in the House.

Mr. PEEL. Very well, I move that the committee rise and report the House bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table. Then we can substitute the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5679, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that they have had under consideration the bill H. R. 5679, and have directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. PEEL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is the substitute to the Senate bill now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair understands the Senate bill to be on the Speaker's table, and the Committee of the Whole has no control of that.

Mr. PEEL. Well, I desire now to call up the Senate bill for consideration.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does this bill carry an appropriation?

Mr. PEEL. It does not.

The SPEAKER (having examined the bill). This bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, unless by unanimous consent that committee is discharged from its consideration.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PEEL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read Senator PLATT'S statement which I send to the desk, and from which, if gentlemen pay attention to the reading, they will get a full understanding of this whole question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PLATT. I had not thought that this measure was coming up at this time, and perhaps I may not be able to recall the facts at this moment; but the claim of the New York Indians to be compensated for certain lands which were given them in lieu of the lands which they had in New York was referred under the Bowman act to the Court of Claims in 1884. The Court of Claims found all the facts in relation to it and made a statement of the account, without pretending to determine whether legally the Indians were entitled to recover or not. But they found all the facts upon which they stated the account, and the statement of the account showed nearly $2,000,000. That finding of the Court of Claims came to Congress, and the Committee on Indian Affairs were asked to report a bill to pay that amount to the New York Indians with interest. We reported, however, that the Indians should have the right now to go to the Court of Claims upon the law, and indeed upon the fact. I will read the conclusion of the committee:

"It will be observed that this finding was made under the so-called 'Bowman act,' and deals only with facts. Upon the facts as found questions of law arise as to whether the United States is liable for a money payment to the claimants; and, if so, the amount thereof. These questions, in the opinion of the committee, should be determined by a court where they can all be carefully considered and decided. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the case.

"The claimants demand interest on the value of their lands in Kansas, which were set apart for them with a view of their removal thereto, from 1843, or certainly from the year 1860, when the United States proclaimed the Kansas lands open to settlement. But in the judgment of the committee this case is not one in which interest should be allowed against the Government."

So we inserted in the bill that whatever finding there might be by the court, it should not include interest.

In 1838 the Government made a treaty with these Indians, then in New York, by which, in consideration of their giving up some lands in New York, other lands were to be given up to them in Wisconsin called the Green Bay lands. Afterwards, there having arisen some controversy with the Menomonee Indians, the Wisconsin lands being desired for settlement, the Government made another treaty with these Indians by which they gave up the Wisconsin lands in consideration that they should have 1,824,000 acres in Kansas. The Indians never went to the Kansas lands except a small body of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. But they gave up the New York lands.

Mr. PLATT. But they gave up the New York lands. When, however, Kansas was opened up for settlement, settlers rushed in and occupied the lands. From that time to the present the New York Indians have been claiming payment.

Under some subsequent treaties, one band of these Indians, I think the Tuscaroras, was paid for their share in these lands at the rate of a dollar an acre. There were some subsequent treaties made by the Indians, which were not however ratified by Congress, because Congress, in 1871, said it would not make any more treaties with Indians. By these treaties some of the other bands were to be paid.

To my mind, the legal question which arises in this case is, whether by not removing to these lands the Indians did not forfeit them. They reply to that by saying that they were to remove within five years, but that the Government was to fix the time within which they should remove, which it failed to do, and consequently there can be no forfeiture. They urge that notwithstanding that claim might have been set up, the Government has since settled with one tribe and paid them at the rate of a dollar and a quarter an acre and made a treaty agreeing to pay others, but that treaty has not been ratified. The committee thought that if these Indians were entitled to be paid for these lands in law, they ought to be paid, but that the place to determine that was not here in Congress, but the Court of Claims, and I think the matter can be safely left to the Court of Claims to determine whether in law they are entitled to this payment or not.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator please tell me just what is submitted to the Court of Claims by this bill?

Mr. PLATT. I will read it:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and enter up judgment as if it had original jurisdiction of said case, the claim of the New York Indians, being those Indians who were parties to the treaty of Buffalo Creek, N. Y., on the 15th of January, 1838, against the United States, growing out of the alleged unexecuted stipulations of said treaty on the part of the United States. In the hearing and adjudication of said case said court may proceed upon the finding of facts already made, upon a reference of said claim to said court, filed on the 11th day of January, 1892, and transmitted to Congress by John Randolph, assistant clerk of said court, on the 16th day of January, 1892. Or said court may, if in its opinion justice so requires, take other testimony as to facts. But in any judgment it may render against the United States, in favor of said claimants, interest shall not be allowed."

The Indians say with great force that they surrendered their lands in New York, they being the original Six Nations, for other lands in Wisconsin and without any consideration, unless it was a small payment of $20,000 or some such sum: and then, at the request of the Government, they exchanged their lands in Wisconsin, so that the Government might have them settled upon and opened up, for lands in Kansas, and that they have never received in any way compensation for the surrender of their lands in New York.

I conceive that the only question against their recovery grows, first, out of the statute of limitations, and, second, out of the fact that they did not remove to the lands in Kansas. There is, however, force in their claim that the Government has got their lands in New York without compensation, and their is force in their claim that under the treaty of 1838 it was the duty of the Government to fix a time within which they should remove, but the Government never did it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL. The Senate committee, upon an examination of the matter, found that on a reference of the case to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act the facts had been found in favor of the Indians; but that committee concluded that inasmuch as there was a legal question to be settled, it could be determined more appropriately in the courts than in Congress, and therefore they recommended and the Senate passed the bill which I now ask the House to pass, to refer this case back to the court that it may be fully adjudicated as to the law and the facts, with the right of an appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, the Government being represented by the Attorney-General.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to inquire of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] whether these are the same Indians in relation to the disposal of whose lands in Kansas a bill passed both Houses of Congress a few years ago?

Mr. PEEL. I do not know whether I understand the gentleman.

Mr. BLANCHARD. A bill passed Congress a few years ago in reference to certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, and authorized settlers on the lands to take them at an appraised valuation, made some years before, under which authority lands worth $25 an acre were allowed to be taken by those settlers at an average of $2 or $2.50 an acre. Are these the same Indians?

Mr. PEEL. A part of them, I suppose, are. The gentleman has, I presume, noticed by the reading of the report that a very small portion of the New York Indians went out to Kansas to settle, but by reason of the troubles prevailing there at the time they did not take the lands, but abandoned them. White settlers bought those lands under an appraisement, and the bill to which the gentleman refers was for the purpose of sending the matter to the court to determine whether or not those Indians had any claim to those individual settlements.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My object was to ascertain from the gentleman from Arkansas whether this bill is in the interest of the same New York Indians to whom a reservation of land in Kansas was made long years ago.

Mr. PEEL. I will say to my friend that the object of this bill is to carry this matter to the Court of Claims to determine whether these New York Indians, as a tribe, are entitled to pay for the lands which were set apart for them in Kansas, and which they relinquished—whether they forfeited their right to compensation for those lands, inasmuch as the Government took them and sold them to settlers?

Mr. BLANCHARD. These are the same Indians, then?

Mr. PEEL. A part of them.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I wish to say that I think a great outrage was perpetrated upon those Indians by Congress in the passage of the bill referred to, permitting their lands to be taken at an appraisement which was far below their actual value, and a measure which I strenuously opposed at the time.

Mr. PEEL. These Indians did not, in fact, get anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of fact the Indians who went to Kansas under the treaty which has been referred to, received finally the proceeds of the lands which were sold to settlers and paid for at the rate of $2.50 an acre.

Mr. PEEL. My friend from Indiana is mistaken about that. They never got anything. They did not get the lands; and when those lands were afterwards sold at an appraisement, they did not receive the proceeds, because they could not be found. As appears by the discussion in the Senate there was great difficulty in identifying the individual Indians, because so many of them had passed away.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall now have a vote on the Senate bill.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT AT FORT GREEN, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask that the Committee on the Library, which the other day was passed over without prejudice, be now called.

The SPEAKER. That committee will now be called. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] is recognized.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 297) for the erection and completion of a monument to the memory of the victims of prison ships at Fort Green, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The bill was read.

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were, on a division (demanded by Mr. KILGORE)—ayes 3, noes 114.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the House take a recess until 5 o'clock this evening.

The question being taken on the motion for a recess, there were, on a division (demanded by Mr. KILGORE)—ayes 3, noes 102.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CUMMINGS and Mr. KILGORE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 6, noes 162.

So the motion for a recess was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill the title of which has just been read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 55, noes 7.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. CUMMINGS and Mr. KILGORE as tellers.

The House proceeded to divide. Before the count was completed the morning hour expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order of business fixed for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 19th instant, and Saturday, the 21st instant, beginning immediately after the second morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, bills to be considered in the order indicated by said committee.

Nothing in this order to interfere with the right of the House to consider revenue and general appropriation bills.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN LIGHT-HOUSES, ETC.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9955) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation, reported with amendments from the Committee of the Whole, and demand the previous question on the bill, with its amendment, to engrossment and third reading.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been read once, was considered in Committee of the Whole, and reported favorably to the House. As I understand, it is not necessary to read the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. WISE. The motion was for the previous question on the bill and its amendment, to its engrossment and third reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the bill has not been read in the House.

The SPEAKER. When the bill is ordered to be read the third time it can be read at length, if the gentleman so desires.

The question is on the demand of the gentleman from Wisconsin for the previous question, on the engrossment and third reading of the bill and amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 119, noes 1.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Mr. BRICKNER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 210, nays 20, not voting 99; as follows:

Mr. BACON with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

On this vote:

Mr. PAYNTER with Mr. RIFE.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. CULBERSON, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. BRICKNER. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and on a division there were—ayes 172, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRICKNER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REVENUE CUTTERS, PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1104) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BLANCHARD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $325,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing two first-class revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast, one of which shall have at least 450 tons displacement and the other not less than 600 tons displacement, and each of which shall be so constructed and equipped as to secure a speed of 15 knots per hour.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommends certain amendments to this bill, and I ask that the report be now read.

The report (by Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1104) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast, having considered the same, respectfully report:

The accompanying letter from Hon. O. L. Spaulding, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, shows the necessity for the construction of additional revenue cutters for the Pacific coast:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 30, 1891.

"SIR: I have the honor to respectfully acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 23d instant, inclosing Senate bill 1104, 'making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast,' and requesting this department to furnish your committee with such suggestions as it may deem proper touching upon the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

"In reply thereto I would say that the Department has considered the necessity for two new cutters on the Pacific coast so urgent that it has included in the regular estimates the sums of $175,000 and $150,000 for the construction of two vessels, the former sum for a vessel for service at San Francisco, and, during the summer months, in Bering Sea for the protection of the seal islands and the Government interests in Alaska, and the latter for a vessel for service in Puget Sound and the waters adjacent in the State of Washington.

"The revenue cutters now on the Pacific coast were built many years ago, and have been kept steadily at work in the performance of the multifarious duties required of them. They are of the age when vessels require frequent repairs, and they should gradually be replaced by new vessels of more modern type of hull and machinery which will give greater power and speed.

"The difference between the laws of this country and those of the Dominion of Canada regulating the importation of Chinese and opium offers special inducements to smugglers to make the Canadian ports on Puget Sound the base of their operations, and the many hundreds of miles of shore line contiguous to this foreign territory requires the constant patrol and watching by a revenue cutter to prevent, as far as possible, the illegal landing of these people and their goods.

"During the season just passed all of the cutters available were withdrawn temporarily from their stations on the coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington, and sent to Bering Sea for patrol duty around the seal islands and the protection of the Government interests in those waters, and as similar demands will probably be made for cutters in those waters for years to come the number of revenue vessels on the Pacific coast should be increased by two or three as soon as they can be constructed.

"I earnestly recommend to your committee the passage of Senate bill 1104, and name the amounts mentioned herein respectively as necessary to properly build and equip the new vessels.

The bill (Senate 1104) is herewith returned.

"O. L. SPAULDING,
"Acting Secretary.

"Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
"Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate."

The committee, on a careful investigation of the subject, came to the conclusion that there is an urgent necessity for an additional revenue cutter for the service on Puget Sound. The Wolcott, which is now stationed there, is an old wooden vessel incapable of performing the service required. To enforce the law which prohibits Chinese immigration to our shores and the prevention of the smuggling of opium requires a vessel of more speed and better equipment than those of the Wolcott.

The committee, however, is of the opinion that there is no absolute necessity for more than one additional revenue cutter for the Pacific coast. The Bear, which has heretofore made annual cruises to western Alaska and the Arctic Ocean, is sufficient for the present for the service in those waters, while the Wolcott could be repaired and fitted up for the service at San Diego, Cal.

The committee therefore recommend the following amendments to the bill:

Strike the word "two" out of the title and insert the word "one."

In the third line strike out the words "three hundred and twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

In the seventh line strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

In the eighth line strike out the words "one of."

Strike out all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, and in lieu thereof insert the words "a displacement of not less than six hundred tons, and shall be so constructed and equipped as to secure a speed of not less than fifteen knots per hour."

Strike out the letter "s" in the word "cutters" both in the title and in the seventh line of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The Senate bill made an appropriation to build two revenue cutters for the Pacific coast, and appropriated $375,000. Upon a careful investigation of the case the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce concluded that one revenue cutter, to be constructed at a cost of $175,000, would be sufficient to meet the necessities of the case at present. The steamer Wolcott, which is doing service in Puget Sound, is an old vessel, utterly incapable of running down the vessels that are evading our revenue laws and that are importing Chinese to American soil. There is also a large illegal importation of opium through that channel, and the Treasury officials state to the committee that it is utterly impossible for the Wolcott to perform the required service.

Then the Treasury officials insist that we ought to have a new revenue cutter for the northern ocean, to do service on the western coast of Alaska. However, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce concluded that the Bear, a vessel now doing duty in those waters, would be sufficient for the time being to perform that service, that the Wolcott could be repaired and stationed in the harbor of San Diego for service there. But they concluded that a revenue cutter for Puget Sound is an absolute necessity. This bill as amended appropriates $175,000 to build a revenue cutter for that service, in lieu of $375,000 to build two revenue cutters, one for Puget Sound and one for the Arctic seas, as provided for in the Senate bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. How many revenue cutters are provided for in this bill?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Only one.

Mr. KILGORE. At what price?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. $175,000.

Mr. KILGORE. And as I understand, the revenue cutters are only used there for the purpose of excursions, when distinguished gentlemen visit the coast.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee derives its information from the Secretary of the Treasury and from the Treasury officials, and if there is any credence to be placed in official testimony, this revenue cutter for Puget Sound is, I say, an absolute necessity.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Who prepared the estimate on which the bill is based?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KILGORE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask him if this revenue cutter is intended to take the place of an old and dilapidated vessel?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Exactly so.

Mr. KILGORE. Could we not worry through with the one that we have for a while longer.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will state to my friend from Texas that the Wolcott, the vessel stationed at Puget Sound, is now represented to be almost unseaworthy, and utterly incapable of performing the service required of a revenue cutter at that point, and the necessity for an efficient revenue cutter there grows out of the fact that that is the point at which Chinese are smuggled into our territory. It is the point at which opium is being smuggled into our country, and there is other smuggling at that point. It is absolutely necessary in order to protect the revenues of the Government that there should be an effective, fleet, and efficient revenue cutter in those waters. The Wolcott has not a speed of 6 miles an hour, as I am informed. It is utterly incapable of performing the service required of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill and amendments be recommended favorably to the House, and I call the previous question upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the House is in Committee of the Whole, and the previous question can not now be called.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "fifteen," in line 14, and inserting the word "eighteen."

Mr. STOCKDALE. I will also ask the Clerk to read another amendment, after which I will state what I have to say.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding in line 14 the following:
"And $20,000 for every additional knot of speed per hour."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] that there are some committee amendments pending, which will first have to be disposed of.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I will wait to see what they are.

The CHAIRMAN. And thereafter the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, the length of the general debate has not been settled. We ought to have some understanding as to how long the general debate is to be prolonged. I want to make a speech on the bill myself.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KILGORE. I do not want more than an hour and a half or two hours.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I am willing to allow the gentleman from Texas such time as he desires.

Mr. STOCKDALE. My amendment is pending, is it not, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection general debate upon the pending proposition will be considered as closed unless some gentleman desires to speak.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend the bill to the House for favorable action.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first have to be taken on the committee amendments, and the Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the third line strike out the words "three hundred and twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that we have the right to have general discussion on this measure.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KILGORE. I do not want any myself, but some of my friends do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the Chair had announced that general debate upon the pending bill would be considered as closed unless some gentleman should take the floor; and no one expressed a desire to take the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that general debate can not be closed in Committee of the Whole or by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent it can be considered as closed.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think the Committee of the Whole can close general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas if he desires to address the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not desire to make a speech myself, but some of my friends do.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I insist that the committee proceed to act on the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the third line strike out the words "three hundred and twenty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 3.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the seventh line strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."
In the eighth line strike out the words "one of."
Strike out all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, and in lieu thereof insert the words "a displacement of not less than 600 tons, and shall be so constructed and equipped as to secure a speed of not less than 15 knots per hour."
Strike out the letter "s" in the word "cutters" both in the title and in the seventh line of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. There are half a dozen amendments, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident that there is to be a persistent determination to filibuster against and prevent the passage of this bill. It is a bill, in my judgment, that is absolutely necessary for the public service. However, there is other very important legislation from this committee before the House, and I now ask leave to withdraw the bill, and move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Can I be recognized?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLANCHARD, chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1104) making appropriation to provide for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to do with this bill?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I move that the bill be laid aside.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw it.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I withdraw it.

TESTIMONY IN CRIMINAL CASES UNDER INTERSTATE COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of alleged violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall be excused from testifying in any criminal case or proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891, on the ground or for the reason that his testimony might tend to criminate himself or to subject him to penalty or forfeiture. But such person shall not be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify in any such case or proceeding: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk be substituted for the Senate bill. Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute that which I send up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to amend the bill?

Mr. WISE. I do.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after enacting clause, and insert the following:

"That no person shall be excused from attending and testifying, or from producing books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents before the Interstate Commerce Commission, or in obedience to the subpœna of the Commission, whether signed or issued by one or more commissioners, or in any cause or proceeding, criminal or otherwise, based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of said act of Congress, entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, or of any amendment thereof, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no person shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing, concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said Commission, or in obedience to its subpœna, or in any such case or proceeding: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. Any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend and testify, or to any lawful inquiry, or to produce books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents, if in his power to do so, in obedience to the subpœna or lawful requirement of the Commission shall be guilty of an offense, and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by fine not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 110, noes 3.

The Senate bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10163) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, be amended by adding thereto the following:

"The word 'line,' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean a physical line, whether such line be one railroad or two or more connecting railroads, or part railroad and part water, when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement, expressed or implied, for a continuous shipment.

"Each railroad and each water way, and every part of each railroad and each water way composing any such line, shall be deemed a part of such line, and transportation over the whole or any part or parts of such line shall be deemed to be transportation over the same line, whether the transportation service be rendered by a single carrier or by two or more carriers.

"The words 'any common carriers,' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean one or more than one common carrier as the case may be and the context require."

SEC. 2. That section 5 of said act be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Except under the conditions herein prescribed, it shall be unlawful for different and competing common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement for the division or apportionment among themselves, or with others, of the whole or any portion of their traffic or of their gross or net earnings; and each day of the continuance of any such contract, agreement, or arrangement, except under the conditions hereinafter prescribed, shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That under the following conditions it shall be lawful for such common carriers to enter into such contracts, agreements, or arrangements enforceable between the parties thereto; that is to say:

"First. All such contracts, agreements, or arrangements shall be in writing and shall be filed with the commission appointed under the provisions of this act.

"Second. Such contracts, agreements, or arrangements shall become lawful only upon and after approval by said commission, and shall remain lawful and enforceable between the parties thereto only during such time and so long as the said commission shall fail to withdraw their approval thereof and to notify the parties thereto of a day upon which the same shall cease to be lawful. And when the commission shall withdraw their approval of any such contract, agreement, or arrangement and shall so notify the parties thereto the same shall become and be unlawful and cease to be enforceable between the parties thereto on and after the day specified in such notice.

"And Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal so much of this section as makes such contracts, agreements, or arrangements lawful under the above conditions."

SEC. 3. That section 10 of said act as amended March 2, 1889, be further amended by adding the following clauses thereto:

"Whenever any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act is a corporation, such corporation may be prosecuted as for a misdemeanor under any of the foregoing provisions of this section, and upon conviction shall be subject for each offense to a fine not exceeding $5,000.

"Whenever an indictment shall be found under the provisions of this act against a corporation, the service of any writ or other process thereupon, or for the prosecution thereof, shall be sufficient if a copy of such writ or process be delivered to and left with any officer or agent of such corporation found in the judicial district wherein such indictment may be found."

SEC. 4. That section 13 of said act be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Testimony given orally before the commission, or any one or more members thereof, in the course of any investigation or inquiry made or instituted under the provisions of this section, shall be taken down by stenography or otherwise as it is given, and before the decision of the commission is announced shall be written out and filed with the papers relating to the complaint, investigation, or inquiry."

SEC. 5. That section 16 of said act as amended March 2, 1889, be further amended by adding the following:

"A copy of all the pleadings, papers, exhibits, and testimony (whether documentary, or in the shape of depositions, or taken down as orally given) filed with or adduced before the commission in the course of any investigation of a complaint, or in the course of any inquiry instituted by the commission on its own motion, shall, whenever application is made to a court, as above provided, alleging violation or disobedience of the order or requirement of the commission, be certified by the secretary of the commission to such court.

"In hearing and determining, pursuant to the provisions of this section, any matter not involving the right to a trial by jury, neither the court nor any person appointed by the court to prosecute inquiries into such matter shall hear or consider any matter of fact offered in evidence before such court or person by any party who, with knowledge of such fact, failed to offer it before the commission, unless the court be satisfied that the materiality of such fact and its bearing on the decision of the commission could not reasonably have been understood or foreseen prior to such decision."

An amendment appearing in the printed bill as recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Section 3, page 4, after line 14, insert: "that so much of section 10 of said act as provides for punishment by imprisonment is hereby repealed."

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, who offers that amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). It is printed in the bill as an amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I think the House ought to understand the import of that amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I know of no such amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is printed in italics, indicating that it is an amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. But that amendment has never been acted upon by the committee.

Mr. WISE. Oh, yes, it has.

Mr. LIND. I did not know anything about it until I saw it here in the bill, and in my judgment it is a bad amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the present we withdraw the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Why withdraw it? Why not let the House act upon it?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have charge of this bill, and I have no knowledge of how that amendment came to be printed in the bill, and I now move to strike it out.

Mr. HOPKINS and Mr. WISE addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] has the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I want to ask whether any time is to be allowed for general debate upon this bill?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Certainly. The gentleman will have an opportunity for debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has just been read, and this amendment has been read as coming from the committee. No action has been taken to close debate.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement with reference to that amendment. I said a moment ago that it had been acted upon by the committee. Since my attention has been more particularly directed to it I wish to recall that statement. That amendment never was adopted by the committee; it was proposed, but the committee took no action with reference to it.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we ought not to be putting these amendments on the bill until we understand——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not an amendment made to the bill. As the Chair understands, it is something that is printed in the bill without the authority of the committee, and they simply desire now to put the bill in proper shape for the House to act upon it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I understand that there is a difference of opinion upon that point, and that is the reason I object to this action.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement. A few days since, when this bill was under consideration before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, this amendment was proposed, and the committee instructed the Clerk to correspond with the Interstate Commerce Commission and ask its opinion in respect to such an amendment. I am informed by the Clerk that the letter of inquiry was written, and this morning I was handed the reply of the Commission to that inquiry, but I repeat that the amendment was never acted upon by the committee at all, and of course it ought not to have appeared in the printed copy of the bill. I move, therefore, that that amendment be now stricken from the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] has the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I wish to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What was the reply of the Interstate Commerce Commission with regard to that amendment? Did they favor it?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I repeat that this amendment is not in the bill by any action of the committee. If the gentleman will have patience he can offer this amendment himself after awhile, and can speak to it, and I will then give him an opportunity to hear the reply of the Commission.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not know that I am in favor of this amendment, but I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to state what was the reply of the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to this amendment?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Well, the report has been received by the committee, and it is favorable to the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman send the reply of the Commission to the Clerk and have it read for the information of the House.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will in a few moments. I move now to strike that amendment from the bill. It is not properly there.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I desire to say a word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. For a moment.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. The statement of the gentleman from Tennessee in regard to this amendment is correct. The idea of the committee, as he has said, was that we should consult the Interstate Commerce Commission. I for one believe that this House can judge of the propriety of passing an act or an amendment to an act just as well as the Interstate Commerce Commission can. But it was the understanding that we were to have an answer from the Commission, which answer has now come, and that the committee, at its meeting tomorrow, would take up such an amendment and perhaps pass upon it favorably and offer it to the House on Saturday, when our committee will again have the right to call up bills. I believe that the gentleman from Tennessee has now the right to withdraw this amendment, and I do not propose to renew it now as an individual member of the House, simply because I suppose the gentleman, under certain circumstances, will himself offer it on Saturday, when bills from our committee will be again in order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Inasmuch as this amendment is now in the bill and the bill is now before the House for consideration, I suggest that it would be proper and wise to send to the Clerk to be read from the desk the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the amendment. The amendment being already in the bill, if the Commission favors it, we can settle the question by declining to strike out the amendment as proposed, and thus leave it a part of the bill.

In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] I will say that I think this Commission is much more competent to give us advice as to the character of legislation needed on this subject than is any individual member of the House. I think we should legislate in harmony with the views of that Commission. We should strengthen its hands, whenever the Commission may find it necessary, in order to carry out the intent of the law as originally passed.

Mr. LIND addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND]?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Just a word. I want to state——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in order. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I yield for a moment to my friend from Ohio [Mr. STORER].

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry: Is debate in order upon a clause which the committee states is not properly a part of the bill, but was inserted by mistake of the printer?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment could not be considered if the fact as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] were universally conceded. But there is controversy, it seems, among members of the committee as to the facts in the case.

Mr. LIND. The Chair will allow me to state that there is no controversy as to the facts so far as I know. This House has no right to undertake to act upon a proposition as an amendment when it has not received the sanction of the committee; and I think that after the statement which has been made by the gentleman in charge of this bill any debate upon this proposition is out of order. That gentleman, I submit, has an absolute right to withdraw that which is not properly in the bill and which has not received the sanction of the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order. Are we not proceeding under the rule for general debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We have not reached that stage at all. The question was raised whether or not certain words belong in the bill; and that is a question preliminary to any debate.

Mr. BLAND. Has the bill been read for amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in the House, not in the Committee of the Whole; and the rule as to general debate in the Committee of the Whole does not apply in the House.

Mr. BLAND. I thought we were in Committee of the Whole; I think we ought to be.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Members of the committee are unanimously agreed that they never formally acted upon this amendment; and without making any statement as to the views of individual members with respect to the amendment, I think it may be stated absolutely that the amendment has been printed in the bill improperly and by mistake. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that this amendment be stricken out. If then any gentleman desires to offer such an amendment he can do so and obtain a vote of the House upon it.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I desire only a moment.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I ask that the bill be considered without this amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I wish to say here that I favor the repeal of the imprisonment clause of the existing law——

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I understand that.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I hope this question will come up on Saturday next. But I have no idea of offering the amendment until our committee has acted upon the information we have received from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee states that these words are in the bill by inadvertence, and asks unanimous consent to strike them out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill I desire to submit to the House a few words of explanation, and in doing so I will follow the report of the committee as nearly as practicable.

Under the recent decision of one of the Federal courts it has been held that the word "line," as used in the 4th section of the interstate-commerce act, has a very different meaning from that which has been attached to it heretofore by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is to say that where two or more railroads constitute connecting lines and ship freights over them, that those connecting lines can not charge more for a shorter distance than for a longer distance; and that that line is not a line composed of any lesser number of railroads, and therefore any lesser number being a part of the whole number might charge a larger sum for a shorter distance.

To explain this: Assume that there are connecting lines of railroad extending from the city of New York by way of Chicago, Omaha, and Salt Lake City to San Francisco. It is held that the railroads, comprising these connecting lines, can not charge more for a shorter distance than a longer distance; but that the railroads running west from Chicago to San Francisco might charge more, as links in the line extending from New York to San Francisco. And this amendment, proposed in the first section of the bill, is intended to so construe the word "line" as to require all the railroads composing links of any line of connecting railroads not to charge more for a shorter distance than for a longer distance; that is, they shall not charge more for a shorter distance than the entire connecting line charges for the whole distance.

Under the decision on section 4 of the interstate-commerce act a railroad company could charge more over its own line than over its own and connecting lines for a much longer distance; and this amendment provides that any one railroad company forming a part of a connecting line shall not charge more over its line than is charged over the two or more companies comprising the entire line. That is the meaning of this section, and it meets the entire approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In respect to the second section in the bill, the word "pool," used in the fifth section of the interstate-commerce act, is a word of indefinite meaning. It is an indefinite word, and this section of the bill substitutes the words "contract, agreement, or other arrangement," in lieu of the words "pool" or "pooling."

Now, the only section of the bill, Mr. Speaker, which will probably be controverted in the House is the second section. The fifth section of the interstate-commerce law prevents what is called "pooling;" or, in other words, any contract, agreement, or arrangement by which railroad companies may apportion their traffic amongst themselves, or apportion their net or gross earnings. It has been argued before the Interstate Commerce Committee with great force that to prevent pooling altogether will work a very great injustice to the small shippers, because when you come to rebates and cuttings it is the small shipper that suffers; and it has been urged as I say with a great deal of force that pooling arrangements would promote public interests.

I have been told—I do not know how true it may be—that Judge Reagan, who is the author of the fifth section of the interstate-commerce law, has modified his views on that subject.

Now, there was a bill introduced, known as House bill 9954, and this fifth section of the pending bill is a substitute for that bill. That bill, to which I have referred, provided for such an agreement, or such pooling arrangement, and that it should be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that Commission had power to cancel it. The question was put to gentlemen if an appeal would lie from the order canceling that agreement to the circuit court of the United States, and from the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the conclusion was reached that the court would have a right to review the order.

As to this section of the bill—and it is one that I am by no means partial to—I merely desire to submit it for the candid judgment of the House. This section of the bill is a substitute for the House bill referred to, and provides that where railroad companies enter into an agreement, contract, or arrangement of this sort, it shall be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission and it shall examine into the matter, and if it thinks it will be for the public interest it may approve it, and the contract, arrangement, or agreement can only exist so long as the approval of the Commission exists, that is to say, when the Commission notifies them on a certain day the arrangement shall cease in the interest of the public, it shall absolutely ipso facto cease on that day, and it cuts off all review by the courts.

The object of this section is this: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the part of the public, to make an arrangement with the railroads and enter into, you might say, an agreement with the railroads, or grant them a license, so to speak, to enter into pooling arrangements, and determine whether or not they are for the public benefit; such arrangements at all times to be under the direction, control, and supervision of the Commission, and empowering the Commission at any time to put an end to them.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LIND. The amendment provides that pooling arrangements may be entered into, not only between common carriers themselves, but between common carriers and others. I would like to have an explanation of the gentleman as to what is meant by others, or "other persons" who may become beneficiaries in such pooling arrangement.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will read the section:

> Except under the conditions hereinafter prescribed, it shall be unlawful for different and competing common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement for the division or apportionment among themselves, or with others, of the whole or any portion of their traffic or of their gross or net earnings. And each day of the continuance of any such contract, agreement, or arrangement, except under the conditions hereinafter prescribed, shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That under the following conditions it shall be lawful for such common carriers to enter into such contracts, agreements, or arrangements enforceable between the parties thereto.

I do not understand that this applies to persons. It only applies to common carriers.

Mr. LIND. It says "others." What does the gentleman understand the object of the use of the word "others"?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will read the section, I submit that he will see that it only applies to common carriers. Now, I desire to state to the House——

Mr. LIND. Does not this include individual vessel owners, for instance, on the lakes or those engaged in the coastwise trade?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I think probably it does.

Mr. LIND. Well, I wanted the committee to understand that this pooling arrangement goes to the extent not only of including transportation by water, but transportation partially by rail and partially by water.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. My friend can submit his remarks in his own time. Now, I desire to say to the House that, so far as this section of the bill is concerned, I am not wedded to it, but I believe, and my opinion is—and that is the judgment of the committee—that these arrangements might be entered into sometimes for the public benefit; and, so far as I am individually concerned, I would be willing to trust the Interstate Commerce Commission to act for the public in these matters

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question about this section?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. When the gentleman has finished his remarks, I propose to move to strike out sections 2, 5, and subsections 1 and 2. Now I want to ask this question: These sections as now worded are not requested by the shippers; they are not requested by the railroads as I am informed, and they do not originate with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now why get up a discussion on four or five sections of the bill that nobody wants?

Mr. STORER. Why do you say that?

Mr. RAYNER. I will tell you why I say it; because the railroad companies came before the Committee on Commerce and argued this question. While they were arguing it, asking for the right to pool, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] placed a condition upon the provision appearing in the second section, and when that was done the railroads, as I am informed, withdrew this provision relative to pooling, and they do not want it now with this condition annexed to it. I am authorized to state that on behalf of certain gentlemen who appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The committee have not recommended it either.

Mr. COOMBS. The Senate has rejected it.

Mr. RAYNER. And the Senate has rejected it.

Mr. COOMBS. And what is the use of our spending time on it?

Mr. RAYNER. It got in here because the gentleman was willing to put it in, with the condition that he has annexed to it, which is a very good condition; but the railroad companies do not want it with that condition, I am told.

Mr. LIND. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maryland that he read the report of the committee on this subject.

Mr. RAYNER. I have read it.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, I merely wanted to submit this question to the House. I desire to say that this fifth section of the bill has met with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not know what the railroads desire. I am not speaking for them. I am speaking for this bill, and I believe that if the Commission was clothed with the power to approve such an arrangement, that arrangement to continue only so long as the Interstate Commerce Commission believe that it would subserve the public interest, if that was done I believe it would aid in the proper solution of a much mooted question.

Now, passing on to the third section, the law as it now stands provides for the indictment and punishment of a railroad official who violates the interstate-commerce law; but there is no provision in the law for the punishment of the corporation. Now, every lawyer knows that a corporation is subject to indictment and fine, as individuals are. The fifth section of this bill provides that for violations of the interstate-commerce law the corporations violating those provisions shall be subject to indictment and to the payment of a fine not exceeding $5,000.

Now, in that connection it has been insisted by a number of gentlemen, some of whom have been connected with the Interstate Commerce Commission, that that part of the interstate-commerce act which provides for the imprisonment of railroad officials for violation of the law should be abolished.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. With pleasure.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman contemplate that this section 3, which proposes to amend section 10 of the present law, is to be substituted for the entire tenth section?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Not at all.

Now, a great many gentlemen who are interested in this interstate-commerce law insist that it is altogether wrong to subject a railroad official to imprisonment, to punish him as a felon, or to punish him as if he had committed an infamous crime in the violation of this law. In other words, that they ought to be put upon the same plane exactly as a corporation is—subject to indictment, and to be mulcted in a fine; and the amendment which improperly got upon the bill was for the purpose of abolishing this feature of punishment with respect to officials. The amendment was referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and, Mr. Speaker, I send the letter which they addressed to the committee to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, January 18, 1893.

GENTLEMEN: Your communication, under date of January 17, to the Interstate Commerce Commission submits the following question: "Whether in your judgment their bill H. R. 10163 * * * ought to be amended by the introduction of a section repealing the imprisonment feature of section 10 of 'An act to amend an act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887,' and requests immediate reply. Nothing has occurred in our experience in the administration of the act to regulate commerce to give us peculiar knowle lge upon the subject in question, or to have judgment other than that of lawyers generally having experience in criminal prosecutions.

District attorneys have encountered great obstacles to the enforcement of the criminal features of the act, but how far these obstacles are attributable to the severity of the penalties must rest in conjecture. If the proposed amendment would remove difficulties to the enforcement of the penal provisions, and thereby render the act more effective, it should be adopted. We are not averse to the experiment, should Congress deem it wise to try it. We recognize that which is familiar to all lawyers, viz, that severity of penalties often defeats effective operation of a statute, and such may have been the fact in reference to the act in question; but our experience in the courts in dealing with this enactment has not been such as to inspire the utmost confidence in our own judgment as to what may be the success of any amendment which may be adopted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. R. MORRISON, Chairman.

The Hon. COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, in respect to the fourth section of the bill, that simply provides that all oral testimony delivered before the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be taken down by a stenographer and written out and filed before the announcement of the decision.

Section 5 of the bill, and the last section, simply provides that where the proceedings of the Interstate Commerce Commission are referred to the courts, that it shall be tried by the courts upon the pleadings and evidence and record made up before the Interstate Commerce Commission, except in cases where it shall appear that the party could not have reasonably anticipated the materiality of the testimony at the hearing before the Commission.

Now, this briefly explains the bill, and I yield to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. LIND].

Mr. TURNER. Does the Interstate Commerce Commission favor this bill?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Throughout.

Mr. LIND. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me now?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (to Mr. LIND). You take the floor in your own right.

Mr. LIND. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House except to have the views of the minority read in my own time.

Mr. COOMBS. That is in relation to section 2?

Mr. LIND. Yes, in relation to section 2 of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] has seventeen minutes of his time remaining. Does the gentleman yield seventeen minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes.

Mr. LIND. I do not desire any more time than is sufficient to read the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair simply desires to ascertain the time yielded.

Mr. LIND. Yield me five minutes and I will yield back what I have left. I ask to have the views of the minority read.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Without going into a detailed statement of the objections to section 2 of this bill, on principle, the minority feel in duty bound to protest against its passage and to call attention to some of the most flagrant objections to it.

It is the first effort that has ever received the sanction of a committee of this House to make legal and enforceable, at law, contracts for the division of traffic. But it does not stop at this. It proposes to legalize "railroad wrecking" and stock speculation by authorizing not only agreements for the division and apportionment of net and gross earnings among the carriers themselves, but it authorizes the carriers to also divide and apportion these among "others" not carriers. Under these provisions stockholders will be as much at the mercy of railroad managers as will the public. The Standard Oil Company, the "Dressed Beef Combine," and other monopolies can obtain rebates by contract enforceable in the courts instead of by stealth and concealment as heretofore.

Railroad transportation is a natural monopoly. The element of competition is wanting except between terminal points and between trunk lines carrying the products of the west to the seaboard.

This natural competition the bill proposes to stifle. Not only that, it takes away the only safeguard that we have had heretofore against railroad extortion. The competition of water routes has always been a thorn in the side of traffic associations and pools. It has frustrated many a well-laid scheme to oppress the public. This embarrassment the bill also removes. It propitiates carriers by water, and carriers partly by water and partly by rail, by authorizing contracts between them and all-rail carriers for a division of traffic and gross and net earnings. The annual million-dollar bonus to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to refrain from competition may hereafter be paid in pursuance of law.

It is unnecessary to call further attention to the enormity of the provisions of this bill. The suggestion that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the approval and control of the proposed pooling arrangements is no answer to these objections. The Commission is undoubtedly an able body and conscientious in the discharge of its duties. It is to be hoped that it will always continue such. But we believe that it is unfair to them to subject them to the importuning and pressure that that this bill will should it become a law. And we are on principle unwilling to leave it to any body of men not accountable either to a constituency or to law to determine by their arbitrary action whether the industry of this nation shall be taxed by hundreds of millions a year. We wish the House and the public to understand that under this bill, if it should become a law, the trunk lines between the Mississippi and the seaboard might form a pool and agreement for the entire traffic at double the present rates, and so long as the Interstate Commerce Commission consented to it they could call upon the courts to enforce these contracts and rates.

JOHN LIND.
S. R. MALLORY.

Mr. LIND. One word more. I want to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that with the exception of this section 2 of the bill, which I hope to have an opportunity to move to strike out, I believe the bill is not only a good bill, but that its passage is urgently required by the Interstate Commerce Commission to enable it to discharge the duties committed to it. I move that section 2 of the bill be stricken out.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the committee was somewhat divided upon this section of the bill, and as it may provoke controversy in the House; and furthermore, in view of the very great importance, in my judgment, of the remaining sections of the bill, I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, and will consent to that section being stricken out.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, striking out section 2 of this bill destroys the whole legislation that has been proposed.

Mr. COOMBS. No.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Almost. To strike out section 2 almost destroys the bill. It strikes out a section which I favor and which I hope will remain in and not be stricken out.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have consulted for days, off and on, with the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have had answers to communications to them, and yet we have not learned exactly what they want, or how they would like the law to be amended; so, I think, with all due respect to the men who compose that Commission, five unprejudiced men and as good men as can be selected to hold such important positions, we had better act for ourselves. I, for one, am in favor of giving the railroads privileges in arranging pooling which they do not have to-day.

Mr. LIND. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. Can he cite an instance where a railroad company has voluntarily complied with an order of the Commission in regard to fixing rates?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I can not cite an instance; but I do not know where they have not complied; and I know that they have tried to comply.

Mr. LIND. Let me call the attention of my colleague to the fact that when the Commissioners made an order in regard to coal rates on the Reading Railroad, in his own district, the company refused absolutely to comply with it; did they not?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. That depends upon the report which has been made by the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as to the facts they ascertained.

Mr. LIND. Not at all.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I recollect that an order was made by this House to investigate that matter.

Mr. LIND. I am not referring to the investigation. I am simply asking whether a certain thing was not a fact.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Well, I can not answer that. I do not know whether it was a fact or not. If the gentleman states it as a fact, of course I accept his statement.

Mr. LIND. I wish to ask my colleague another question. Inasmuch as the railroad companies refuse absolutely to comply with the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the protection of the public, do you think it is fair for the Congress of the United States to constitute the Commission an arbiter between the railroads?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Well, Mr. Speaker, one railroad company may not comply, but the great trunk lines of the country do comply and have complied, and they want the law amended so that they can comply more and more with the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LIND. They want to have it their own way.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. They want it their own way, but they can not get it their own way unless we give them legislation. [Laughter.] Now, sir, I struggled against the interstate-commerce law all through the fight. I did all I could to defeat its enactment. I never believed that it would do much good, but now I find that the railroad companies are accepting it graciously in most instances, especially the great trunk lines, and, in accordance with what we have heard from the Interstate Commerce Commission, I desire that we shall not only regulate the railway companies if we can, but that we shall give the Commission some privileges which they not now have. In the letter which they have addressed to our committee they do not give us any decided information on this subject, and therefore I say we had better act ourselves. What we believe to be right we had better pass in this House, and then when questions come before the Commission arising out of the laws which we have passed, let them decide whether the railroads comply with the law, and with the rules and regulations made under it, or not.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my amendment to strike out section 2.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a substitute for that section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has demanded the previous question upon his amendment.

Mr. BOATNER. Well, I was on the floor seeking recognition at the time the gentleman made that motion.

Mr. LIND. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana that he can offer his proposed substitute later as an amendment. We have not concluded the bill. I insist upon the demand for the previous question on my amendment.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair puts the question, I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota to hear my substitute read, and to consider whether he will not consent that I shall have a vote upon it. I am with him so far as the striking out of this section is concerned.

Mr. LIND. I shall not object to its being read if it can be done by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was read, as follows:

All railway common carriers are hereby required to accept from connecting lines loaded cars or trains to be hauled over their lines to point of delivery at the same rate that they charge for similar service over their own lines from the point where said cars or trains are received. Provided, the rate charged shall not not be greater for a shorter than a longer haul over the lines of said connecting carrier.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I will not yield for that amendment at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has demanded the previous question upon his amendment.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BOATNER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] insist upon the previous question after hearing my amendment read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does, and states that he declines to accept the amendment.

The previous question was ordered upon the amendment of Mr. LIND.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the proposition which has just been read as an additional section.

The amendment of Mr. BOATNER was again read, as above.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] has the floor.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that can be offered as an additional section, but not as a substitute for the section that has been struck out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not offered as a substitute for that section. It is offered as an amendment.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this amendment of the interstate commerce law has been recommended by the Commission. It is evident that it is intended to cure a defect in the law and compel railroads to accept loaded cars and trains from connecting lines and haul them at the same rates which they charge for similar service on their own lines. I do not see any possible objection to the amendment and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. LIND. I simply desire to say to the gentleman that it is my impression that the existing law covers the object aimed at by this amendment; but even if it does not, the question has been before the committee in another form. I think that what the gentleman refers to is the request of the Commission that power be given them to compel common carriers to constitute or make through lines.

That they have advocated, time and again, to compel com carriers to join in a scheme to carry traffic consecutivel on through lines. But under the law as it now exists, to refuse to take a properly loaded car and carry it over the line of a railroad company would clearly constitute unlawful discrimination. The present law provides amply against that.

I suggest that a proposition of this kind, affecting so many interests, can not be taken up on the spur of the moment under such circumstances as the present and disposed of so as to do justice. A proposition of so important a character as this certainly ought to go to the committee and receive mature consideration.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I hope my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] will not press this amendment. I wish to say that of all the questions I have ever investigated, these questions involving interstate commerce are perhaps the most difficult. The present bill has been the result of very mature deliberation, and of long conferences with the Interstate Commerce Commission. I have already consented to the striking out of section 2 of the bill, for the simple reason that there is a difference of opinion in the committee on that subject. But it is very evident that the amendment of my friend from Louisiana would destroy the harmony of the bill. My own judgment is that the object he is attempting to reach by the amendment is already covered by the interstate-commerce act. But to say the least, a matter of so grave importance as the question presented in his amendment ought not to be disposed of in this way without the consideration of the committee. I move, therefore, that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. BOATNER. I hope the gentleman will not move to lay my amendment on the table until I have had an opportunity to reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] and to himself.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Very well; I withdraw the motion. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BOATNER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have such time as I may desire. As a member of the House I think I have some rights on this floor.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I understand that.

Mr. BOATNER. Having offered this amendment, I would like to be heard upon it. I have never spoken, I believe, in this House for more than ten minutes at a time, but I do not wish to exercise my rights on this floor by the grace of anybody. I do not desire always to occupy the floor simply by somebody's permission that I may speak a few minutes. I am tired of that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana has proposed an amendment; and if the gentleman from Tennessee withdraws the motion to lay on the table, the gentleman from Louisiana will be recognized.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion to lay on the table?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I do not. I insist on the motion.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, at the time the gentleman from Tennessee rose, I also rose to address the Chair. I had the right to reply to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The difficulty was that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] had spoken and was followed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND]. Then the Chair simply recognized the gentleman from Tennessee because the gentleman from Louisiana had spoken once upon the subject, and the gentleman from Tennessee had not. The gentleman from Tennessee having the floor has moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LIND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: If that motion be adopted will it not carry the whole bill to the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I insist on my motion.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state my point of order.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I call the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] has the floor upon a question of order.

Mr. LIND. As I understand, under general parliamentary law a motion to table an amendment carries with it, if adopted, the bill itself. In the Senate there is a special rule which allows the adoption of a motion to table an amendment without affecting the bill. We have no such rule here, and I do not understand that the House can be deprived by a motion of this kind of the opportunity to consider the bill. I think the motion is out of order. I think the gentleman from Tennessee might move the previous question on the amendment; but I know he does not want to table this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I withdraw my motion to lay on the table and move——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] is recognized.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee having withdrawn the motion to lay on the table, the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], who is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] is laboring under a mistake as to the provisions of the interstate commerce law in this regard. While that requires common carriers to receive freights, either loaded on cars or otherwise from other connecting carriers, there is nothing to prevent them from discriminating in their charges, and thus enable them to refuse effectually to take such freights by putting such rates upon them as to amount to a practical prohibition.

Now there is a case which has arisen in my own district and which illustrates the weakness of the law as it now stands. There has grown up on the V., S. and P. Railroad, that is to say, the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railroad, between Monroe and Shreveport, a number of very large lumber establishments which have been finding their market over one of the lines of the Iron Mountain system.

The Gould roads, or system, controls both ends of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific road. That is the connecting lines going to St. Louis and Chicago, and the Western States generally are controlled by the Gould system. Large lumbering establishments grew up also on the lines of the Gould system; and in order, as I am reliably informed, although I do not state this as a fact on my own personal knowledge, for the purpose of giving people engaged in the lumbering business on their lines a monopoly of the business, which had been participated in by mills on the other line to which I have referred, the Gould system refused to take lumber whether in trains or on cars from the line of this road, except on such terms as absolutely prohibited the mills on the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific road from shipping their lumber over the other line.

Now, if the law already requires what I ask in this amendment, of course I have nothing more to say; but my understanding is that there is no such requirement in the law; and all I am asking in the amendment is that under the provisions of the interstate-commerce act connecting railways engaged in interstate-commerce shall be compelled to receive from connecting common carriers loaded trains or cars and haul them to the point of destination on the same terms that they charge on their own line for loaded trains or loaded cars from that point to the point of delivery, provided that they shall not be permitted to charge a greater price for the shorter haul on the trains or cars from the connecting roads than they charge on their own.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BOATNER. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Is not your proposition, centered down, simply this: That where the freight is picked up by a connecting line, and shipped over such connecting line, that road shall not charge more for the freight than for the freight which it picks up on its own line, and carried the same distance?

Mr. BOATNER. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Now do not you see at once that that destroys the idea of through freight shipped on different lines, and that you give a local price to the railroad that picks it up on its end of the line.

Mr. BOATNER. No, I do not think so. I think the gentleman misapprehends the purpose of the amendment, and certainly labors under an error as to its effect. Let me illustrate: Suppose, for instance, that a lumber train comes over the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific road to the town of Monroe, and is there tendered to a road known as the Houston, Central Arkansas and Northern, which runs from Monroe north to St. Louis. That road says "I will not take the lumber except at a certain price," and that price prohibits the shipment of it on this northern line. At the same time the Houston, Central Arkansas and Northern is hauling lumber from the same point, or 50 or 100 miles below it, at a price which enables the mills on its lines to put lumber in the market at remunerative prices.

The gentleman from Tennessee does not catch my idea at all. It is not to compel through freights on the terms that we see fit to apply, but to say to the connecting common carriers that they shall take freight, from their connection, at the same price that they haul freight for the public over their own line from the point in question.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. But will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. BOATNER. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. The previous provision of the bill is that the connecting lines, belonging to different corporations, shall form only one entire and continuous line for this purpose.

Now, to make that point plain. Suppose we take up freight here at Washington, to be carried to San Francisco, and to be shipped over half a dozen different connecting lines. When you reach the end of this line, say at Chicago, you put it in the power of that connecting road to pick it up and charge or exact freight from Chicago to San Francisco that would not be warranted under the provisions of existing law. Therefore we have conferred on a part of the line a local rate, so to speak, and destroy the other sections of the bill which makes the entire line a through line, thereby defeating that provision in the law which refers to the long and short haul clause as originally designed.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] totally misapprehends the scope and effect of the amendment which I propose, and that he totally misapprehends, also, the scope and effect of the bill which is under consideration. Why, sir, certainly this House has not said that one line may carry freight from New York to Chicago, and then dictate to a road west from Chicago what it shall charge for carrying that same freight from Chicago to San Francisco.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. It does that.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman say that the first common carrier can dictate to the second common carrier the rate at which it shall carry the freight?

Mr. COX of Tennessee. It does that in effect.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. It does not say it in that language.

Mr. BOATNER. It could not have any such effect. We have no right to make any such regulation. It would be a deprivation of the individual right of the corporation to manage its own affairs.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LIND. Who is entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana Mr. [BOATNER] has the floor.

Mr. LIND. For how long a time?

The SPEAKER. For one hour.

Mr. BOATNER. I say I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] has not caught the idea which I have been trying to impress upon the House, and that is that a common carrier shall not be permitted, by fixing a higher rate of freight upon what it receives from its connecting carrier, to prevent the business coming over that line and to force business over its own line, or to give a monopoly to those people who do business over its own line.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOATNER. Very well.

Mr. BUTLER. You say it prohibits making a higher rate. Does not the wording of your amendment prohibit the making of a lower rate? It says it must be taken at "the same rate." It does not say the same or less.

Mr. BOATNER. I do not suppose it prohibits the reducing of its rate.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose they wish to draw the trade that way and to make an inducement to do it? Your amendment provides that it shall be taken at the same rate, and it can not be taken at less.

Mr. BOATNER. I do not apprehend that any one excepting the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] would put such a construction as that upon the amendment or get any such idea.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have offered this amendment. It has repeatedly been suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it proposes to cure an abuse which exists under the present system.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I move the previous question on the pending amendment, and on the bill to its engrossment and third reading.

Mr. BOATNER. I wish to know if I have not a right to a vote upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly. The amendment is pending and there will be a vote upon it.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] will not insist upon his demand for the previous question. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I wish to get the bill passed this afternoon.

Mr. MALLORY. If the gentleman will not yield to me to offer my amendment, I shall have to vote against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] demands the previous question upon the pending amendment, and upon the bill to its engrossment and third reading.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. BOATNER was again read.

Mr. BOATNER. I would like to modify my amendment by adding the words "at a rate not exceeding that charged by their own line."

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the words "no greater rate" may be inserted.

Mr. BOATNER. I was just suggesting such a change as that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the words can be inserted. The gentleman may modify his amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Inasmuch as the gentleman has modified his amendment, I would like to have it read as amended.

The SPEAKER. The amendment as modified will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

All railway common carriers are hereby required to accept from connecting lines loaded cars or trains to be hauled over their lines to point of delivery at a rate no greater than they charge for similar service over their own line from the point where such cars or trains are received: Provided, The rate charged shall not be greater for a shorter than a longer haul over the lines of said connecting carrier.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BOATNER, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LIND and Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee) there were—ayes 85, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF TITLE.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title of Senate bill 1933, which passed a moment ago, be changed so as to read:

An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in cases or proceedings under or connected with an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and amendments thereto.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10042) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

During the reading,

Mr. STORER said: Mr. Speaker, the bill is a long one, and the only new part of the bill in addition to the existing law commences on page 7. I ask unanimous consent to pass over the reading of what is existing law, and to begin the reading at the top of page 7, line 14.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. STORER] states that the only new provision that is not existing law occurs at page 7 of the bill. He asks to omit the reading of that part of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 6 and 10 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended by an act approved March 2, 1889, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its route. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force, and shall also state separately the terminal charges, and any rules or regulations which in anywise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type and copies for the use of the public shall be posted in two public and conspicuous places in every depot, station, or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, are received for transportation, in such form that they shall be accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected.

"Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep open to public inspection, at every depot or office where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing the through rates established and charged by such common carrier to all points in the United States beyond the foreign country to which it accepts freight for shipment; and any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to customs duties as if said freight were of foreign production; and any law in conflict with this section is hereby repealed.

"No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept open to public inspection. Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges shall only be made after three days' previous public notice, to be given in the same manner that notice of an advance in rates must be given.

"And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges as may at the time be in force.

"Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission hereinafter provided for copies of its schedules of rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same. Every such common carrier shall also file with said commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party. And in cases where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also, in like manner, be filed with said commission. Such joint rates, fares, and charges on such continuous lines so filed as aforesaid shall be made public by such common carriers when directed by said commission, in so far as may, in the judgment of the commission, be deemed practicable; and said commission shall from time to time prescribe the measure of publicity which shall be given to such rates, fares, and charges, or to such part of them as it may deem practicable for such common carriers to publish, and the places in which they shall be published.

"No advance shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges shown upon joint tariffs, except after ten days' notice to the Commission, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect. No reduction shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, except after three days' notice, to be given to the Commission as is above provided in the case of an advance of joint rates. The Commission may make public such proposed advances, or such reductions, in such manner as may, in its judgment, be deemed practicable, and may prescribe from time to time the measure of publicity which common carriers shall give to advances or reductions in joint tariffs.

"It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any services in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate, fare, or charge is named thereon than is specified in the schedule filed with the Commission in force at the time.

"The Commission may determine and prescribe the form in which the schedules required by this section to be kept open to public inspection shall be prepared and arranged, and may change the form from time to time as shall be found expedient.

"If any such common carrier shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its schedules or tariffs of rates, fares, and charges as provided in this section, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein the principal office of said common carrier is situated, or wherein such offense may be committed, and if such common carrier be a foreign corporation, in the judical circuit wherein such common carrier accepts traffic and has an agent to perform such service, to compel compliance with the aforesaid provisions of this section; and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act; and the failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt; and the said Commissioners, as complainants, may also apply, in any such circuit court of the United States, for a writ of injunction against such common carrier, to restrain such common carrier from receiving or transporting property among the several States and Territories of the United States, or between the United States and adjacent foreign countries, or between ports of transshipment and of entry and the several States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned in the first section of this act, until such common carrier shall have complied with the aforesaid provisions of this section of this act.

"The copies of schedules and tariffs of rates, fares, and charges filed with the Commission, as herein provided, shall be preserved as records in the custody of the secretary of the Commission and shall be prima facie evidence, for the purpose of investigations by the Commission, and in all judicial proceedings, that the rates, fares, and charges therein mentioned are or were the rates, fares, and charges actually demanded, collected, and received during the time such schedules and tariffs purport to be, or to have been, in force.

"The copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements between common carriers, filed with the Commission as herein provided, shall be preserved as records in the custody of the secretary of the Commission and shall also be receivable in evidence as being prima facie what they purport to be for the purpose of investigations by the Commission and in all judicial proceedings.

"The statistics, tables, and figures contained in the annual reports of carriers made to the Commission, as required by the provisions of this act, and in the report of the statistician of the Commission, shall be preserved as records in the custody of the secretary of the Commission, and shall also be received in evidence as prima facie correct for the purpose of all investigations made by the Commission, and in all judicial proceedings.

"Copies of, or extracts from, any of said schedules, tariffs, contracts, agreements, arrangements, or reports, made records as aforesaid, certified by the secretary of the Commission, shall also be receivable in evidence with like effect as the original."

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is very simple, and it is also very technical. The law as it now exists requires that every railroad company engaged in interstate commerce business shall file with the Interstate Commerce Commission copies of its tariffs, of its schedules, and its annual reports. No provision has ever by law been made that the same provision which would apply to these papers and printed copies if deposited in any other department of the Government could be used as evidence in cases in court.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I believe that these last sections were not read.

Mr. STORER. The committee's amendment strikes them out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think they ought to be read.

Mr. STORER. The bill as reported from the committee does not include those sections. It strikes the last three sections out.

Mr. HOLMAN. But they are sections of the bill, and the committee recommend that they be stricken out. It seems to me that they are very important.

Mr. STORER. Does the gentleman desire to have section 10 read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am for the bill and for those sections.

Mr. STORER. They are not in the bill reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly they are.

Mr. STORER. I presume you have not the bill as reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have you reported a substitute?

Mr. STORER. Yes; the committee have reported a substitute for the bill as introduced.

Mr. HOLMAN. The original bill has not been read?

Mr. STORER. The original bill has not been read.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But the original bill is not before the House.

Mr. STORER. I will remind the gentleman from Indiana that there are many bills before our committee not yet reported which he could have read if he desired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am in favor of the bill, and I am also in favor of the three sections stricken out; but if you have reported a substitute bill I can not insist on having these sections read.

Mr. STORER. The only object we have is to put these papers, which of course are in print, in the same position they would be when filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, with similar papers and documents belonging to the other departments of the Government, and which are in the care of those departments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are there no penal provisions in this act?

Mr. STORER. There are no penal provisions in it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. STORER. The gentleman is at liberty to introduce a bill if he desires; but this is the bill the committee reports.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but I would like the gentleman to explain why the bill reported does not impose a penalty for a violation of the law.

Mr. STORER. This section, I will remind the gentleman from Indiana, was passed in a House of which he was a member, and has been the existing law since 1887. No gentleman of this committee who makes this report is responsible for that legislation any more than the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there ought to be a penal provision in the act; otherwise, how can you expect to enforce it?

Mr. STORER. Does the gentleman propose an amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman himself ought to consent to offer these three last sections. I think they are all good sections. They provide for the enforcement of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STORER. If the gentleman had been attending to what the House had been doing, he would have remembered that the bill presented by our colleague from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] includes the penal provisions and leaves them as they are now in the law. There are penal provisions for every violation of the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. And penal provisions for the violation of the present law?

Mr. STORER. And for violations of the provisions of the present law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied with that explanation.

Mr. STORER. The only question is whether we are going to put these printed copies of documents in the hands of the Commission on such a level as to make them prima facie evidence, and allow the Commission to certify copies therefrom as the Departments of the Government are permitted to do. Now, Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to be heard, I will call the previous question upon the pending amendment and the bill to its engrossment and third reading.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STORER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2345) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River above New Orleans.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of that bill be dispensed with. It is drawn in the usual form, with the usual safeguards. It simply provides for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at New Orleans. The bill has passed the Senate; the members from Louisiana are agreed in approving it; there is no objection to it, and it carries no appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made and the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, upon the assurance that this bridge bill is in the usual form, and contains the safeguards found in other bills of like character coming from the committee, I will not insist upon the further reading.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the further reading of this bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. TRACEY. I object.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, in connection with this bill, that a similar one was introduced in the House by myself. My colleague from New Orleans [Mr. LAGAN] desires to offer one or two amendments which I have agreed to accept, and which the committee have agreed to accept, and I now yield to him.

Mr. LAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "Mississippi River," in section 1, strike out "above the city of New Orleans" and insert in lieu thereof "the approach to which, on its left bank, shall be within the upper limits of the city of New Orleans if practicable, or within five miles above said city limits."

Mr. WISE. We accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the further amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the end of section 5: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving authority to the Secretary of War to diminish the height of bridge or the width of spans as specified in section 3 of this act."

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, we accept that amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, that amendment certainly ought not to be adopted. We are proceeding here to bridge the Mississippi River near its mouth. It is a question of great importance to all the people of the Mississippi Valley. There are great objections to bridging streams so as to interfere with water navigation, but here is a proposition which, if this amendment is adopted, will practically close the mouth of the Mississippi River to commerce of the agricultural people above. That amendment, as I understand it, permits the Secretary of War to reduce the height of this bridge. I doubt the propriety of erecting a bridge there at all. I am not in favor of bridging the Mississippi River so near its mouth, and I think it behooves gentlemen on this floor representing the great Mississippi Valley to consider the matter well before they authorize the construction of this bridge.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the interests of navigation upon the Mississippi River has been carefully guarded in the drawing of this bill. The bridge is to be constructed just above the city of New Orleans.

There are to be only two piers in the river, and the central span of the bridge is to be not less than 1,000 feet wide and 85 feet high, above the highest water in the river at flood stages.

The amendment which my colleague [Mr. LAGAN] has offered simply goes a little farther than the bill itself in conserving and protecting the interests of navigation. The objection raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to the amendment has no force whatever. If a bridge is to be constructed over the Mississippi River at or near New Orleans that bridge, as everyone will admit, should be a high bridge; and I, for one, acting in the interest of the navigation of the river, would never consent to the passage of a bill authorizing the Secretary of War at any time to make the bridge a low bridge. The object of the amendment, I repeat, is simply to guard more carefully the navigable interests of the river, and it should be adopted.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have the amendment read again. I may have misunderstood its purport. But I am opposed to bridging the river at New Orleans or anywhere near its mouth.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the bill as amended to a third reading.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have a division on that.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 140, noes 5.

So the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE AT OR NEAR SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. WISE. I call up the bill (H. R. 10063) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," etc.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," approved March 2, 1889, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa,'" approved April 13, 1890, be amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced within two years and be finished within five years from its passage."

SEC. 2. That section 1 of said act of April 30, 1892, be amended to read as follows:

"That it shall be lawful for the Pacific Short Line Bridge Company, or its assigns, to construct and maintain," etc.

And the addition of the words "and assigns" shall be made wherever in said section the words "the Pacific Short Line Bridge Company" appear.

The following amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to:

In line 14, of section 1, strike out the words "within five years from its passage" and insert "on or before March 2, 1894."

In line 2 of section 2, strike out "1892" and insert "1890."

Mr. WISE. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided always, That the franchises granted to said company by the aforesaid acts shall not be alienable until all judgments existing against said company at the time this act goes into effect have been paid and satisfied."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BUTLER. This seems to be a bill amendatory of an act for the construction of a bridge. I should like to know what the objects of the bill is, and what changes it makes in the act already passed.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes simply to extend for one year the time for the construction of this bridge. The original act was passed in 1889 and amended in 1890. The time now allowed by law for the construction of the bridge would expire on the 2d of March next. It is proposed now to extend the time till March 2, 1894. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. What is the meaning of the clause providing for inserting the words "and assigns?"

Mr. PERKINS. In the amendatory act of 1890 the words "and assigns" were, by oversight, omitted after the name of the bridge company. It is now proposed to insert those words, so as to make the language read "The Pacific Short Line Bridge Company or its assigns," thus following the usual form in the drawing of bills of this character.

Mr. BUTLER. The object of my question was to ascertain the reason why more time is required for the building of this bridge than was originally granted. Why has this extension of time become necessary?

Mr. PERKINS. Because after the passage of the amendatory act there was some delay in providing for the building of this bridge. The work is now in active progress and will be completed in all probability by the 1st of August of this year.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the people on the Nebraska side of the river are very anxious for the passage of this bill. There was at one time some difference of opinion on the question, but now there is a general agreement.

Mr. PICKLER. The people of South Dakota are also anxious for the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BUSINESS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House for the remainder of this session.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

ROCKPORT, TEX., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. WISE. I now call up the bill (H. R. 9531) to make Rockport, Tex., a subport of entry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Aransas (Rockport) in the customs collection district of Corpus Christi, Tex., be, and he is hereby, constituted a subport of entry in said district.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HUDSON RIVER.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7585) to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Companies to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of that bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that bill is going to be opposed, and there is a measure of much public importance that we desire to bring before the House this afternoon, so that I will withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WISE. I yield now to the gentleman from Maryland to introduce a bill which he desires to call up.

NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up this afternoon the bill (H. R. 9757) to provide for the better protection of commerce and for the general welfare, for the establishment of a national quarantine, etc.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. RAYNER. With the consent of the House I would like to ask for the substitution of the Senate bill, and wish to state the reason for making the request.

The Committee on Commerce had reported a quarantine bill, and afterwards a bill was reported to the Senate and passed. The Senate bill is almost identical with our bill, with the exception of one section which carries an appropriation. It is substantially similar with the single exception I have named, and I should like for the discussion upon the measure to take place upon the Senate bill, a bill which passed the Senate unanimously, and differs only in the wording and in some slight particulars from the House bill.

I ask unanimous consent now, no matter what action may be taken hereafter, to substitute the bill (S. 2707) for the House bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is the appropriation?

Mr. RAYNER. The Senate bill carries an appropriation of $1,000,000. The House bill carries no appropriation. But when the proper time comes, if there is objection, the Senate bill can be amended in that regard.

The Senate bill is on the Speaker's table, and we do not want to have two bills, differing so slightly from each other, pending at the same time. That bill has been lying on the Speaker's table waiting action on the House bill.

I ask that it be substituted for the House bill, so that the discussion may take place upon it.

Mr. STUMP. Has that bill been referred to a committee and reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object.

Mr. RAYNER. Then I move that the Senate bill, No. 2707, on the Speaker's table, be substituted for the House bill, No. 9757.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that there is no rule of the House to authorize the motion he submits.

Mr. RAYNER. Very well, then, we will act on the House bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And on that I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill must have its first consideration in a committee.

Mr. RAYNER. I withdraw the motion; and we will go on with the House bill.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. LITTLE. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WISE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If that motion prevails will not this subject come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. That would be the effect of the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKERSON. I desire to amend the motion by making it 11.55.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 106, noes 13.

Mr. FITCH, Mr. GEISSENHAINER, and others. No quorum.

Mr. WISE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. I present resolutions adopted by a convention composed of more than 700 members from Oklahoma Territory, the Indian Territory, and the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, and Kansas, held on the 18th instant at Guthrie, in the Territory of Oklahoma, praying for Congressional action opening the Cherokee Strip to settlement, the formation of a State composed of Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory, and also favoring the giving of full jurisdiction to the United States court in the Indian Territory over all litigation, civil and criminal, in that Territory. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of District Assembly No. 4, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of legislation establishing a permanent census bureau and a periodical home and farm inquiry; which was referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of Local Union No. 80, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Chicago; of Local Union No. 649, Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Jacksonville; of Effingham Lodge, No. 284, Industrial Association of Machinists; of Springfield Lodge, No. 157, Independent American Mechanics; of the Tailors' Union, of Quincy; of Quincy Typographical Union, No. 59; of Energetic Lodge, No. 81, International Association of Machinists, of Bloomington; of Independent Mechanics' Union, No. 237, of Moline; of Local Union No. 568, Carpenters and Joiners', and of the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, of Rock Island, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Coffey County; of sundry citizens of Hardin County, and of sundry citizens of Fayette County, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed between millers, railroads, and elevators for the purpose of depressing the price of wheat, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a petition of over 200 citizens, chiefly residents of Rochester, Minn., and a petition of citizens of Mankato, Good Thunder, Alexandria, and other places in the State of Minnesota, praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of the Board of Trade of Winona; of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, and of 80 business men of Minneapolis, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act of 1890; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Winona, Minn., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the national control of quarantine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Albert Hadley and 14 other citizens of Box, Butte County, Nebr.; of P. P. Quist and 19 other citizens of Sibley County, Minn., and of John F. Gilbert and 36 other citizens of Belmont County, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON presented petitions of Lodge No. 314, International Association of Machinists of Waterloo; of the Tin, Sheet-Iron and Cornice Workers' Union, No. 23, of Burlington; of the Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 150, of Sioux City; of Union No. 578, Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Dubuque; of the Tinners' Union, No. 45, of Dubuque; of the Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 88, of Dubuque; of the Sioux City branch of the Journeymen Stonecutters' Association, and of Lodge No. 130, of the International Association of Machinists, of Dubuque, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PEFFER presented petitions of Typographical Union, No. 121, of Topeka; of Great Western Lodge, No. 24, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen; of Lodge No. 24, Independent American Mechanics, of Topeka; of Lodge No. 35, Independent American Mechanics, of Arkansas City; of Lodge No. 50, Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PEFFER. Yesterday I had the honor to present a petition of citizens of Oklahoma Territory, praying for an extension of the time within which payment may be made by entrymen for certain lands ceded to the United States by Indians in that Territory; which at my request was ordered to lie on the table for the present. I move that the petition be now referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented petitions of Converse Close, of Gratton; of Cigar-Makers' Union No. 207, of Coldwater; of Iron Moulders' Union No. 250, of Dowagiac; of Cigar-Makers' Union No. 24, of Muskegon; and of Cigar-Packers' International Union, No. 284, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the memorial of Rev. A. W. McClinkin, of Port Huron, Mich., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PROCTOR presented a petition of sundry citizens of Vermont, praying for the establishment of a road department; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DIXON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Providence, R. I., praying for the repeal of the silver act of 1890; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GEORGE presented a petition of 50 citizens of Mississippi and Tennessee, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HARRIS. I present a petition similar to the one which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has just presented, and I take it for granted that it is identically the same. It seems to be a printed stereotyped form which is being circulated. I ask that the petition be noted in the RECORD, and properly referred.

The petition, being a petition of the officers and members of W. H. Thomas Lodge, No. 150, Nashville, Tenn., praying for the repeal of the act closing the World's Fair on Sunday, was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of the Boards of Health of Norwood, Mount Vernon, Springfield, Scott, Cedarville, Tremont, Summerfield, and Arcanum, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of a national quarantine, and the suspension of immigration until the quarantine defenses of the country shall be placed in a condition to guarantee protection from contagious diseases; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of 42 citizens of Hicksville, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Delta, of the quarterly conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Marietta, and of the Christian Endeavor Union of Cleveland, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Columbus, of Local Union No. 683, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of Cincinnati, and of the Muskingum Lodge, International Association of Machinists, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of the National Malleable Castings Company of Cleveland; of C. P. Moore and other citizens of Ashtabula County, and of E. L. Leonard and other citizens of Flushing, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Bangor, Me., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act and for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Oscar Holway, president of the First National Bank, and other citizens of Augusta, Me., praying for the repeal of what is known as the Sherman silver act; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3561) to encourage the construction of electric railroads, to facilitate the rapid transportation of the mails, to promote the interests of commerce and travel, and to aid in demonstrating the feasibility of the distribution of electrical power for agricultural and other purposes along the line of electric roads, and especially to aid in the construction of a pioneer electric railroad between the cities of Chicago and St. Louis, by the Chicago and St. Louis Electric Railroad Company, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes at existing rates, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10062) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River, between the mouths of Pomme de Terre River and Buffalo Creek, in Benton County, Mo., reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of alleged violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2345) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River above New Orleans, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. 9531) to make Rockport, Tex., a subport of entry;

A bill (H. R. 9955) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation;

A bill (H. R. 10010) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10063) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," etc.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee.

FUNERAL OF EX-PRESIDENT HAYES.

Mr. BRICE. Mr. President, as has been the custom on similar occasions in the past, I offer a resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read and adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio submits a resolution; which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret of the death of Rutherford Birchard Hayes, formerly Chief Magistrate of the United States, and, as a further mark of respect to his memory on this the day of his funeral, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously; and the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 21, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 20, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. 10258) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

GENERAL SERVICE CLERK, FORT LEAVENWORTH, KANS., AND FORT MONROE, VA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Adjutant-General of the Army, addressed to the Major-General Commanding the Army, setting forth the necessity for the employment of one general service clerk at the infantry and cavalry school at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and one at the artillery school at Fort Monroe, Va.; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CAPITOL, NORTH O STREET AND SOUTH WASHINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company, submitting a statement showing the operations of said company during the year ending April 30, 1852; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (S. 3707) making an appropriation for establishing buoyage on the water front of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARKE of Wyoming, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYNES, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'FERRALL, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of illness.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted (on motion of Mr. REILLY) to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Susan Stout, accompanying the bill H. R. 8968, first session Fifty-first Congress, there being no adverse report.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5504) to permit the withdrawal of certain papers and the signing of certain receipts by John Finn or his attorney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to permit John Finn to withdraw from the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury 333 quartermaster's vouchers, belonging to him, and aggregating the sum of $7,066.64, which vouchers are unsigned by the payees, and were left with the said Auditor for the sole and only purpose of verification with the quartermaster's returns, and that the signature of the payees of each of said vouchers shall be taken and deemed sufficient when made by the present holder or his attorney.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COBB].

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have some explanation. Are these rejected claims?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. No; they have never been rejected. They are claims filed in the Quartermaster's Department, and the owner desires to withdraw them. They are his own personal private property. There are some imperfections in them, I believe.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are they vouchers for claims which have been rejected?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. No; the claims have never been rejected. The vouchers are not correctly drawn. There never has been anything paid or allowed on them. They are the property of Mr. Finn, and he desires to withdraw them from the department.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the object of having them withdrawn?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. They are his own private property and the Government has never paid anything on them.

Mr. BURROWS. What does he want them withdrawn for?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. They are his papers, and he would like to have possession of them.

Mr. BURROWS. Just as memoranda?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I suppose so; just as any one else might want his own private property.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BYRNS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5504) to permit the withdrawal of certain papers and the signing of certain receipts by John Finn, or his attorney, have considered the same, and recommend that it do pass, with the accompanying amendment:

Amend in line 12 by inserting between the words "sufficient" and "when" the word "receipt."

John Finn, the claimant in said bill, had possession of 333 vouchers against the Government, and claims to be the owner thereof. They aggregate $7,066.64, and are not indorsed by the payees.

Mr. Finn left them with the Auditor, so he claims, for the "sole and only purpose of verification with the quartermaster's returns." That now they are withheld from him, and he asks that he be permitted to withdraw them and receipt for them. This bill does not call for the payment of any money, but to give him possession of these evidences of debt.

The Auditor justifies the holding by the remarkable statement that—

"Mr. Finn, the only claimant appearing, established no right or title in any of the vouchers; that there was no evidence that any of the payees named in the vouchers had ever sold or assigned their vouchers."

What right that gives the Government to keep them your committee is unable to see. One thing is palpably plain: The Government does not own them, and the Auditor informs us that there has been no "finding" on the vouchers.

Finn had possession of them, and that carried with it the presumption of ownership; when they are presented for payment will be time enough to raise the question of their validity; but until then Mr. Finn should be allowed to hold them.

The following letter of the Auditor sets out the right claimed for the withholding:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE THIRD AUDITOR,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1892.

SIR: I have received your letter of 16th instant, which, by oversight, did not inclose a copy of the bill therein said to be inclosed.

But Governor Fletcher has handed to me a copy of House bill No. 5504, "to permit the withdrawal of certain papers and the signing of certain receipts by John Finn or his attorney," stating that it is the one referred to in your letter. This bill mentions 333 quartermaster's vouchers, aggregating $7,066.64, unsigned by the payees, and claimed by Mr. Finn as his property.

It is not the fact, in respect to these vouchers, that the accounting officers made any finding that the vouchers, or any of them, represented valid and just claims against the United States. The accounting officers made no investigation whatever in that respect and expressed no opinions on that point. Their decisions went only to the point that Mr. Finn, the only claimant appearing, established no right or title in any of the vouchers; that there was no evidence that any of the payees named in the vouchers had ever sold or assigned their vouchers, or indeed that they had ever had possession of them. Even the very doubtful doctrine of the former Second Comptroller, Dr. Broadhead, that settlement upon a voucher could legally be made in favor of any person producing the voucher, with the receipt in blank thereon signed by the payee, could not apply, for the vouchers were not thus receipted, and Mr. Finn could offer to the Government nothing which could protect it against a claim by any of the payees.

The history given by Mr. Finn when he presented the vouchers—and which is the only known history—was as follows: That he had advanced a large sum to a voucher broker firm in St. Louis, which firm, becoming wholly insolvent, handed to him, as the only return it could make, a bundle of vouchers (these being among them), and with the explanation that payment thereof had been refused by the United States officers; that he therefore regarded them as of no value, and threw them aside; but concluded, about twenty years thereafter, to make the experiment of presenting them to the Department.

It is not the fact, as assumed in the bill, that the vouchers to which the bill relates, were "left with said Auditor for the sole and only purpose of verification with the quartermaster's returns;" they were presented with demand for adjudication as claims; nor were they presented to this office, but to the Quartermaster-General, and were by him referred here.

Referring to the concluding clause in the bill, I fail to see how a ceremony, by Mr. Finn or his attorney, of writing at the foot of the receipts the names appearing at the head of the vouchers could add anything of value, or in any way change the status of the matter.

Very respectfully,

W. H. HART, Auditor.

Hon. SAMUEL BYRNS,
Of Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

P. S.—The letter of September 22, 1890, referred to by you, was addressed by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and not by the Third Auditor.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri if there will be any objection to inserting in this bill a provision for this party to deposit copies with the Third Auditor.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. The papers are now in the hands of the Third Auditor. There will be no objection to the Third Auditor making copies of the originals.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the parties themselves should furnish the copies.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. He can not get possession of the vouchers to make copies.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course if that provision were inserted in the bill, he could get access to them.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I have no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman would have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. None whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none? The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend further by inserting after the word "withdraw" in line 4, the words, "on depositing with the Third Auditor copies of the same."

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COBB of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL ROOM FOR NEW YORK POST-OFFICE.

Mr. DUNPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 186) empowering the Postmaster-General to obtain additional premises in the city of New York, to be used for the business of the Post-Office Department.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the Postmaster-General in his annual reports for the past three years has called attention to the inadequacy of the public building in New York City for efficient postal service; and

Whereas the commission of inquiry into the present condition of the service in the New York City post-office reports, of date January 10, 1893, that it is impossible to conduct the present volume of business in the space now provided without long and serious delays in forwarding the mails; and

Whereas this congestion of the mails at this point affects not only the metropolis of New York, but all exchanges of mails centering there for the country at large; and

Whereas the Postmaster-General under existing statutes is not authorized to use appropriations to divide post-offices where public buildings exist, and is not empowered to make any expenditure for such a station as is now required at New York City: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, empowered to obtain as speedily as possible, by rental or lease, suitable and sufficient premises in the city of New York, and upon such terms as his judgment approves, and that he be authorized to furnish and equip the same for the betterment of the postal service in said city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I think the report ought to be read, or some explanation made on an important matter like that.

The report (by Mr. DUNPHY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution empowering the Postmaster-General to obtain further premises in the city of New York, to be used for post-office business, beg leave to report favorably and recommend the passage of the joint resolution.

The Postmaster-General, the postmaster at New York City, and the commissioners of inquiry appointed by the Postmaster-General to investigate postal matters at New York City, all admit that the mails are not delivered at that city with adequate dispatch. They agree that the trouble arises out of the insufficiency of the room in the New York City post-office.

The Postmaster-General has no authority under existing statutes to obtain additional premises. He states that it is of very great importance to the whole postal system to have these delays at New York City prevented, and he urges immediate action on the accompanying resolution. This resolution will give the Postmaster-General authority to hire such premises in New York City as he approves and to prepare and furnish these premises for postal business.

The expense to be incurred for rental of such premises as will be needed will not exceed $23,000 per annum, which sum, together with such further sums as will be necessary for furnishing the premises and for additional clerks, etc., will be included in Post-Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I rose to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia says he rose to object. Objection is made.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE SENECA NATION OF INDIANS AND WILLIAM B. BARKER.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10206) to ratify and confirm an agreement made between the Seneca Nation of Indians and William B. Barker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the Seneca Nation of Indians in council, January 3, 1893, duly entered into an agreement with William B. Barker, whereby said nation leased to said Barker the Oil Springs, the Cattaraugus, and the Allegany Reservations, situate in Western New York, for the purpose of boring and testing said territory for gas and oil, on condition that if oil was found in paying quantities said nation should receive one-eighth part thereof, and if the gas should be found in paying quantities said nation should receive $40 per annum for each gas well drilled and used, and in addition that each Seneca Indian family residing on either of said reservations, should, if gas is found, have sufficient fuel for domestic use from any gas wells drilled on said territory free of charge, all of which is provided in said agreement, which was duly recorded in the Seneca Nation deed book, volume 5, page 341, January 4, 1893, at 3 o'clock p. m. of that day: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the agreement above recited be, and the same hereby is, in all things ratified, accepted, and confirmed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. The report can be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. HOOKER of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, having had under consideration House bill 10206, beg leave to submit the following report:

The agreement mentioned in said bill provides for the leasing of the Oil Springs, Cattaraugus, and Allegany Reservations, situated in Western New York, excepting therefrom such portions as have been heretofore leased for village purposes, for the purpose of boring for gas and oil, with the exclusive right to enter upon such lands to conduct such mining operations; also the right of way over and across said lands, the use of a sufficient amount of land on which to erect suitable buildings, derricks, and tanks for the prosecution of the work, and the storage of any of the products thereof; also the right to lay pipe lines on, across, or under the land for conveying steam, water, gas, oil, or other products; the free use of sufficient water, if found on the premises, and the right to remove any machinery, fixtures, oil, steam, gas, or water lines placed upon said lands by the said Barker at the expiration of this lease. The term of the lease is for ten years from the date of the agreement, and "so long thereafter as gas or oil shall be produced in paying quantities."

In consideration of the grant of such rights and privileges the said Barker agrees—

1. To deliver to the said Seneca Nation "the full equal one-eighth part of all petroleum or rock oil produced on and from said lands and to deliver the same free of charge to the credit of said Seneca Nation of Indians in some responsible pipe line."

2. To permit the said Seneca Nation of Indians to fully use and enjoy the said premises for the purpose of agriculture and residence, and for other purposes, except such part as shall necessarily be used and occupied by him in his operations for oil and gas, as aforesaid, the said Barker agreeing that no unnecessary damage shall be done under the operation of this lease to the lands and premises, and further agreeing to pay any individual Indians all damage done to crops or improvements.

3. That no wells shall be drilled nor any buildings or tanks for the storage of oil shall be erected nearer than 200 feet to any dwelling house or barn on any of said lands, and that all gas or water lines laid across the cultivated fields shall be buried beneath the reach of the plow by the said Barker at his expense.

4. That for each and every gas well drilled on said lands where gas is found in sufficient volume and pressure to utilize by piping to a distance he agrees to pay the said Indians the sum of $40 per annum, which sum shall be due and payable to the treasurer of the Seneca Nation at Salamanca, N. Y., on the 15th day of January in each year for each and every well at that time being utilized and used as aforesaid, which sum shall be full consideration to the Seneca Nation for the products of each of said gas-producing wells.

5. That said Barker agrees to commence one well within six months from the date of the final confirmation of this lease; to prosecute drilling with reasonable diligence on said well, and to drill to a depth of 3,000 feet, should it be found necessary in order to properly and thoroughly test the territory; that should oil or gas be found in said well in paying quantities, not less than two additional wells are to be drilled each year thereafter, until a sufficient number have been drilled to properly protect the lands from contiguous operations by other parties; that should oil or gas not be found in paying quantities in the first test well, a second test well shall be completed within one year after the completion of the first test well, and the third, fourth, and fifth test well may be drilled in like manner and under like conditions, and that in case of the failure to find gas or oil in paying quantities in any of said five test wells, then this lease shall be and become absolutely null and void. It being expressly stipulated that in complying with the provisions of this lease as to testing or as to drilling wells the lands embraced in the three reservations above mentioned shall be considered as a whole, and that the said Barker shall have the right to make such tests by drilling on any part of the lands of any one reservation or any of said reservations as his experience and the results obtained may warrant.

7. That any family of the Seneca Nation residing on either of said reservations shall have the right to use gas and take the same from any gas or pipe lines leading from any of the said wells for fuel for domestic purposes free of charge. Said lease was executed by the Seneca Nation of Indians in accordance with the resolution of the council assembled at Salamanca, on said reservation, on the 3d day of January, 1893. Said resolution authorized the president and clerk of the council to execute the same for and on behalf of the nation. The council has a duly elected president, clerk, and treasurer, and about twenty councillors, who constitute the legislative body of the nation, and this lease was authorized by that body.

The lease was prepared and sent to a member of this committee by Hon. Hudson Ansley, who is now and has been for many years the attorney for the Seneca Nation of Indians for the State of New York, and he states that said lease is an advantageous one to the nation, and in view of the benefits to be derived from the nation that it should be confirmed. This lease is also approved by Mr. A. W. Ferrin, who is the agent for the New York Indians, and who resides on the reservation in the village of Salamanca. Your committee is of the opinion that said lease would be beneficial to the Indians residing on the reservation described in the agreement, inasmuch as the timber upon said reservation has nearly all been cut, and in the event of gas being found in paying quantity the Indians would receive their fuel free of charge. The question of fuel for these Indians is an important one.

Your committee would therefore recommend that the bill pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER]?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it was impossible, on account of the confusion, to hear all of that report read. I do not think the House understands the matter, and I would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, the Seneca Nation of Indians have a reservation that is in the neighborhood of the oil and gas belt of Northern Pennsylvania. Of course, it has been impossible to go on the lands of this reservation and prospect them, either for oil or gas, and it is impossible except on agreement with the Indians, which must be assented to by the National Government. The gentleman who makes this lease with the council of this tribe has made a lease, which has been prepared by the attorney of the tribe—their own attorney. It has been assented to, and its provisions contain all the usual clauses and all the usual safeguards; and it is upon the usual terms of such leases made with other owners of property of the adjoining country there.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ROCKWELL. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. How about the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HOOKER of New York. It has his consent.

Mr. ROCKWELL. He had no objection to it. The terms are just the same as those granted to other owners of property in that part of the country. If the lessee finds oil or gas he is to pay these Indians $40 a year for each well. It provides also that the well shall be thoroughly tested, and that he shall pay $40 a year for each gas well and in addition furnish the Indians gas free; and that is a very important matter, as their fuel is becoming scarce.

In addition to that it provides for giving them a royalty of one-eighth of all the petroleum that may be obtained.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is one-eighth the best royalty given to private owners of property?

Mr. ROCKWELL. It is the same royalty—the ordinary royalty that is given to owners of property in that vicinity. There is no possible question about its being a benefit to the Indians. If these lands have any of the minerals they can not be developed in any other way. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2625) to provide for the punishment of offenses on the high seas;

A bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady;

A bill (S. 3580) to amend the proviso to be found in connection with the free-delivery service, page 569, twenty-fourth volume, Statutes at Large; and Joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

TO CLEAR THE POTOMAC OF ICE.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the joint resolution (S. R. 135) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice, and to ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to hire boats for the purpose of clearing the Potomac River of ice within the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] whether one-half of this expenditure is to be debited to the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is. The joint resolution so provides.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, the question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I did not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I think the House ought to take notice of one fact——

Mr. DOCKERY (interposing). Mr. Speaker, I desire to retain the floor. How much time does my colleague desire?

Mr. BLAND. Only a few minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. I say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not object to the present consideration of this joint resolution, but I think the House and the country ought to take notice of one fact, the fact that there is no trouble about the ice in the Potomac except what is caused by the Long bridge which obstructs the river. So long as that bridge remains there I suppose the public will have to take care of the ice and of the river, but I think some measure ought to be taken to compel the railroad company to construct a bridge across the Potomac here that will not be an obstruction to the navigation and a menace to the people of this city whenever there is ice in the river.

I remember that some years ago, when we had such a spell of weather as we have now, there was ice in the river and a large fall of snow, and when the ice broke up and lodged against the Long bridge, it caused a flood which covered parts of Pennsylvania avenue to such a depth that boats could be run upon it, and some of the hotels were flooded on their first floor. That was all on account of that nuisance, the Long bridge, and if there is any power to remedy that evil it ought to be exercised. This $5,000 which we are called upon to provide is really for the benefit of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for the protection of its bridge, though, of course, incidentally it will also give protection to the people of this city. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentlemen in charge of this measure ought to look into the question I have suggested and see whether something can not be done to compel that railroad corporation to do their duty, instead of requiring us to appropriate the public money to protect their property.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in reply to the gentleman, that the Committee on Appropriations are not charged with the consideration of legislation relating to District matters. They have simply reported this appropriation in pursuance of existing law. I recognize the force of the suggestion of my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the overflow, if there be one, will probably be aggravated by the existence of the Long bridge; yet the fact remains that the bridge exists, and as there is danger of an overflow of the streets of this city, the Committee on Appropriations have reported this joint resolution. If legislation such as my colleague suggests is necessary in order to remove the evil of which he complains—and I think it is very probable that he is correct in his views—that legislation should come from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and not from the Committee on Appropriations, whose duty is simply to report appropriations pursuant to existing law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on the District of Columbia considered this matter, and unanimously recommended this appropriation, believing it to be necessary.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Tennessee is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I believe?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire if it is not possible for that committee to report some remedy for the evils resulting from this bridge. Instead of appropriating the public money to take care of the existing bridge, the property of the railroad company, we ought to compel them to build a bridge that would not be an obstruction to the navigation or a menace to the city.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will introduce a measure undertaking to make a reform in that direction I feel authorized, as one member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to say that they will very cheerfully take jurisdiction of it and undertake to give relief. A few years ago an arrangement was made by which this bridge was to be perpetuated, and I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Missouri was in Congress at that time. At all events, I believe that Congress then legalized the bridge.

Mr. BLAND. I am not aware of any legalization of it on the part of Congress. But, whatever may have been done in the past, that is no reason why this Congress should neglect its duty in the matter.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to hear distinctly the whole of the joint resolution, and I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of it in what way this money is to be expended?

Mr. DOCKERY. Under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that; but how is it to be applied?

Mr. DOCKERY. For the purpose of hiring boats to break up the ice; the joint resolution so reads.

Mr. MCMILLIN. At what point?

Mr. DOCKERY. Along the Potomac River in front of the city of Washington.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Below the bridge?

Mr. DOCKERY. Below the bridge and above it in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DINGLEY. So as to prevent an ice jam which might be followed by an inundation of the city.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] whether the appropriation proposed in this resolution is to come entirely from the Treasury of the United States, or whether it will be paid in part from the treasury of the District of Columbia. Before the gentleman replies to this inquiry, permit me to express my concurrence with a remark which has fallen from my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. I do not think we shall ever have relief from the overflows to which this city has been subjected on many occasions until the bridge called the "Long bridge," which is used for the passage of trains as well as for ordinary travel is entirely removed.

The best remedy would be to require the railroad company (and an appropriation can be made to aid them, if it be thought proper) to construct a bridge so elevated that vessels would be able to pass under it, thus dispensing with the draw altogether. Unless you do this the Long bridge must constitute a perpetual dam in the river, by which the city will remain constantly subject to overflow, whether in consequence of the accumulation of ice, or of an ordinary freshet. A railroad bridge thus elevated so as to offer no obstruction to navigation is the only proper remedy; and then, in my judgment, we ought to adopt measures, with the assistance of the District of Columbia, for spanning the Potomac with half a dozen bridges in order to provide for the development of the city of Washington as it should be provided for.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] I will reiterate the statement I made a few moments ago—that I trust the proper committee, charged with authority to consider such a reform as is suggested, will take the subject-matter into consideration at an early day. In further answer to the gentleman from Mississippi, I will repeat the statement I have already made: That under the provision of this joint resolution, one-half the expenditure to be incurred will be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] yield to me a moment?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to observe that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who have been members of this House very much longer than any member of the present District Committee, seem to lose sight of the fact that they, with their knowledge, personal and official, relating to this subject, have as much right and are as much charged with the duty of introducing a measure to correct the evil which they point out as any member of the committee, and, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, any member of this House who may introduce a bill of that character will find the committtee ready to give it attentive consideration.

Speaking for myself (and my service here has been, I believe, as long as that of any other member of the committee), when I came here I found that years before my entrance into Congress the United States had granted or sold this bridge to the railroad company, which, under an agreement made with it, was to maintain the bridge for the use of the public. Thus provision was made for the perpetuation of the bridge—at least there is no provision of law contemplating its removal. So far as I am concerned, I believe that the bridge ought to be removed under such terms and conditions, fair and equitable to the railroad company and to the public, as may be provided by Congress.

Mr. WILLCOX. Was the bridge built originally in conformity with the law authorizing its construction?

Mr. HEARD. Most assuredly. In the first instance it was maintained by the Government; and afterward, as I have stated, it was ceded or sold to the railroad company upon the condition that they should maintain it for public use.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. HEARD] whether his committee, the Committee on the District of Columbia, has properly charge of this subject, or whether it belongs to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HEARD. My colleague [Mr. BLAND] has referred to the subject, I believe, as belonging to the District Committee, while my other colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] has referred to it also, as I understand, as coming within the jurisdiction of the District Committee.

Mr. BLAND. I should like to know what committee has charge of this matter. Certainly no committee that has charge of it has the right to shoulder the responsibility on members of the House who do not belong to that committee.

Mr. HEARD. I will ask my colleague [Mr. BLAND] how any member of this House, whether he be a member of the committee or not, is exempted from the duty resting upon any member to take measures for the correction of any evil which he knows to exist.

Mr. BLAND. But, as I understand, committees are appointed for the special purpose of looking after particular questions. It would be very difficult for members to undertake to look after business which has been assigned to particular committees of the House.

Mr. HEARD. When the Committee on the District of Columbia shall have failed to consider any bill introduced by any member of the House looking to a reform in this matter, it will be time enough to make criticisms upon the action of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask the previous question on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

BRDIGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI, COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 10117) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided for; which was referred to the House Calendar.

ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS, WEST POINT.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 9926) to authorize the appointment of an assistant professor of mathematics at the Military Academy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

JEFFERSON BARRACKS, MISSOURI.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (S. 1239) for the benefit of certain persons residing in the vicinity of Jefferson Barracks, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN LAND GRANTS.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. 10249) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain land heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORT ON "SWEATING" SYSTEM.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Manufactures, submitted a report of that committee, under a resolution of the House, concerning the "sweating" system; which was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

FEDERAL SUPERVISION OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. DE ARMOND, from the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, reported, as a substitute for the bills H. R. 9749 and H. R. 9767, a bill (H. R. 10261) to repeal the sections of the Revised Statutes concerning Federal supervision of elections; which was read twice and referred to the House Calendar.

VELASCO AND SURF SIDE TERMINAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. CRAIN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 8816) authorizing the Velasco and Surf Side Terminal Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Galveston and Brazos Canal; which was referred to the House Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I move that the House now resolve itself——

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I made an announcement, Mr. Speaker, on last evening that the Committee on Appropriations would ask the House to take up and consider the sundry civil bill this morning. But in deference to the wishes of a portion of the committee, who desired further time to examine the bill, the committee have instructed me to say that they will not insist on its consideration until next Monday morning.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution I send to the desk for immediate consideration.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I have a privileged motion, Mr. Speaker. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think the motion I desire to submit is equally in order, if not of higher privilege, and I would like to be permitted to offer it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. The motion I make is privileged under the rule, and this is the only time we have the right to make it. I object to the reading of the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, unless the Chair holds that my motion is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution, which seems to be a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. If it is an ordinary motion to adjourn of course it takes precedence, as a matter of privilege, but I have been recognized to make the motion I have made, and I object to the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio being read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will withdraw the resolution for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has a right, under the rules, to make his motion, and the question will be taken on that motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 89.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were 19 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are refused, not a sufficient number voting in favor of ordering them.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. No quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, I call up the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That comes too late, Mr. Speaker. It should have been made at the time of the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The count on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not been concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the House to the rule, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a rising vote is taken and the Chair announces the result it is in order for any member, if no quorum has voted, to make that point, and it then becomes the duty of the Chair, under Rule I, clause 5, to appoint tellers; but if tellers are demanded and refused by the House or committee, it is then too late, under the practice, to make the point of no quorum.

FUNERAL OF EX-PRESIDENT HAYES.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the resolution which I sent to the desk a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits a resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follwos:

Resolved, That this House, on this the day of the funeral of the late Rutherford B. Hayes, formerly Chief Magistrate of the United States, as a further mark of respect to his memory, do now adjourn.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move the adoption of the resolution, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has the floor.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN. Would it be in order to move to amend to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, this being the day of the regular evening pension session?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has demanded the previous question upon the adoption of his resolution. If the previous question is voted down, it will then be in order to amend.

Mr. MARTIN. Then if the previous question is voted down I will move to amend.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I simply call up this motion. It is a motion to adjourn, and it should be put without discussion or debate, I think.

The SPEAKER. This is not a mere motion to adjourn, but it is a resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is true.

The SPEAKER. It is a resolution on which the gentleman has demanded the previous question, and it must take the ordinary course.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand the Chair to hold that if the previous question be voted down, a motion to amend will be in order?

The SPEAKER. It will. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] demands the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MARTIN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 128, noes 8.

Mr. MARTIN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

The House proceeded to divide.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. MARTIN said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the temper of the House, I will withdraw the point.

Mr. ROCKWELL renewed the point of no quorum, but subsequently withdrew it.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution of Mr. OUTHWAITE was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the terms of the resolution, the Chair declares the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. BOWERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (S. 2246) for the relief of Capt. Henry C. Seaman. (Report No. 2302.)

By Mr. CROSBY, from the same committee: The bill (H. R. 9920) for the relief of Isaac Samuels. (Report No. 2304.)

By Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 10199) repealing an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Louisa M. Seppell." (Report No. 2312.)

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, an adverse report was delivered to the Clerk and laid on the table, as follows:

By Mr. ROCKWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (H. R. 9218) to correct the Army record of Capt. C. P. Bratt, late of Forty-eighth Ohio Volunteers. (Report No. 2303.)

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MCRAE: A bill (H. R. 10259) to fix the minimum price of public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10260) to indemnify and settle with certain States—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. TOWNSEND; A bill (H. R. 10262) for the relief of Andy M. Adams, of Denver, Colo.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. AMERMAN: Petition of the Sunday school and church of the Puritan Congregational Church of Scranton, Pa., 500 in number, against opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of the Langcliffe Church (526 members) of Avoca, Pa., against opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 21, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of MATTHEW STANLEY QUAY, elected by the Legislature of Pennsylvania a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1893; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. FRYE presented the credentials of EUGENE HALE, elected by the Legislature of Maine a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1893; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the credentials of DAVID TURPIE, elected by the Legislature of Indiana a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1893; which were read and ordered to be filed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature of the enrolled bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 9531) to make Rockport, Tex., a subport of entry;

A bill (H. R. 9955) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation; and

A bill (H. R. 10063) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," etc.

The bill (H. R. 10010) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE ABOVE NEW ORLEANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2345) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River above New Orleans.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in section 1, line 5, after the words "Mississippi River," to strike out "above the City of New Orleans" and insert "the approach to which, on its left bank, shall be within the upper limits of the city of New Orleans if practicable, or within 5 miles above said city limits;" and to add to section 5 the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving authority to the Secretary of War to diminish the height of bridge or the width of spans as specified in section 3 of this act.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. Has the chairman of the Committee on Commerce examined the amendments critically?

Mr. FRYE. I have examined the amendments and they are proper enough. The parties who are interested in the bridge desire that they shall be concurred in.

Mr. VEST. I have not myself had time to look at the amendments, but I have no doubt they are all right if the chairman of the committee has examined them.

Mr. FRYE. They are all right enough. I have examined them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE TESTIMONY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of alleged violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. VEST. I suppose that it ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILSON. The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WILSON, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented memorials of the First Presbyterian Church of Germantown; of the Walnut Street Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia; of the Arch Street Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, and of Mrs. D. W. Faunce, of West Newton, Mass., remonstrating against a repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HUNTON presented a memorial of the Norfolk and Portsmouth (Va.) Cotton Exchange, remonstrating against the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented petitions of J. Hiller, of Hudson, and of Lodge No. 82, International Association of Machinists of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of W. A. Foss and 39 other citizens of Gladstone, Mich., and the petition of J. August Quellig and 35 other citizens of Frankenmuth, Mich., praying for a quiet opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of H. L. Hutchinson and sundry other citizens of Lansing, Mich., praying for the passage of the antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a petition of citizens of Florence, Ariz., praying for the admission of that Territory into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. QUAY. I present resolutions adopted by the National Board of Trade at its annual meeting held in Washington City on the 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th days of January of the present year, favoring the construction of the Nicaragua Canal by the Government. In connection with the resolutions, I present a list of the commercial bodies represented by that organization, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The list referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Albany (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce.
The Ashland (Wis.) Business Men's Association.
The Baltimore (Md.) Board of Trade.
The Baltimore (Md.) Corn and Flour Exchange.
The Boston (Mass.) Merchants' Association.

The Wilmington (Del.) Board of Trade.
The York (Pa.) Board of Trade.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania inform the Senate what is the list which has just been read?

Mr. QUAY. I will state, in answer to the Senator from Maine, that I presented resolutions adopted by the National Board of Trade at its meeting recently held in this city favoring the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and had the list read to the Senate in order to show the constituents of that body. I desire to have both printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered. The resolutions will lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. What was the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. QUAY. That the list be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the list has been read, it will of course appear in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. Necessarily it will be printed in the RECORD, having been read.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the series of resolutions adopted by the National Board of Trade be printed as a document.

Mr. QUAY. My understanding is that the resolutions are also to be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pre tempore. The order of the Senate was that the names of the commercial bodies comprising the National Board of Trade shall be printed in the RECORD, not the resolutions.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad, if there be no objection, to have the resolutions also incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARRIS. If it be to print simply the matter read there can be no objection; but if it be to print more I do object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is that the resolutions, which were not read, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. To that I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the resolutions will be printed as a document.

Mr. QUAY. Then let them be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the resolutions of the National Board of Trade be printed as a document. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the creation of a commission to be known as the Ohio River commission, to have general supervision of the improvement of that river from Pittsburg, Pa., to Cairo, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented memorials of 182 religious and other organizations of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of Henry Vaught and 62 other citizens of Sharpsburg; of H. J. Deily and 206 other citizens of Philadelphia; of C. K. Rhodes and 36 other citizens of Birdsboro, and of L. H. Kuhn and 11 other citizens of Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for a total suspension of immigration for one year, and the appointment of a commission to investigate the evils of immigration in sections colonized by aliens during the last two decades; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Presbyterian Church of Derry; of the Susquehanna Avenue Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia; of Rev. John C. Conover and other citizens of Kenwood; of the congregations of Salem, Ebenezer, and Zion churches of the Evangelical Association of North America of Allentown; of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Presbyterian Church of Emlenton; of sundry citizens of Hebron; of the Ministerial Union of Bethlehem; of the Presbyterian Congregation of Manor Station; of Pisgah and Troy Presbyterian churches of Corsica and Summerville; of Grace Memorial Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg; of Pine Sun Presbyterian Church of Markle; of sundry citizens of Glenfield; of the Presbyterian Church of Hookstown; of Little Redstone Presbyterian Church of Kenneth, all in the State of Pennsylvania; and of the Presbyterian Church of Senecaville, Ohio, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of bankers of La Crosse, Wis., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of the Peoria (Ill.) County Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, praying for such governmental supervision of railroads as will prevent discrimination in passenger and freight charges; for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; for the passage of the pure-food bill; for the establishment of Government postal savings banks, and for the free and daily delivery of mail in the rural districts; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT presented a memorial of the German-American Central Verein, of Arapahoe County, Colo., remonstrating against the passage of legislation suspending immigration; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have just opened some mail I have received, and in it is a petition to Congress from A. B. Johnson and sundry other citizens residing in various parts of Missouri, praying for the repeal of the act closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday. It is one of the stereotyped printed petitions gotten up to express the burning sentiment of the people on a question of that kind. I move that the petition be referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold in my hand sundry other petitions, all in the same printed form, praying for the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday. Four of these petitions were orginally addressed to Hon. JOHN C. TARSNEY, a member of Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri, and his name has been erased and mine substituted, so that it is addressed to "Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, member of Congress," etc. Two of the petitions were originally addressed to Hon. SETH W. COBB, a member from St. Louis, and his name has been erased and mine inserted. Then three of the petitions were addressed originally to Hon. JOHN J. O'NEILL, a member of Congress from St. Louis, and his name has been erased and mine inserted. We are expected to be wonderfully moved by expressions of sentiment from our constituents in that form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be noted and referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select), as follows:

A petition of Kansas City (Mo.) Lodge No. 4 of the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association;

A petition of Tailors' Union No. 64, of Kansas City, Mo.;

A petition of Kansas City (Mo.) Lodge No. 92, International Association of Machinists;

A petition of Big Four Lodge No. 337, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Kansas City, Mo.;

A petition of International Union No. 2, of the Machine Woodworkers of St. Louis, Mo.;

A petition of the Upholsterers' Union, of St. Louis, Mo.;

A petition of the Tin, Sheet-iron, and Cornice Workers, of St. Louis, Mo.;

A petition of the American Waiters and Bartenders' Union No. 20, of St. Louis, Mo.; and

A petition of the German Progressive Waiters and Barkeepers' Union, of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. FRYE. I present a petition that really means business. I present a petition of bankers and business men of the city of Portland, Me., praying for the immediate discontinuance of the purchase of silver under the so-called Sherman act. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POWER presented petitions of officers and members of Local Union, No. 112, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Butte City, Mont., and of citizens of Helena, Butte City, Anaconda, Deer Lodge, Garrison, Missoula, Walkerville, Lewistown, Virginia City, Maiden, Sheridan, Deerfield, Marysville, Utica, Craig, Cottonwood, Philipsburg, and Stanford, all in the State of Montana, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Trades Council, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Peoria County, Ill., praying for the Government supervision of railroads; the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; the Paddock pure-food bill; the Government postal-savings bank bill, and the free and daily delivery of postal matter to farmers and other rural residents; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Elburn, Ill., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of citizens of Edgar and Cumberland Counties, in the State of Illinois, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain existing between millers, railroads, and elevators; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Grand Forks, N. Dak., praying for the establishment of a permanent national timber reservation to include the Turtle Mountain region in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Presbyterian Synod of North Dakota, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of J. D. Vail, M. T. Jacobson, S. Friswold, R. L. Hill, and 100 other citizens of Forman, N. Dak., praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 535) to provide for the construction of a public building at Baker City, Oregon, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, reported four amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry-civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3521) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, have directed me to report the same adversely and to ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed for the reason that the committee have already reported favorably a House bill substantially the same as the bill now reported adversely.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 988) for the relief of Mrs. Emilie M. Ferriere, widow and representative of Louis L. Ferriere, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, the amendment making an appropriation for the purpose of condemning or purchasing the ground needed to extend and open Thirty-seventh street, between Back street and Tennallytown road, at or near Schneider lane, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. VEST, from the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3522) to create a bureau in the Department of Agriculture for the giving public information of the production and shipping of live stock, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6797) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahaba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1954) for the relief of Lewis D. Allen, to report it adversely. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from Oregon has done exactly right. I am very glad to know he has reported the bill adversely.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and ask that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules of the Senate the report will be printed, notwithstanding it is adverse. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3520) for the relief of Jason Wheeler, late United States Indian agent at Warm Springs Agency, Oregon, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

Mr. FRYE. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3727) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided for." As it is important that the bill shall become a law at this session of Congress, I ask that it may receive present consideration. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. HARRIS. Subject to objection.

The bill was read; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the navigation of the Missouri River shall not be obstructed by false works during the construction of the bridge.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall be null and void if construction of said bridge shall not be commenced on or before the 1st day of January, 1892, and be completed on or before the 1st day of July, 1898: Provided, That the navigation of the Missouri River shall not be obstructed by false works during the construction of the bridge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARREARAGES OF DISTRICT TAXES.

Mr. HUNTON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3383) to amend the act of May 6, 1890, fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia, to report it with a favorable recommendation, and I am further instructed unanimously by the committee to ask the consent of the Senate to put the bill upon its passage. It is an important matter which has been indorsed by the District Commissioners and the bill is unanimously reported by the District Committee.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons whose property was involved in suits of law, or where minors were owners at the time the arrearages of taxes were received at 6 per cent and penalties off, may, within six months from the date of passage of this bill, have the privilege of paying said arrearages of taxes up to July 1, 1892, with remission of penalties, and interest to be computed at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TABERNACLE SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. VANCE. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3690) to incorporate the Tabernacle Society of the District of Columbia, to report it favorably, with an amendment, and I ask that it be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas J. Kervock, Mrs. C. H. L. Coues, Mrs. Florence S. Vance, Mrs. Kate R. Mann, Miss Fannie Whelan, and Miss Rafael Acosta, and their associates and successors, are hereby constituted a body politic and corporate by the name of the Tabernacle Society of the District of Columbia, with power to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have perpetual succession; to acquire, take by devise, bequest, or otherwise, hold, purchase, encumber, and convey such real and personal estate as shall be required for the purpose of its incorporation; to make and use a common seal, and the same to alter at pleasure; to choose a board of trustees consisting of not more than fifteen, of whom five shall constitute a quorum to do business, and which board shall be authorized to fill any vacancies in their number; to appoint such officers and agents as the business of the corporation shall require, and to make by-laws for the accomplishment of its purposes, for the management of its property, and for the regulation of its affairs.

SEC. 2. That this act may be amended or repealed at any time by the Congress in its pleasure.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina what is the object of the bill? The bill gives unlimited power to this corporation to hold and acquire real and personal estate; there is no limit to the amount: and there is no object specified in the bill for which the association is organized.

Mr. VANCE. I will state that the object is specified; but not in the bill as it was read by the Secretary. The object is to furnish vestments and sacred vessels to poor churches.

Mr. COCKRELL. That object is not specified in the bill as printed. My attention was directed to the bill, and I had a copy of it on my desk and made a memorandum upon it.

Mr. VANCE. The bill was amended by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the bill is reported with an amendment. It was read as introduced; but there is an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the amendment, then.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill had better be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VANCE. I will take this opportunity to state that the bill was changed by the printer. The object of the association was expressly stipulated and set forth in the original bill, and the printer, by what authority I do not know, drew his pen through it, which forced us again to amend the bill in the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "Columbia," insert:

An association to provide vestments and sacred vessels to poor churches,

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KILLING OF FRANK RILEY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back favorably a resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] calling for information from the State Department, and to recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL December 6, 1892, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be and he hereby is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, copies of all correspondence on file in the Department of State, if any, relating to the alleged killing of Frank Riley, an American sailor of the United States steamship Newark, in Genoa, Italy, in August or September last.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest that the resolution be put on its passage, if the Senator from Ohio has no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution, by consent of the chairman of the committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HEATON'S "RECALL OF COLUMBUS."

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 134) authorizing the exhibition, at the World's Columbian Exposition, of the picture entitled "The Recall of Columbus," by Augustus G. Heaton, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it be immediately placed on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on the Library was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he hereby is, authorized to loan to the Department of State the picture in the Capitol entitled "The Recall of Columbus," by Augustus G. Heaton, for exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the loan, for exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition, of the picture entitled 'The Recall of Columbus,' by Augustus G. Heaton."

POTOMAC AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 133) instructing the Secretary of War to cause an examination to be made of the piers of the Aqueduct bridge, and the District Commissioners to furnish a statement of expenditures on account of said bridge since it became the joint property of the United States and the District of Columbia, to report a Senate resolution as a substitute for the joint resolution, and I am likewise instructed by the committee to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution, in the absence of objection, will be indefinitely postponed. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate resolution which is reported as a substitute.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

A resolution instructing the Secretary of War to cause an examination to be made of the piers of the Aqueduct bridge, and the District Commissioners to furnish a statement of expenditures on account of said bridge since it became the joint property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Whereas by the annual report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1889, it is made to appear that the masonry composing the piers of the Aqueduct bridge was largely in need of repair and at least one of the piers thereof had settled 4 inches to the north, and large cavities caused by erosion existed in more than one of said piers, and that a large sum of money was expended in the repair of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be made a thorough examination of the piers of said bridge by some competent officer of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, and report to Congress at an early day—

First. If any one of said piers of said bridge has so settled as to be out of plumb; and, if so, which way it leans.

Second. What cavities, if any, exist in any of the piers of said bridge requiring repairs or in any way impairing the supporting capacity of said piers, or either of them, making specific report of defects, if any, in each pier.

Third. That he transmit a copy of the report of the officer of the Engineer Corps charged with the duty of constructing the piers of the said bridge, showing as minutely as may be the plans and processes used in the construction thereof.

And be it further resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be required to transmit to Congress a detailed report of any and all expenses incurred in the repair of the piers of said bridge since the same became the joint property of the United States and the District of Columbia, and by whom said repairs, if any, were made, and under whose direction or supervision the same were made, and, as fully as may be practicable, a detailed account of the work of making the same, and a copy of the report of any officer of the District or employé thereof, engaged in the said work, or upon any part thereof, including a statement as to whether the said Commissioners have ever caused either or all of the piers of said bridge to be tested with plumb and level, or any other suitable instrument, to see if either or all of them, are out of plumb, and, if so, the result of such examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 20th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 118) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased; and

An act (S. 3195) granting to the Yuma Pumping Irrigation Company the right of way for two ditches across that part of the Yuma Indian Reservation lying in Arizona.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3743) granting a pension to Julia E. Lock, formerly widow of the late Gen. Daniel McCook; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3749) to place William H. Bailhache on the retired list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3750) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Perry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3751) granting a pension to John Hatcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 3752) for the relief of Mrs. Mattie S. Holland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 138) to recover the value of the Columbian souvenir coins in certain contingencies; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CAREY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report of date January 19, 1893, of the special agent of the Treasury Department, detailed under the act of March 2, 1889, to carry into effect the provisions of the laws pertaining to the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the decision mentioned in his communication to the Senate of the 3d instant, announced by the Court of Claims, that two specified classes of Indian depredation claims are entitled to priority of consideration under section 4 of the act of March 3, 1891.

SALE OF COLUMBIAN STAMPS.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to call up from the table a joint resolution which I introduced two days ago, instructing the Postmaster-General to continue the sale of the ordinary postage stamps, which have been used for years by the people of the United States, and to sell the Columbian postage stamps only to such people as may call for them, my object being to move a reference of the joint resolution to the appropriate committee.

I have been at a loss to understand why the Columbian stamps were ever manufactured. I find by referring to the annual report of the Postmaster-General—in which he asks, and very properly, for increased appropriations, appropriations aggregating some $80,000,000—that he expects to receive a million and a half dollars extra profit out of these stamps by selling them to stamp collectors. That is a trick which some of the little Central American States do sometimes. When they are short a few thousand dollars they get up a new stamp and sell it to stamp collectors all over the world, and get money for it. It seems to me, Mr. President, this is too great a country to subject 60,000,000 people to the inconvenience of using this big concern in order that we may unload a cruel and unusual stamp upon stamp collectors to file in their albums.

Since the joint resolution was introduced I have heard from a great many sources good reasons why the measure should be not only introduced, but carried. I have received letters from many railway clerks who say that the resemblance of the new 1-cent stamp to the special-delivery stamp is so marked that mistakes are constantly being made in spite of their vigilance. I have received a number of letters from manufacturers of small articles who advertise in the papers that on receipt of so many stamps they will send out the articles. They can not sell the stamps that they receive; they have to use them. On the ordinary small package, which requires four or five stamps, the small stamps would go upon it, but to put four or five of the great big new stamps upon it you have got to make a package to go through the mail two or three times the ordinary size, and therefore must use additional postage. I received a letter this morning from a physician who suggests that if the sale of the stamps is abandoned, those on hand might be properly used as chest-protectors. [Laughter.]

I trust the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will take some speedy action on the subject of discontinuing the use of these stamps, except to people who demand them, and nobody would demand them. If you go to a post-office now and ask for ordinary stamps, you can not buy them. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not put it on its passage?

Mr. HALE. Why does not the Senator ask the Senate to put the joint resolution on its passage?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because it is a joint resolution. I will state to the Senator from Maine that, in my ignorance, I supposed we could do that, but I am informed that it has to go to the committee, because the resolution is joint.

Mr. HARRIS. Not necessarily.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will ask unanimous consent to put the joint resolution on its passage.

Mr. SAWYER. I object. I ask for its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the joint resolution (S. R. 137) instructing the Postmaster-General to discontinue the sale of the so-called Columbian stamps be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 3117) relating to post traderships;

A bill (S. 3581) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes;" and

A joint resolution (S. R. 135) making appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1419) for the relief of Catharine Caine;

A bill (H. R. 5504) to permit the withdrawal of certain papers and the signing of certain receipts by John Finn or his attorney;

A bill (H. R. 9825) to establish companies of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10206) to ratify and confirm an agreement made between the Seneca Nation of Indians and William B. Barker;

A bill (H. R. 10042) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889; and

A bill (H. R. 10163) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2625) to provide for the punishment of offenses on the high seas;

A bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady;

A bill (S. 3580) to amend the proviso to be found in connection with the free-delivery service, page 569, twenty-fourth volume, Statutes at Large; and Joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 1419) for the relief of Catherine Caine; and

A bill (H. R. 9925) to establish companies of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, and for other purposes.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 10042) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889; and

A bill (H. R. 10163) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

The bill (H. R. 5504) to permit the withdrawal of certain papers and the signing of certain receipts by John Finn or his attorney was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 10206) to ratify and confirm an agreement made between the Seneca Nation of Indians and William Barker was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SOUTHERN KANSAS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the regular order may be laid aside for a moment in order that Senate bill 1948 may be considered. It will not take more than a minute or two. It is a bill of some importance.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the bill will not lead to debate, I shall not interpose an objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It will only take a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Southern Kansas Railway Company to construct and maintain a pipe line from the North Fork of the Canadian River, Indian Territory, to said railroad.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. VILAS, to strike out lines 2, 3, and 4 in the fourth section of the amendment proposed by Mr. GEORGE, in the words:

"Options" and "futures," as hereinbefore defined, are hereby declared to be obstructions to and restraints upon commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to be illegal and void; and.

So as to read:

SEC. 4. That if any person shall be a party, either as buyer or seller, to any contract or agreement hereinbefore defined as "options" or "futures," he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I rise with some embarrassment on Saturday evening, at a time when we generally adjourn and permit Senators to suspend the consideration of public business, for the purpose of further calling the attention of the Senate to the pending matter, about which I have already spoken more than I desired. If I were to consult my own judgment or my own feelings as to the necessity of again addressing the Senate, I should not again trespass upon their attention in submitting any remarks upon this bill or any of the amendments offered to it. I feel, and that feeling is based upon declarations made to me by Senators themselves, that the Senate is wearied with the discussion of this question.

I feel somewhat that I am speaking to Senators who have made up their minds as to the various questions involved in this bill, and who do not desire to hear anything more upon the subject. On the other hand, I am urged by some Senators who possibly have not been able to give the debates on this subject the attention which the remainder of us have to make some remarks additional to those I have made in support of the amendment which was proposed by me on behalf of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, composed of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and myself.

I feel, as has been expressed by Senators upon the other side of this question, that no more important subject for debate, for consideration, and for action, has come before the American Congress for the last quarter of a century. When I look at all the history of this bill, all the circumstances connected with it, all the proof which has been introduced before the committee of the Senate and the committee of the other House, that there is a practice, a dealing, what was called by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and very properly called, a mechanism which has so interwoven itself with the legitimate business of this country in cotton and in other agricultural products, I feel there is no effort I might properly make, which I ought not to make in order to afford the relief which the great mass of the farmers of this country expect the American Congress to give them.

Something has been said in this debate about Congress being influenced by popular clamor, about our being driven from our proprieties by the excited and mistaken feeling of the farmers of this country to undertake to do that which will not only not benefit, them, but will injure them if we succeed in our efforts in destroying dealings in futures. I am not quite sure, Mr. President, whether it is a proper designation of a call almost unanimous on the part of the agriculturists of this country to denominate it "popular clamor."

I am quite sure that that is not the proper term to bestow upon it. I have felt all along that expressions of that kind were calculated to disparage and bring into disrepute our representative system. Within the limits of the Constitution there is no motive known to me which ought to be weighed more carefully than an expression of the popular feeling upon any given measure before the American Congress. I have been taught to believe, not only by the precepts of the fathers, but by my own observation, that when there is a great popular demand for any particular measure, when there is a great and almost universal popular complaint of an existing evil, the American Congress before they shall disregard such a complaint ought to weigh carefully the circumstances and the evidence, to see whether that complaint is well founded or not.

I am one of those who believe that the common sense, the common observation, the common experience of the great mass of the citizens of this country is entitled to weight. I do not think that a large mass of American citizens, belonging to that intelligent and conservative class who till the soil, are easily misled, either as to an evil which they feel or as to the remedy by which they propose to remove that evil.

I find that quite recently there have been actions on the part not only of voluntary associations of American farmers, lodges, granges, conventions, who have spoken their will in reference to this matter, but there have been actions taken by responsible bodies, Legislatures of the States. I hold in my hand a memorandum handed to me by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] this morning, containing a list of the States which have solemnly passed resolutions asking the American Congress to pass a law to suppress dealings in futures.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator mean Legislatures?

Mr. GEORGE. Legislatures, organized bodies, bodies commissioned by the people of their respective States in an orderly and constitutional way to express their views upon the subject. In that list I find the Legislatures of the States of Iowa, of Minnesota, of Wisconsin—if I have not been misinformed. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if I have?

Mr. VILAS. I am unable to inform the Senator from Mississippi, for I have no other information than what he himself has.

Mr. GEORGE. I get my information from the Senator from Minnesota. In this list I also find the Legislatures of Ohio, of Georgia, of Arkansas, and of South Carolina.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Arkansas told me this morning that whilst one house of the Legislature of Arkansas had passed such a resolution, the other had rejected it.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; then one house in Arkansas is separated from the other on this question. I understand that some other States perhaps have acted. Leaving out Arkansas, we have six great States of the American Republic who in the last few days, after the learned, the able, and the exhaustive debate which has taken place on this measure has gone out to the country and been considered by it have petitioned and memorialized us to pass a measure like that now before the American Senate, and one State divided. I understand there are some other States which have acted, the names of which I do not recollect. In view of the well-known and well-ascertained sentiments of the agricultural class of this country we ought at least to inquire carefully before we defeat this legislation.

The amendment offered by me in behalf of the minority of the Judiciary Committee is now the particular matter to be discussed. It is assailed upon the ground that it is a gross usurpation of power on the part of the Federal Government, that it is an invasion by us of the reserved rights of the States. It becomes my duty to show, as far as I may show, that that assumption is not well founded. It is possible, even at this late day, that the great question of fact which lies at the foundation of this legislation and which, according to the amendment, undertaken to be decided by the American Senate, should be alluded to in brief terms. I have discussed that fact on two occasions before.

I confined my remarks to cotton, because I knew that Senators representing the wheat-growing States were entirely competent to represent their interests. The evidence which I have adduced and pressed upon the attention of the Senate and discussed fully on former occasions, settles the great fact, which this amendment asserts is true, and that is, that such dealings as now carried on constitute an obstruction to interstate and foreign commerce. Who will deny it? The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who has upon two occasions made carefully prepared written arguments in opposition to this bill, did not in either of them deny the great fact which constitutes the foundation of the amendment, that these dealings did affect interstate and foreign commerce. It was true, he said, that such dealings affected them remotely and indirectly, but the great fact is admitted that these dealings do constitute an interference with and an obstruction to interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. I have not perhaps been as attentive to the previous stages of this debate as I should have been, but I have read carefully both the speeches of the Senator from Mississippi, the one he made last summer and the one delivered at this session, and I have listened to the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] on the point which the Senator from Mississippi is now discussing—that dealings in futures are, as he says, obstructions to interstate commerce, and as to which he says there has been a great deal of evidence adduced.

I now ask, if it is not asking too much of the Senator, to point out what evidence before the committee or before the Senate goes to show, not that these dealings affect interstate commerce, as he said just now, but that these dealings are really obstructions to interstate commerce? For one, I have not yet been brought to a knowledge of anything in the evidence which would cause me to admit that fact.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator read the evidence?

Mr. GRAY. I have read the evidence as quoted by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, I have no more to add. If the evidence which I have already produced to the Senate, taken from the report of the committee, does not establish that dealings in futures are an interference with and an obtruction to interstate commerce, then I am unable to make out that proposition.

Mr. GRAY. Of course I do not want to dictate the line of argument which the Senator shall pursue, but, if it does not disturb him, I should like to say a word.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. In this very important matter, as I said, I have not been brought to admit by anything I have yet seen that these dealings are obstructions, nor do I know that anybody opposed to this bill admits that they are obstructions. However that may be, of course I can not state, but what I want to know is, if there is any body of evidence which goes directly to the point—I do not mean merely evidence of certain dealings and speculations in futures, as in the case of a large amount of cotton and other products bought and not intended to be delivered, for we have evidence enough of that, I admit—is there any evidence which goes to show that these dealings, such as they are and have been described, actually obstruct commerce between the States?

Mr. GEORGE. Before I answer that I should like to ask the Senator a question. Would he regard the practice, which is made out by the evidence showing that these dealings do habitually interfere with and reduce the price of the great staple, cotton, as an interference with interstate commerce?

Mr. GRAY. No, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Then I can not argue with the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. Then the contention of the Senator is that the reduction of the price, which he alleges is a consequence of these dealings, is of itself an obstruction?

Mr. GEORGE. I assert that this artificial interference with and reduction of the price of cotton sold in interstate and foreign commerce by these dealings is that kind of interference with and obstruction of interstate commerce which not only authorizes but requires us to enact legislation to suppress it.

Mr. GRAY. Then, Mr. President, it is the judgment of the Senator from Mississippi that these things do present obstructions to interstate commerce, though he has not adduced any evidence of the fact that they do.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] yield to me a moment to ask the Senator from Delaware a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the Senator from Delaware what is his definition of commerce?

Mr. GRAY. I think I can define it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like the Senator to do so.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator wants me to answer now, I will do the best I can.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to have the answer of the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. "Commerce," as I understand it, so far as it has been defined by the decisions of the Supreme Court, outside of which I shall not myself venture to travel, is a word which indicates in the first place the movement of commodities between parties who are dealing in them, and it includes, as Chief Justice Marshall has said, several elements, one of which, notably, as decided in the celebrated case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, is navigation, and as far as interstate commerce goes traffic in regard to and the movement of commodities from one State into another; and the contracts out of which that traffic grows are a part of or an element of interstate commerce. Further than that, I do not know that I can define "commerce" more than the courts have sought to define it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I find the common acceptation and definition of the term in Webster's Dictionary among others is "to carry on trade; to traffic."

The Chicago Board of Trade every day artificially makes prices, whereby the price of wheat in Minnesota, Iowa, and the Dakotas is affected. I ask whether that does not interfere with the trade or traffic in wheat?

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator wish me to answer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and, if so, to which of the Senators does he yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to anybody.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon. I merely wanted to ask the Senator from Minnesota this question: Suppose he goes a little further, to another subject, and finds that through a board of trade or something else the price is increased, as in the case of pork, which has gone up to $19 a barrel?

Mr. WASHBURN. That would depend on whether it has any relation to the question of interference with commerce.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to contend that the operations in the boards of trade put down the price.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I must object to being taken off the floor.

Mr. GRAY. Then the Senator does not wish me to answer.

Mr. GEORGE. I must object to turning this into a general debate; but I am very willing to hear the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish the Senator to do so unless he is willing.

Mr. GEORGE. I am willing the Senator should ask his question, but I do not want this to be turned into a general debate by which I shall be taken off the floor. The Senator may answer the question.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator, assuming that the prices of grain are increased or artificially made, as he says, by a board of trade in Chicago, whether he thinks that presents an obstruction to interstate commerce?

Mr. WASHBURN. I said an interference with commerce, which brings it then under the clause of the Constitution as to the regulation of commerce.

Mr. GRAY. But the commerce provision in the Constitution refers to interstate and foreign commerce, and not to commerce generally, and all that we are concerned with here necessarily is with interstate commerce. I believe the Senator from Mississippi will not contend that commerce generally is within the purview of the grant of power in the commerce clause. It is interstate commerce, foreign commerce, and commerce with the Indian tribes with which we have to deal.

Now, I say the fact assumed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] that dealings on the boards of trade affect prices artificially does not, in my opinion, affect the commerce of the country between the States in the sense in which that phrase is used in the Constitution. The price of an article, whether it be high or low, does not affect the freedom or the want of freedom of its movement or the freedom of contracting for the movement of that article. In fact, a low price, which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] contends is made by these boards of trade, may increase the volume of interstate commerce very much, for a very low price would naturally induce a larger number of people to deal in the article in question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish that clearly understood. Of course there is a fundamental difference between the Senator from Delaware and myself if he contends, as I understand him to contend, that no artificial arrangement by boards of trade or otherwise which habitually reduces the prices of the agricultural products of this country which go into interstate and foreign commerce is an obstruction or an interference which we are authorized to remove; if he asserts that proposition then we are at the antipodes to each other on that question.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator indulge me for one moment?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, for I want this matter understood.

Mr. GRAY. I said that that was my judgment; but the proposition with which we are concerned here, or with which I feel myself concerned as a Senator, sworn to observe the Constitution in the exercise of my legislative functions, is whether the contracts which are admitted to be within the power of the States to legalize and control as belonging to the internal commerce of the States can be declared under the commerce clause of the Constitution by Congress obstructions to commerce. So far as I can see that is all we have to deal with now.

Mr. GEORGE. That is further on. The first proposition to settle is, whether the acts of men interposed between the producer and the consumer which do reduce the price to the American producer of his products are an interference with or an obstruction to interstate commerce? If the Senator disputes that, then I should like to ask him or anybody who does dispute it, for what purpose is the power granted to Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce if it be not for the purpose of facilitating commerce, so that without artificial obstructions or natural obstructions, or any other obstructions, the American producer may get the most that the article which he produces can bring in the market?

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, I do. If that be denied, if it be denied that the power of Congress does not extend to increasing the profits of the American producer, then I should like to know the benefit to come to the American people from an exercise of the power to regulate commerce.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the Senator has suggested and brought into consideration in the last sentence a matter which did not belong, as I conceive, to his question as he originally stated it. He asks now whether the right of Congress to interfere in order to make the production of the articles that may enter into interstate commerce more profitable is not within the purview of the commerce clause of the Constitution. I say decidedly no, so far as my judgment is concerned; but I repeat again that I am not concerned with that question now. It may be that in my judgment the contracts made on boards of trade, by which the Senator says prices are artificially fixed, do not injuriously affect the volume or the profitableness of interstate commerce.

That may be my judgment, but nevertheless those contracts, if they pertain to interstate commerce, I might be prepared to admit are within the purview of Congress under the commerce clause to regulate. The proposition, however, that I am really anxious about and want to hear discussed is whether those contracts which do not refer to interstate commerce, which may be carried on within the State, which belong to that mass of legislation which Chief Justice Marshall said undoubtedly belonged to the States exclusively, can be regulated under the power granted to Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am afraid the ingenuity of my friend from Delaware is too much for me on this occasion. He started out in this matter with the fundamental inquiry whether arrangements made by men acting as individuals, or as corporations, or as boards of trade, which do habitually and uniformly reduce the profits of the American producer in relation to articles which are to go and must go into interstate and foreign commerce, are such an interference by artificial means as authorizes the Congress to legislate for the purpose of removing these obstructions, so that the American producer may get the natural normal price for his products occasioned by the rule of demand and supply? If that be denied, then I should like to know from the Senator from Delaware, or from any other Senator, for what beneficial purpose was the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States granted to the American Congress?

Mr. GRAY. I can suggest one.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. GRAY. While I consider the question the Senator is discussing a very interesting one, and did in fact ask him what evidence there was that these contracts or dealings did affect the volume or the profitableness of interstate commerce, yet except so far as they concern interstate commerce directly or foreign commerce, I said that I conceived that they did not pertain to the grant of power made by the States to the Congress of the United States.

But I can answer in part the question last asked by the Senator from Mississippi by suggesting that the power to regulate interstate commerce may be of great value to the people of the country in that it gives Congress the right to secure, for instance, the freedom of exchange and barter in the commodities of the several States or farm products which go to make up the matters and things which are useful for the everyday living of the people; and the commerce itself, inasmuch as it puts within the grasp of the individual a greater range of profit, is a useful thing to the civilization of the country, and its effect is useful to the individual, it increases his power, increases the practicability of his carrying on the processes of production in the very fact that the exchange is more or less increased. I believe that according to the Constitution under which we are now living the States should not be permitted to restrict that sort of commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator agrees with me that the object of the grant of power to Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations was to give us a free commerce, a free interchange of commodities. Now, I might go a step further, and ask him this—and this is the very gist of the case—what benefit is it to have commerce free when the profits of the laborers who produce the articles of commerce are so diminished by artificial arrangements that that production becomes unprofitable? That is the question—what do we want with free commerce? Is it merely to say that it is free? Is it merely to have a pretty word of the English language introduced by saying that we claim free commerce, or is it that commerce may be so conducted unrestricted, uninterfered with, and uninfluenced by artificial arrangements that all parties to that commerce may get the best results from it to themselves?

Mr. GRAY. I take it, if the Senator will permit me, that those who framed that clause took it for granted that what has been proved by the experience of mankind had not ceased to be true, that commerce would exist so long as there was a profit in it, and no longer; and if commerce exists at all between the States or elsewhere, it is because somebody is finding a profit in it, those who export——

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator to stop right there.

Mr. GRAY. No, I will not stop right there.

It is because somebody is finding a profit in it, those who export as well as those who import; and unless there was a reasonable expectation of profit on both sides it would not exist at all. It is because of that universal instinct of mankind to trade, and that that trading has shown itself to be a blessing to the people who engage in it, that the Constitution of the United States, as written by its wise framers, enabled the General Government to so regulate commerce that they might prevent restrictions in the exchange and movement of commodities from one place to another.

Mr. GEORGE. That, as I understand it, is so that the production of the American worker, which furnishes the subject of commerce, may be the more profitable. Is that so?

Mr. GRAY. Why, Mr. President, I take it that all the indirect and diffuse benefits which flow from commerce and spread among the people were in the mind of those who framed the Constitution, but that they expected that the benefits which would naturally fall from controlling the thing itself in the interest of freedom was enough for them, without going out into the thousand ramifications of commerce itself and the benefits which it bestows upon the people and attempting to interfere with or by law to control those indirect and remote consequences of commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. The "indirect and remote consequences of commerce" are the profits of commerce; they are the main objects for which commerce was introduced; they are the main objects for which production is made. Now, what does the Senator gain when he says we want free commerce, if he can not show that restricted and obstructed commerce is more profitable to this country than free commerce? What is the object of this grant of power by the Constitution to Congress, to make commerce less profitable or more profitable? Was it the object of this grant to Congress to make the productions of the American people which enter into and become the subjects of interstate and foreign commerce, more profitable or less profitable?

Mr. GRAY. That is a matter of judgment, as I said awhile ago, and my judgment is that the dealings which the Senator denounces do not affect the price of the articles at all or the profitableness of the commerce. Suppose the Senator is right and that they do; then I might say that so far as the objects and transactions of interstate or foreign commerce are concerned, we have the right to deal with them; but the proposition then which we come back to, and with which I consider myself concerned here, is whether we have a right to deal with other transactions which do not refer to interstate or foreign commerce.

The other question which the Senator is arguing is an interesting one, as I said awhile ago, but it does not pertain to the constitutional question which has been my sole thought and my sole trouble in this case. It may or it may not be that a protective tariff increases the profits of commerce between this country and countries abroad; it may be that the prohibitions in a protective tariff affect disastrously the commerce of this country; it is my opinion that in many cases they do; but there is no doubt in my mind of the jurisdiction of Congress in regard to that matter. I say that is an interesting question concerning the economics of the country, concerning the great questions of trade and general commerce, but it does not concern the question of power with which I conceive we are alone dealing now, and on which I should like to hear the Senator from Mississippi discourse.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that I understand the precise position taken by the Senator from Delaware. A little while ago I understood him to say he wanted free commerce——

Mr. GRAY. And I say so now.

Mr. GEORGE. That freedom of commerce was the object of the Constitution in making this grant to Congress; then I put to him the question, what good does free commerce do us, except on the idea that it is more profitable?

Mr. GRAY. More profitable to whom?

Mr. GEORGE. Profitable to all concerned; not to the dealers alone, not to the producers alone, but to the whole people.

Mr. GRAY. Awhile ago the Senator said the producers alone.

Mr. GEORGE. Profitable to the whole of them. That is the issue which I made with the Senator in the very beginning. I asked him to either affirm or deny what I will show and have heretofore shown, that an artificial, unnecessary combination, by which trade in cotton is controlled in this country—the Senator does not admit that, but I will show that it is so controlled—so as to depress the price of cotton was a thing which was the subject of interstate commerce and within the control of Congress under the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. I asked him whether that power was granted for the purpose of making commerce and production more advantageous to the people of this country or less advantageous?

Was it a beneficial grant of power for the good of the American people, or was it a mere grant to have something done, which according to the theories of certain gentlemen about political economy, was a nice thing to have done? If Congress can not interfere for the purpose of making, in the regulation of commerce, the products of the American farmer, three-fourths of which go into interstate and foreign commerce, more profitable to him, I should like to know what interest the American producer, who constitutes more than one-half of the American people, has in the exercise of that power by the American Congress?

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator answer me a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer any question I can, and when I can not answer it I will say that I can not.

Mr. GRAY. It would be a very hard question that the Senator could not answer.

The Senator says that in his opinion Congress has jurisdiction to make by legislation the products which are described in the pending bill more profitable to the producer.

Mr. GEORGE. No, I did not say that.

Mr. GRAY. That is my understanding of what the Senator said.

Mr. GEORGE. I said that if there existed anything, whether in the shape of a physical obstruction to interstate and foreign commerce, or whether in the shape of combinations of men which interposed between the producer and the consumer, by which, as the direct result of that action, the profits of the American producer were reduced, that was a matter which was the subject of interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. The question which I wished to ask was, if the Senator should find, as a matter of fact, that such dealings as have been described or other things should serve to enhance the price of commodities raised by the farmer so as to enhance the cost of living to the great laboring masses of the country, who are not engaged in their production, does he think that Congress ought to interfere in the interest of those great masses, fully one-half of the people of the country, in order that the price might be lowered?

I wish to ask the Senator a further question, if he will permit me to ask him two questions at once which relate to the same subject. Does he think that because a big cotton crop depresses prices Congress has the right to pass a law restricting its culture in order to decrease the crop and thus raise the price?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has no right to ask such a question as that. Of course I do not believe in any such folly.

But, Mr. President, the Senator seems to think that the interest of consumers is to be considered by Congress when the question is whether we will remove an obstruction to commerce which depresses the price of agricultural products. Let us see whether the Senator is right about that or not. For what purpose do we remove physical obstructions to navigation?

If the Senator's argument is correct, it might be said that when, for instance, the falls at the city of Louisville or the falls in the Tennessee River, in the State of Alabama, called the Muscle Shoals, form an obstruction which it is proposed to remove, we ought not to do it, because the wheat and coal and iron which are produced on the upper parts of the Ohio and the Tennessee Rivers will have an outlet and go into general commerce, and by adding more competition and more buyers the price of the products in the community where they are produced is raised, and if we remove the obstructions we increase the cost of those articles in the community in which they are produced above what it was before. That seems to be the Senator's argument. Now, my idea about that is, that the object of the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States is neither to depress nor to lower the natural, normal price of our products.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, it is manifest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present. There are very few here to listen to the able and instructive speech of the Senator from Mississippi. I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama suggests the absence of a quorum, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dixon,	Irby,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dubois,	Jones, Ark.,	Shoup,
Berry,	Frye,	Kyle,	Squire,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Butler,	George,	Mills,	Stockbridge,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Turpie,
Call,	Gordon,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Carey,	Gray,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Washburn,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Platt,	White,
Coke,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Quay,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present, and the Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I believe, taking all things into consideration, as it is Saturday evening, and so on, if it is agreeable to the Senate to adjourn, I would rather proceed on Monday morning. If not, I will go on now.

Mr. STEWART. Of course we ought to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 23, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 21, 1893.

PENSION AGENT.

Sidney L. Willson, of Washington, D. C., to be pension agent at Washington, D. of C., whose term of office will expire January 21, 1893.

PAYMASTER IN THE ARMY.

Elijah W. Halford, of Indiana, to be paymaster with the rank of major, January 10, 1893, vice Canby, nominated for promotion.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Corp. Orrin R. Wolfe, Company H, Fourteenth Infantry, to be second lieutenant, to rank from November 19, 1892.

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY.

Passed Assistant Engineer Julien S. Ogden, to be a chief engineer in the Navy from January 17, 1893, vice Chief Engineer Charles A. Baker, retired.

POSTMASTERS.

William Stanley, to be postmaster at Plainfield, in the county of Hendricks and State of Indiana, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1893.

Joseph M. Tomlinson, to be postmaster at Alexandria, in the county of Madison and State of Indiana, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1893.

Mrs. Ida A. Blanchard, to be postmaster at Millville, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after April 1, 1892.

Michael Huiras, to be postmaster at Springfield, in the county of Brown and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1893.

Grovenor D. McCubrey, to be postmaster at Barnesville, in the county of Clay and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1893.

Peter A. Peterson, to be postmaster at Cannon Falls, in the county of Goodhue and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1893.

Seth W. Collins, to be postmaster at McComb, in the county of Pike and State of Mississippi, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1893.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 21, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

J. M. BELL, J. S. COOK, DECEASED, AND WILLIAM YORK, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House copies of findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of J. M. Bell, J. S. Cook, deceased, and William York, deceased, against the United States; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTED IN AID OF CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3581) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes."

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act upon the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company between Wallula, Wash., and Portland, Oregon, shall be permitted to purchase the same in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section to January 1, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. BRETZ. I would like to hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. MCRAE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10249) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," approved September 29, 1890, beg leave to report:

It is shown by memorial resolutions unanimously passed by the Legislature of Oregon, that great distress prevails among the people who are entitled, until February 3 next, to purchase lands under the forfeiture act approved September 29, 1890, and it is alleged that by reason of successive failures of crops during the past three years these people are unable to make payment of the purchase price of the lands to which they are entitled until they have the advantage of the present year's crops. Some of these lands are improved and under cultivation, and your committee believe it is just that an extension of time should be had for the balance of this year in order that the settlers may have additional time for payment, and therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERMANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORT CUMMINGS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1710) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from sale certain land in the abandoned Fort Cummings military reservation, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to withdraw from sale so much of the land of the abandoned Fort Cummings military reservation, in the Territory of New Mexico, as may be necessary to secure perpetually for public use the spring upon said reservation; the land to be reserved as aforesaid to embrace not only that upon which the spring is situated, but such other portions for right of way as may be necessary to secure to the public the right to have all the advantages of the spring aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company a license to so much of the water of said spring as may be necessary for the operation of the road of said company, and to grant to said company a right of way for a pipe from said spring to the road of said company by the most direct line; to be located under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That said right of way shall not exceed 40 feet in width, and when the same is located the land covered by the right of way shall be withdrawn from entry, and after due appraisal shall be paid for by said company and be dedicated to the right of way aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That the license aforesaid shall continue as long as the existence thereof may be deemed not injurious to the public interest by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall at all times have the right to regulate the quantity of water to be used by said company, so as not to deprive the public of the benefits of the dedication to public use hereinabove made. Upon the cessation of the license the right of way for the pipe line aforesaid shall revert to the United States, upon refunding by the United States the sum of the appraised price thereof which may have been paid to the United States by said company under the previous provisions of this act, and Congress reserves the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report read, or an explanation made of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. AMERMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1710) to reserve from sale certain land in the abandoned Fort Cummings military reservation, report.

Your committee report the bill favorably, adopting the report of the Senate committee thereon, as follows:

"The bill referred to your committee proposed selling to the railroad the spring on the Fort Cummings military reservation. While the proof before your committee indicated the advisability of allowing the railroad to use the spring, your committee thought it best not to deprive the public of the use of the water by making a sale thereof to the railroad. Your committee has consequently amended the bill by allowing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a license to the railroad to use the water, at the same time preserving the use of the spring for public purposes. The bill as amended seems to your committee to fully protect the interests of the public and at the same time give the railroad a license to use such water as may be necessary for its purposes, the whole under the control of the proper Department of the Government."

The company has used a portion of the water of the spring under military license, has improved the same by putting in necessary pumping apparatus, and the military forces used the water thus developed until the military occupation was abandoned. The company has since used the water in supplying its trains, and as the road is a part of a transcontinental system (the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe), continuance of such use, under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and shared with the public, seems to your committee to be fully justified by the necessities of the situation and sound public policy.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Mexico how much land is reserved, or how much they intend to reserve?

Mr. JOSEPH. It is only intended to reserve the land immediately around the spring. It is a small spring, which can never be utilized for agriculture.

Mr. BRETZ. Then it is not a mineral spring?

Mr. JOSEPH. It is not a mineral spring.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Mexico a question. It seems from the reading of the report that the railroad already uses that spring, under military license.

Mr. JOSEPH. They have been using it for several years.

Mr. WATSON. Why is that not sufficient?

Mr. JOSEPH. They want to continue the use of the spring as they have heretofore. This is an abandoned military reservation that is to be sold by proclamation, and, therefore, they want to reserve this spring from sale.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that bill ought to specify the amount of ground, at least, reserved from sale.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JOSEPH. It is not more than an acre in extent.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And the Secretary of the Interior will not reserve more than is necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. WATSON. I object.

OKLAHOMA MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10146) to authorize the Oklahoma Midland Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone lines through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the further reading of this bill be dispensed with. It is a very lengthy bill, and simply embodies all the regulations prescribed by the Department for these right-of-way bills passed here.

Mr. PEEL. I can state to the House that I have examined the bill and it does comply with all the requirements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York, to dispense with the further reading of the bill?

Mr. TRACEY. I will have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SIMPSON. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that bill lie over until the next legislative day; that it may be printed in the RECORD, and that we may have a chance to examine it. It is a very long bill, and I for one, would like to have a chance to look it over.

Mr. PEEL. I have no particular objection to that; but I can state that it is exactly like all other right-of-way bills that have been passed within the last four or five years.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the bill is printed and is in the document room, accessible to members; and I object to the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PEEL. I would state to the gentleman from Kansas that it is precisely and perfectly in the form of all other right-of-way bills that we have been passing here for the last five or six years, and contains all the restrictions and limitations that have been put upon all the bills granting rights of way to railroads that have been built through the Indian Territory.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask that the bill be laid over until the next legislative day.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House. The question is whether the House will agree that the bill may be printed in the RECORD, and objection has been made.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then I will have to object to consideration.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CATHERINE CAINE.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, being the bill (H. R. 1419) for the relief of Catherine Caine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Catherine Caine, widow of the late Rev. Charles Caine, the pay and allowances of a chaplain in the volunteer service, from the 10th day of December, 1861, to March, 1863, the said Charles Caine having served as such chaplain in the organization known as Yates's Sharpshooters, Illinois Volunteers, during the time mentioned, under a commission issued by Richard Yates, governor of the State of Illinois, without pay

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. DOLLIVER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1419) for the relief of Catharine Caine, submit the following report:

This measure was considered by this committee during the Fifty-first Congress, and was reported upon favorably, which report is appended as a part of this report.

Your committee concur in the conclusions stated in that report and recommend the passage or the bill.

[House Report No. 3815, Fifty-first Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10800) for the relief of Catharine Caine, submit the following report:

This bill is for the payment to the widow of the late Rev. Charles Caine a sum equal to the salary and allowances of chaplain in the volunteer service from December 10, 1861, to March, 1863. The records of the War Department show that Rev. Charles Caine was commissioned as chaplain of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteers (also designated Yates's Sharpshooters) to rank from December 10, 1861, but that as the battalion only consisted of six companies, and the War Department is only authorized to allow compensation to a chaplain for an entire regiment, he could not be mustered in. The records show him present for duty from date of commission, December 10, 1861, to July 31, 1862, and from that date to February 28, 1863, report him "absent in Illinois to make some arrangements to draw pay." The roll for March, 1863, says:

"Chaplain Caine was not recognized, a battalion not being entitled to one; dropped from rolls by order of Maj. Gen. Hurlbut."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether under existing law the Secretary of War can not allow this claim?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman that in this case there was an organization of soldiers formed in the State of Illinois known as the Yates Sharpshooters, and the governor appointed this gentleman, Mr. Caine, chaplain and so commissioned him; I hold the commission in my hand. Supposing that he was properly appointed, he entered upon his duties and served as stated in the report, but there were only six companies of the organization, and the military authorities ultimately declined to muster him in, on the ground that there was not a sufficient number of men in the organization to entitle it to a chaplain.

Mr. BRETZ. How much money does this bill carry?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. With the amendment which I propose to offer, it will carry, I think, in the neighborhood of about $700 or $800. This gentleman was twice as long in the service as the amendment provides for, but a portion of the time he was absent trying to get his pay. During the time covered by my amendment, however, he was actually with the command; that is, from December, 1861, until July, 1862. The bill as it stands would give him pay until 1863.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman whether this is a bill that could come up at the Friday evening sessions?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. It is not.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the amendment which the gentleman proposes.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out in the ninth line the words, "March, 1863," and insert in lieu thereof the following, "July 31, 1862."

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. It will be seen that that amendment shortens the time for which he will receive pay by the difference between July 31, 1862, and March, 1863.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment was adopted. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDEX TO BANKRUPTCY BILL.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an analysis, or rather a copious index, of the bankruptcy bill. That bill is to be considered by the order of the House on Tuesday or Wednesday next, and if this index is printed in the RECORD it will be a great aid to gentlemen who desire to understand the bill and to refer readily to its several provisions, and, of course, will be of equal benefit to gentlemen who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What space will it occupy?

Mr. OATES. Not more than a page, I think.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen from Alabama?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The index is as follows:

A UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.—A SUMMARY OF H. R. 9348.

CHAPTER I.—BANKRUPTS.

Sec. 1. Meaning of words and phrases.
2. Acts of bankruptcy.
3. Who may become bankrupts.
4. Partners.
5. Exemptions of bankrupts.
6. Duties of bankrupts.
7. Death or insanity of bankrupts.
8. Protection and detention of bankrupts.
9. Extradition of bankrupts.
10. Suits by and against bankrupts.
11. Compositions, when confirmed.
12. Compositions, when set aside.
13. Discharges, when granted.
14. Discharges, when revoked.
15. Codebtors of bankrupts.
16. Debts not affected by a discharge.

SECTION 1. Meaning of words and phrases.—Words and phrases are given certain meanings in order to prevent unnecessary repetition; e. g., "courts of bankruptcy" shall include the district courts of the United States and Territories and the supreme court of the District of Columbia; "persons" shall include corporations, officers, partnerships, and women.

The use of certain words in lieu of phrases, which is made possible by this section, adds to the clearness of the bill and makes it shorter by thousands of words than it would otherwise be

SEC. 2. Acts of bankruptcy.—Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having, within six months before the filing of a petition against him, concealed himself to defeat his creditors; failed for thirty days, or conditionally within such time, while insolvent to secure the release of property levied upon for $500 or over; made a transfer of property to defeat his creditors; made an assignment or filed in court an admission of insolvency; made, while insolvent, an option contract; made, while insolvent, a preference; procured or suffered a judgment against himself to defeat creditors; secreted property to avoid process; suffered, while insolvent, executions for $500 or over to be returned unsatisfied; or suspended, and not resumed, while insolvent, payment of commercial paper for thirty days for $500 or over.

The time within which proceedings in bankruptcy may be instituted shall not begin to run until parties in interest shall have had an opportunity to be advised of the facts.

In general terms, acts of bankruptcy are divided into those which constitute dishonesty and those which are the result of insolvency.

It was thought that if a debtor was acting dishonestly with his property or if he had become insolvent his creditors ought to have an opportunity to secure the payment of at least a percentage of their claims. In a financial sense it is immaterial to the creditor whether the debtor has acted dishonestly or become insolvent, as the probable result to him in either case will be the loss of a part of the amount due.

Very careful restrictions have been made with reference to the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy. (See Sec. 59, Who may file and dismiss petitions.)

The person against whom proceedings are instituted will have every opportunity to make a defense as in other cases (see Sec. 19, Jury trials). Any of the creditors who so desire may assist in the defense of the case (see Sec. 18, Process pleadings and adjudications).

During the pendency of the proceedings the defendant will retain possession of his property, unless the creditors can convince the court that there is danger to the property in so doing and secure an order for the taking of it into custody; such an order will not be executed unless the creditors give a bond to indemnify him in the event that the adjudication is not made, and even in that event he may give a forthcoming bond and retain possession of the property. (See Sec. 69, Possession of property.)

Under the laws of the several States there is no adequate remedy for a debtor whose creditors institute compulsory proceedings; in almost every case the creditors dissipate a large part of the estate in litigation, and while some of them are paid in full, the majority are not paid any part of the amount due, and the debtor is left still owing the bulk of his debts, although at the inception of the litigation he may have been solvent. Under this bill the distribution of the assets will be pro rata (see Sec. 65, Declaration and payment of dividends; Sec. 60, Preferred creditors, and Sec. 67, Liens). The debtor, if honest, will be discharged (see Sec. 13, Discharges, when granted). It therefore seems evident that the position of both the debtor and creditors will be more advantageous under this act than under the present State laws.

It is not proposed to have acts of bankruptcy secretly committed and then have the time within which proceedings may be instituted elapse before the creditors learn of the commission of the act. The time in which proceedings may be instituted will therefore be extended six months from the date when the diligent creditor is enabled to learn of the commission of the act of bankruptcy (see Sec. 2, Acts of bankruptcy).

SEC. 3. Who may become bankrupts.—Any person who owes debts, except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act as a voluntary bankrupt.

Any person whose debts amount to $500 or over, if adjudged an involuntary bankrupt upon an impartial trial, shall be subject to the provisions of the act, except a national bank, a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, or a wage-earner.

There is already in existence a satisfactory law for the control and liquidation of national banks. Since the Government is responsible for the money issued by these banks in the event of their failure, there is a good reason why it should have control of their liquidation.

It is said that persons engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil and wage-earners do not wish to become subjected to involuntary bankruptcy; the bill does not therefore include them among the persons who may become involuntary bankrupts; objection would not be made if they should ask its extension to them. They may voluntarily take the benefits of the act.

The difference between voluntary and involuntary bankrupts consists only in whether the petition is filed by the bankrupt or his creditors. After the adjudication the rights and responsibilities of all bankrupts and their creditors are identical.

SEC. 4. Partners.—Partners may be adjudged bankrupts. The partnership creditors, if all of them are adjudged bankrupts, shall nominate the trustee. The court first obtaining jurisdiction over one partner may have jurisdiction of all of them, and of the partnership estate, if all of the partners are adjudged bankrupts. If any one or more partners are not adjudged bankrupt, they shall settle the estate and account for the share of the bankrupt partners.

The administration of the affairs of partners is likened to that of the individual. If there is a solvent member of the partnership, he may settle its affairs and account to the estates of the bankrupts.

SEC. 5. Exemptions of bankrupts.—The bankrupt will be allowed the exemptions provided by the laws of his State.

The State exemptions are not in any way interfered with, as the State laws providing for them should not be superceded by an enactment of Congress.

In any view of the case an uniform exemption would prove satisfactory to the citizens of the States whose exemptions are smaller than the one proposed, nor to those of the States whose exemptions were larger than the proposed law.

SEC. 6. Duties of bankrupts.—The bankrupt shall attend the first meeting of his creditors, if requested by any of them to do so, and the hearing upon the petition for a discharge; comply with the orders of the court; examine claims as to their correctness against his estates; execute such papers as may be necessary; inform his trustee of attempts to commit fraud by his creditors; file a schedule of his property and list of his creditors and submit to an examination concerning the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, and the amount and whereabouts of his property.

See section 55, meetings of creditors; section 17, jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy (28); section 29, offenses; section 30, duties of referees; section 55, meetings of creditors; section 21, evidence, and section 58, notices to creditors.

SEC. 7. Death or insanity of bankrupts.—The death or insanity of a bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings in bankruptcy.

Ordinarily the death or insanity of a bankrupt would abate the proceedings, but to save delay and expense, it is provided that upon the court's having obtained jurisdiction the administration shall be completed.

SEC. 8. Protection and detention of bankrupts.—Bankrupts are exempt from arrest upon civil process, except in certain cases.

The bankrupt, if apprehended, shall be forthwith taken before the court for the determination of the question of the necessity for his remaining, and in the event of his detention shall be kept in custody by the marshal, but not imprisoned.

SEC. 9. Extradition of bankrupts.—Bankrupts may be extradited from one district to another in accordance with the laws now in force upon that subject.

(See Sec. 8, Protection and detention of bankrupts.)

SEC. 10. Suits by and against bankrupts.—Certain suits shall be stayed, subject to the order of the court of bankruptcy. Suits by and against bankrupts may be prosecuted or defended by trustees. Suits shall not be brought by or against the trustee subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed.

(See Sec. 63, Debts which may be proved.)

SEC. 11. Composition, when confirmed.—A composition may be offered after, but not before, the bankrupt has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, and after he has filed a schedule of his property and list of his creditors. The application may be filed in court after, but not before, it has been accepted by a majority in number and amount of all the creditors whose claims have been allowed, and after the consideration to be paid and the money necessary to pay debts which have priority and the costs of the court have been deposited subject to the order of the judge. After these conditions have been complied with and the application has been filed a time will be fixed for the hearing and the composition will be confirmed if it is for the best interests of the creditors, if the bankrupt is entitled to a discharge, if his embarrassment is not due to his fraudulent acts, and if the offer and acceptance are in good faith and have been properly procured. The confirmation of a composition will result in the discharge of the bankrupt, except from a compliance with the terms of the composition.

In most cases of honest failures a composition or compromise can be effected between the debtor and his creditors.

In order to enable the creditors to pass upon the honesty of a debtor and to calculate the worth of their claims, it has been provided that the debtor shall be examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, and file his schedule of property and list of creditors before the creditors shall be petitioned to accept the compromise which he offers. The offer shall not be filed in court until it has been accepted by a majority in number and amount of the creditors and whatever is to be paid has been deposited subject to the order of the court. It is not intended that any offer shall be made except in good faith and not unless it can be complied with upon its acceptance by the creditors. (See Section 58, Notices to creditors, and section 13, discharges when granted.)

SEC. 12. Compositions, when set aside.—A composition will be set aside upon application made within six months after it is confirmed if it was fraudulently obtained.

Fraudulent compositions may be set aside upon application filed within six months after the confirmation.

SEC. 13. Discharges, when granted.—A person, not a corporation, may, after the expiration of two months after the adjudication and within the next four months, apply for a discharge; if it is impossible to file the petition within that time the judge may permit it to be filed within the next six months, but not thereafter. A discharge shall not be granted to a person who has committed an offense punishable by imprisonment or fine (see section relating to offenses), given a preference which has not been surrendered, knowingly made a materially false statement concerning his financial condition, made a transfer of his property which might have been impeached as fraudlent unless it has been surrendered to the trustee, or with fraudulent intent destroyed or neglected to keep books showing his financial condition.

A corporation will not be discharged. (See Sec. 15, Codebtors of bankrupts; Sec. 16, Debts not affected by a discharge; and Sec. 59, Notices to creditors.)

SEC. 14. Discharges, when revoked.—A discharge may be revoked upon application filed within two years after being granted if it transpires that it was fraudulently procured.

Fraudulent discharges may be revoked upon application filed within two years after being granted.

SEC. 15. Codebtors of bankrupts.—Codebtors of bankrupts shall not be affected by the discharge of such bankrupts.

Although an honest bankrupt may be discharged it does not affect the liability of his codebtors.

SEC. 16. Debts not affected by a discharge.—A discharge shall release the bankrupt, not a corporation, from provable debts, except such as are due as a tax, have not been duly scheduled, or were created by fraud, embezzlement, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in a fiduciary capacity.

It is thought that public policy will be promoted by not, under any circumstances, granting a discharge in the above classes of debts.

CHAPTER II.—COURTS.

Sec. 17. Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy.
18. Process, pleadings, and adjudications.
19. Jury trials.
20. Oaths, affirmations.
21. Evidence.
22. Reference of cases after adjudication.
23. Jurisdiction of United States circuit courts.
24. Jurisdiction of appellate courts.
25. Appeals and writs of error.
26. Arbitration of controversies.
27. Compromises.
28. Designation of newspapers.
29. Offenses.
30. Rules, forms, and orders.
31. Computation of time.
32. Transfer of cases.

SEC. 17. Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy.—Courts of bankrupts are invested with original jurisdiction in proceedings in bankruptcy.

(See Sec. 4, Partners; Sec. 32, Transfer of cases; Sec. 57, Proof and allowance of claims; Sec. 29, Offenses; Sec. 1, Meaning of words and phrases; Sec. 47, Duties of trustees; Sec. 23, Jurisdiction of United States circuit courts; Sec. 11, Compositions, when confirmed; Sec. 12, Compositions, when set aside; Sec. 39, Duties of referees; Sec. 38, Jurisdiction of referees; Sec. 6, Duties of bankrupts; Sec. 47, Duties of trustees; Sec. 70, Title to property; Sec. 13, Discharges, when granted: Sec. 14, Discharges, when revoked; Sec. 9, Extradition of bankrupts; Sec. 41, Contempts before referees.)

SEC. 18. Process, pleadings, and adjudications.—Upon the filing of an involuntary petition process will be issued as in equity cases returnable within fifteen days. The answer must be filed under oath in ten days after the return day. If a defense is made the court, with or without the intervention of a jury, shall determine the controversy. If no defense is made the judge shall enter the judgment, if present; if he is absent the case shall be referred to the referee. Creditors other than those initiating the proceedings may appear either as petitioners or defendants.

(See Sec. 59, Who may file and dismiss petitions; and Sec. 19, Jury trials.)

SEC. 19. Jury trials.—Jury trials may be had upon application of bankrupt, as now provided by law.

The right of trial by jury will remain inviolate both in cases in which it is alleged that an act of bankruptcy has been committed and in those in which it is charged that the defendant has committed an offense in violation of the provisions of the act.

SEC. 20. Oaths, affirmations.—Oaths or affirmations may be administered by referees, State and Federal officers now authorized by law to administer oaths, and diplomatic or consular officers in foreign countries.

The purpose of this section is to put claimants to as little trouble as possible in making proof of their claims against estates.

SEC. 21. Evidence.—Any person may be examined wherever found as a witness in any bankruptcy proceeding. Depositions will be taken under the laws now in force upon that subject. Notices of the taking of depositions will be filed with the referee in every case, and will be served upon the parties in interest in given cases. Records of the courts may be used as evidence.

Parties to controversies will be able to secure the testimony of all persons in the administration of estates, irrespective of their residences.

SEC. 22. References of cases after adjudication.—After the adjudication the judge will cause the estate to be administered, or refer it to the referee for general or special purposes, and may at any time change the reference.

The court may cause the estate to be administered or refer it generally or specially to the referee. Cases may be transferred from one referee to another for the convenience of parties.

SEC. 23. Jurisdiction of United States circuit courts.—Circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction of controversies about the property of bankrupt estates in the same manner and to the same extent as though bankruptcy proceedings had not intervened. The trustee can only sue in the State or Federal court in which the bankrupt might have sued had he not become a bankrupt, except by consent. United States circuit courts have jurisdiction over persons who have committed offenses.

The proposed plaintiff in a suit against a bankrupt estate may institute proceedings in the appropriate State court, or, if it has jurisdiction, in the the United States circuit court, or if he desires, in the court of bankruptcy; but the trustee is limited to the institution of such suits as he may wish to bring in the court in which the bankrupt, of whose estate he is trustee, might have brought them if proceedings had not been instituted. These provisions are for the purpose of having controversies litigated at the places most convenient for the parties litigant and witnesses.

SEC. 24. Jurisdiction of appellate courts.—Appellate courts will have jurisdiction to hear cases brought by appeal or writ of error from bankruptcy courts in term time and vacation. In cases in which appeals and writs of error will not lie they will have a superintending control over proceedings had in bankruptcy courts.

SEC. 25. Appeals and writs of error.—Appeals and writs of error may be taken in controversies involving $500 or over, adjudications upon petitions, the granting or refusing of applications for removal of cases, and the granting or dismissal of petitions for discharges within ten days, in accordanee with the laws now in force, except that the same shall be returnable within ten days, unless further time be granted. Trustees are not required to give bonds when they appeal or sue out writs of error.

(See Sec. 24, Jurisdiction of appellate courts).

SEC. 26. Arbitration of controversies.—The arbitration of controversies may be had between trustees and opposing parties.

Under the provisions of this section tedious and expensive litigation may be superseded by prompt and inexpensive arbitrations.

SEC. 27. Compromises.—Compromises may be made by the trustees with adverse claimants.

The trustee may compromise controversies with the approval of the court.

(See Sec. 58, Notices to creditors.)

SEC. 28. Designation of newspapers.—Newspapers for the publication of notices shall be designated by the court.

There will be in each district one newspaper in which all official notices, decrees, and orders required to be published will be inserted; in particular instances such publications may be duplicated in an additional newspaper for the convenience of parties.

SEC. 29. Offenses.—Officers who embezzle, bankrupts who defraud, and creditors who present false claims may be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding two years.

Bankruptcy officers who neglect to perform their duties may be fined not to exceed $100 for each offense.

Proceedings for the punishment of wrongdoers must be commenced within one year.

An indictment can not be found or information filed subsequent to one year after the commission of the alleged offense.

SEC. 30. Rules, forms, and orders.—Rules, forms, and orders shall be prescribed by the Supreme Court. Courts of bankruptcy may prescribe additional rules and orders.

It will be desirable to have standing rules, forms, and orders, which may be changed from time to time, and hence this provision.

SEC. 31. Computation of time.—Time shall be computed by days by excluding the first and including the last, unless the latter fall on a Sunday or legal holiday, in which event it also shall be included.

SEC. 32. Transfer of cases.—In the event that proceedings are begun in several courts, each of which has jurisdiction, the cases in all of the courts but one may be transferred to such court to be consolidated and administered.

(See Sec. 17, Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy; Sec. 4, Partners; and Sec. 25, Appeals and writs of error.)

CHAPTER III.—OFFICERS.

Sec. 33. Creation of two offices.
34. Appointment of referees.
35. Qualification of referees.
36. Oaths of office of referees.
37. Number of referees.
38. Jurisdiction of referees.
39. Duties of referees.
40. Compensation of referees.
41. Contempts before referees.
42. Records of referees.
43. Absence or disability of referees.
44. Appointment of trustees.
45. Qualification of trustees.
46. Death or removal of trustees.
47. Duties of trustees.
48. Compensation of trustees.
49. Accounts and papers of trustees.
50. Bonds of referees and trustees.
51. Duties of clerks.
52. Compensation of clerks.
53. Duties of Attorney-General.
54. Statistics of bankruptcy proceedings.

SEC. 33. Creation of two offices.—The offices of referee and trustee are created.

There are but two new offices created. The officers to fill them are the referee, who is an assistant judicial officer to assist in expeditiously disposing of the business before the court, and the trustee, who is to have the title of the bankrupt's property and administer it.

SEC. 34. Appointment of referees.—Courts of bankruptcy shall appoint and remove referees, and prescribe and change their districts.

(See Sec. 35, Qualification of referees.)

SEC. 35. Qualifications of referees.—Referees may be commissioners of deeds, justices of the peace, masters in chancery, or notaries public, but shall not hold other offices of profit or emolument; they shall not be related to the judges.

Under the old law, unworthy relatives of judges were appointed in some districts to the desirable positions. It is believed that under this act favoritism will be avoided, and that in every instance the person best qualified to perform the duties will be appointed.

SEC. 36. Oaths of office of referees.—Referees shall take the oath of office prescribed for United States judges.

The referees are assistant judicial officers, and are therefore required to take the same oath of office as judges.

SEC. 37. Number of referees.—There shall be such number of referees as may be necessary to expeditiously transact the business of the court.

These officers are compensated wholly out of the estate administered and their appointment will not therefore be of any expense to the State or to the Government.

SEC. 38. Jurisdiction of referees.—Referees may exercise the powers of the courts for the production of evidence, except the power of commitment; and their jurisdiction to enforce the act, except as to discharges, compositions, and the seizure of the property of bankrupts.

(See Sec. 18, Process, pleadings, and adjudications; Sec. 17, Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy; Sec. 8, Protection and detention of bankrupts; Sec. 69, Possession of property; Sec. 17, Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy; Sec. 11, Compositions when confirmed; Sec. 12, Compositions when set aside; Sec. 13, Discharges when granted; Sec. 14, Discharges when revoked; Sec. 30, Rules, forms, and orders; Sec. 6, Duties of bankrupts; and Sec. 62, Expenses of administering estates.)

SEC. 39. Duties of referees.—The referee shall cause estates to be promptly administered.

(See Sec. 47, Duties of trustees; Sec. 65, Declaration and payment of dividends; Sec. 6, Duties of bankrupts; Sec. 29, Offenses; Sec. 58, Notices to creditors; Sec. 6, Duties of bankrupts; Sec. 42, Records of referees; Sec. 51, Duties of clerks.)

SEC. 40. Compensation of referees.—Referees shall receive as their compensation in each case a ten-dollar filing fee and a commission of 1 per cent on the dividends paid when estates are administered, and half that amount when there is a composition.

This arrangement, as to the manner of computing the commission and the time of paying it, will interest these officers in securing prompt and economical administrations.

SEC. 41. Contempts before referees.—Persons may be punished by courts of bankruptcy for the commission of contempts before referees.

(See Sec. 17, Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy.)

SEC. 42. Records of referees.—Records of referees shall be kept in the same manner as courts keep their equity records; those of each case shall be kept in a separate book.

Under the old law records were duplicated at great expense, and in such manner as to make them very cumbersome. It is believed that the provisions here made will prove satisfactory and inexpensive.

SEC. 43. Absence or disability of referees.—Whenever a referee is absent or becomes disqualified the judge may appoint another referee to act, or may act personally.

Business will not be neglected because of the absence or disability of the referee.

SEC. 44. Appointment of trustees.—Trustees shall be appointed by the creditors, or, if they fail to act, by the court.

(See Sec. 55, Meetings of creditors.)

SEC. 45. Qualifications of trustees.—Trustees may be individuals or trust companies.

Individuals qualified to perform the duties and corporations authorized by law may be appointed trustees in the districts in which they have their offices.

SEC. 46. Death or removal of trustees.—The death or removal of the trustee shall not abate any suit or proceeding.

(See Sec. 17, Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy.)

SEC. 47. Duties of trustees.—Trustees shall promptly administer the estates.

(See section 17, Jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy; Sec. 61, Depositories for funds; Sec. 29, Offenses; Sec. 58, Notices to creditors; Sec. 39, Duties of referees; Sec. 58, Notices to creditors; Sec. 6, Duties of bankrupts; Sec. 5, Exemptions of bankrupts; and Sec. 70, Title to property.)

SEC. 48. Compensation of trustees.—Trustees shall be paid, as their full compensation, a five-dollar filing fee and 5 per cent on the first $5,000 paid to creditors in dividends, 2 per cent on the second $5,000, and 1 per cent on additional amounts.

The amount of the commissions of the trustee will not be computed upon the income or outgo of the estate, but upon the amount to be actually paid to the creditors in dividends.

Since the amount of the trustee's commissions will depend upon the amount paid in dividends, and can not be paid until the dividends have been declared, he will be financially interested in having the dividends as large and the expenses as small as possible, and the dividends payable quickly.

SEC. 49. Accounts and papers of trustees.—The accounts and papers of trustees shall be open to the inspection of all parties in interest.

There will not be any secrets in the administration of estates, but all of the facts will be available to the parties in interest.

SEC. 50. Bonds of referees and trustees.—Referees and trustees shall give bonds, under very careful restrictions, with solvent sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties. The court shall fix the amount of the bond of the referee. The creditors shall fix the amount of the bond of the trustee, and may increase it.

Very strict provisions are made as to the qualifications of sureties, to the end that the giving of "straw bonds" may be prevented.

SEC. 51. Duties of clerks.—Clerks shall perform their duties and account for the moneys received.

(See Sec. 40, Compensation of referees; Sec. 48, Compensation of trustees, and Sec. 39, Duties of referees.)

SEC. 52. Compensation of clerks.—Clerks shall be paid, as full compensation, a filing fee of $10 in each case.

Under the old law clerks received in the aggregate very large fees. By the provisions of this bill they will receive but a single fee for each case, payable in advance. They will therefore be anxious that the estate shall be promptly administered.

SEC. 53. Duties of Attorney-General.—The Attorney-General shall collect and lay before Congress statistics as to proceedings in bankruptcy.

(See Sec. 54, Statistics of bankruptcy proceedings.)

SEC. 54. Statistics of bankruptcy proceedings.—Bankruptcy officers shall make reports to the Attorney-General for statistical purposes.

(See Sec. 53, Duties of Attorney-General.)

CHAPTER IV.—CREDITORS.

Sec. 55. Meetings of creditors.
56. Voters at meetings of creditors.
57. Proof and allowance of claims.
58. Notices to creditors.
59. Who may file and dismiss petitions.
60. Preferred creditors.

SEC. 55. Meetings of creditors.—The first meeting of the creditors shall be held after ten and within thirty days after the adjudication at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt has done business, resided or had his domicile; or if such place is manifestly inconvenient as a meeting place, or if such meeting by any mischance is not held within such time, the court shall fix the time and place most convenient to the parties in interest. The judge or referee shall preside. The bankrupt may be examined. Subsequent meetings shall be called as occasion may require. The court shall call a meeting whenever one-fourth or more in number and amount of the creditors request it; a majority or more of the creditors may fix the place of meeting. Meetings after the first one may be held by consent without notice.

(See Sec. 6, Duties of bankrupts; Sec. 57, Proof and allowance of claims; Sec. 44, Appointment of trustees; Sec. 50, Bonds of referees and trustees, and Sec. 58, Notices to creditors.)

SEC. 56. Voters and meetings of creditors.—Creditors at their meetings shall determine matters submitted to them by a majority vote in number and amount of those present.

It is expected that the creditors will take a more active part in the administration of the estate than under the old law, and hence specific provision has been made as to their rights as voters at meetings.

SEC. 57. Proof and allowance of claims.—The proof of a claim shall consist of a statement under oath by the creditor setting forth the claim, the consideration therefor, the securities held, the payments made, and the sum claimed as still due. Claims shall be allowed unless objection is made. Objections shall be heard and determined in a summary way. Claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be allowed unless they surrender their preferences. The value of securities held shall be determined and the amount realized be credited upon the claims, and a dividend shall be paid only on the unpaid balance.

The allowance of a claim is to be a simple and inexpensive process; justly so, as a great majority of them will be bona fide and will be shown to be due by the books of the bankrupt; but ample provisions have been made for their reconsideration and a trial as to their merits in order to prevent the perpetration of fraud.

SEC. 58. Notices to creditors.—The creditors shall have ten days' notice, unless they waive it in writing, of examinations of the bankrupt; hearings upon applications for the confirmation of a composition or a discharge; meetings of creditors; anticipated sales of property; the filing of the final accounts of trustees; the declaration and time of payment of dividends; the proposed compromise of controversies; and the proposed dismissal of proceedings.

The creditors will be advised by the referee of the various steps in the administration of the estate to the end that they may, if they so desire, be heard upon any subject connected with the administration of the estate.

SEC. 59. Who may file and dismiss petitions.—Petitions may be filed or dismissed by three creditors of a bankrupt who together have provable claims in excess of securities held, for at least $500; if there are less than twelve creditors, one of them holding such a claim may file the petition. Creditors other than the original petitioners may become petitioners or defendants.

Very careful provisions have been made as to the filing and dismissal of petitions to the end that they shall not be filed in malice or dismissed for fraudulent purposes. (See Sec. 18, Process, pleadings and adjudications; Sec. 19, Jury trials, and Sec. 58, Notices to creditors.)

SEC. 60. Preferred creditors.—Preferred creditors are those who have within four months before the filing of a petition procured property from an insolvent with an intent to defeat the operation of the act; or for the purpose of obtaining a greater percentage of their debts than other creditors of the same class; if the person receiving such preference has reasonable cause to believe that a fraud upon this act was intended the property received or its value may be recovered by the trustee.

The giving and receiving of preferences is forbidden; it is not thought in the broadest sense and in the long run that they redound to the best interest of either party giving or receiving them.

Many solvent but temporarily pressed men have their property spent and their prospects blighted by a struggle between their creditors to secure preferences.

A debtor who is temporarily embarrassed and needs the counsel and advice of his creditors can not, under existing laws, secure it, because as soon as his condition is suspected or known compulsory processes are instituted by the most alert of his creditors, and as a result he is financially ruined and rendered helpless.

The prevention of preferences will make it possible for debtors and creditors to meet and counsel together and will beget a conservative tone between them which will tend to prevent commercial failures and promote equity and fair dealing.

CHAPTER V.—ESTATES.

Sec. 61. Depositories for funds.
62. Expenses of administering estates.
63. Debts which may be proved.
64. Debts which have priority.
65. Declaration and payment of dividends.
66. Unclaimed dividends.
67. Liens.
68. Set-offs and counter claims.
69. Possession of property.
70. Title of property.

SEC. 61. Depositories for funds.—Depositories for money shall be designated by the courts. They shall be required to give such bonds as the court may deem necessary.

(See Sec. 47, Duties of trustees.)

SEC. 62. Expenses of administering estates.—Expenses shall be reported in detail under oath, and shall not be paid until allowed by the court.

The expenses are limited to those which are actual and necessary. It does not seem possible that extravagance can be practiced under the terms of this section.

SEC. 63. Debts which may be proved.—Debts may be proved which are a fixed liability, as evidenced by a written instrument, and owing at the time of the filing of the petition, whether then due or not; due as costs; and judgments rendered after the filing of the petition. Unliquidated debts may be liquidated and proved.

(See Sec. 57, Proof and allowance of claims.)

SEC. 64. Debts which have priority.—Debts which have priority are those which are due as taxes, when there is property on which they constitute a lien. Other debts which have priority are the filing fees paid by the creditors; the costs of administration; wages due to employés which have been earned within three months before the filing of the petition, not to exceed $300 for each employé; and debts which have priority by the laws of the States or the United States.

Certain debts will have to be paid in order to secure the administration of the estates; others ought, for reasons of public policy, be paid in full. In the event of a composition being set aside or a discharge revoked the title of the bankrupt to property acquired subsequent to the filing of the petition, and prior to the setting aside of the composition or the revocation of the discharge, will vest in the trustee, and all persons who have extended credit during such time will be paid in full out of the property before creditors holding claims of anterior dates will receive any payments. As a result, full faith and credit will be given to compositions which have been confirmed and discharges which have been granted. These provisions are equitable and tend to the administration of exact justice.

SEC. 65. Declaration and payment of dividends.—Dividends of an equal percentage will be declared and paid on all claims, except such as have priority, or are secured; the first dividend shall be declared within thirty days after adjudication, if the money equals 5 per cent or more. Subsequent dividends may be declared as often as the money equals 10 per cent, and upon the closing of the estate.

(See Sec. 39, Duties of referees, and Sec. 47, Duties of trustees.)

SEC. 66. Unclaimed dividends.—Dividends unclaimed for six months shall be paid into court. Such as remain unclaimed for two years shall be distributed to the creditors until they are paid in full, and then paid to the bankrupt.

This section is to prevent unclaimed dividends from inuring to the benefit of the banks in which bankruptcy funds are deposited.

SEC. 67. Liens.—Claims which would not have been valid liens as against the claims of creditors of a bankrupt shall not be liens against the estate. Whenever a creditor is prevented from enforcing his rights as against a lien created or attempted to be created by his debtor, the trustee may enforce such lien for the benefit of the estate. Liens obtained by compulsory processes begun against a person within four months before the filing of the petition shall be dissolved in the event of an adjudication, or if such dissolution would militate against the best interests of the estate, they shall not be dissolved, but the trustee shall protect and enforce them for the benefit of the estate. If a lien shall have been realized upon, the amount may be recovered by the trustee. Liens given in good faith and for a present consideration shall not be affected by bankruptcy proceedings.

It is not intended to in any way interfere with the right of the debtor to give or the creditor to receive valid liens for a valuable consideration; i. e., to interfere with business in the ordinary course, but it is proposed to prevent fraudulent preferences.

SEC. 68. Set-offs and counter claims.—Set-offs and counter claims may be enforced as between the trustee and the person with whom the bankrupt dealt, but not between the trustee and a purchaser with notice.

Debtors of estates will not be permitted to pay off the amounts due from them at the rate of 100 cents on the dollar with set-offs or counter claims purchased for that purpose and worth only a percentage of their face value.

SEC. 69. Possession of property.—The bankrupt's property may be seized by order of the court after the filing of the petition and before adjudication, if there is danger of its being improperly transferred, upon the giving of bond by the creditors, the defendant may give a forthcoming bond and retain possession of the property.

Ordinarily the property will remain in the hands of the debtor until the trustee is appointed.

While this section protects the rights of the creditors it is more favorable to the debtor than the statutes of most of the States.

SEC. 70. Title to property.—The title of the bankrupt to property, except such as is exempt, shall vest in the trustee as of the date of the filing of the petition. The trustee may institute proceedings to have set aside any fraudulent transfer made by the bankrupt. All personal property shall be appraised. Personal property shall not be sold for less than 75 per cent of its appraised value, except subject to the approval of the court. All real and mixed property shall be sold subject to the approval of the court.

(See Sec. 58, Notices to creditors.)

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Whereas the Fifty-First Congress made appropriations for the establishment and erection of seventy-five public buildings, including the extension and improvement of those already erected, and

Whereas, from the records of the Department, the construction of public buildings and the letting of contracts for the same, it appears that forty-seven of these buildings, for which appropriations were made more than two years ago, have not been contracted for, and no steps taken to let the same; and

Whereas it further appears that complete contracts for only fifteen of said buildings have been let and that partial and incomplete contracts have been let for ten others: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives why so large a number of these public works are not begun, and why more than $8,000,000 of the appropriations have remained unexpended during the past two years.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having had under consideration the accompanying resolution, recommend that it be agreed to by the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT], who introduced this resolution.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take much time, because the facts are quite fully set forth in the resolution itself.

It appears from a statement of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, which I hold in my hand, and which I will publish with my remarks, that the Fifty-first Congress made appropriations for some seventy-five public buildings; that contracts for the erection of only a very small number of these have been entered into; that those which have been contracted for are in large part buildings the construction of which was so urgent that they could not be delayed, notably the buildings for the Columbian Exposition, the Ellis Island immigration building, and the Washington post-office.

It appears that out of almost $13,000,000 appropriated for these purposes more than $8,000,000 remain untouched. I believe also that examination would show that a great many of the buildings authorized by former Congresses are lying without any action, and some of them have been in this condition for years. Here is the statement to which I have just referred:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., December 22, 1892.

SIR: In compliance with your request in letter of the 8th instant, I have the honor to inclose a statement, showing the number of buildings and important extensions authorized, and appropriations made therefor by the Fifty-first Congress, with information in regard to contracts, etc., under the control of this office.

I trust that the information furnished is as desired, and regret that the pressure of business in this office has prevented an earlier reply.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES P. LOW,
Acting Supervising Architect.

Hon. OWEN SCOTT,
House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT TREASURY, December 19, 1892.

The facts that I have stated indicate that something is needed to be done in this direction. Either the force of the Department is wholly inadequate to push forward and complete this work, or there is incompetency; or for some other reason which we ought to understand these public works have been delayed. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that the cause of this delay lies in a desire to save the Government from every expenditure possible. The condition of the Treasury may have indicated——

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not the gentleman know that more money by seven and a half million dollars has been expended for public buildings during the last four years than was expended for the same purposes during the previous four years?

Mr. SCOTT. This is not the question involved in this resolution.

The gentleman can have his own time to make any statement he wishes. I was about to say that it is pretty evident from the straits in which the Treasury has been for the last year and a half or certainly the last year that there may be other causes for the delay on these public buildings than the fact that the Department has been unable with the assistance at hand to do the work. Certain it is that the erection of these public buildings, scattered all over the country, where the needs of the Post-Office Department and other branches of the Government have been pressing, has been delayed unnecessarily and unreasonably.

The purpose of this resolution is that the Department may report the causes of this delay, so that we may understand why public buildings upon which work was authorized two, three, four, and five years ago are still in the position in which they were when the appropriations were made. Very few of the seventy-five public buildings authorized by the Fifty-first Congress have been begun. A few contracts have been made for foundations, but very few for complete buildings. The larger part of those buildings are lying to-day without any action, and the people in those localities are urging that these public works may be commenced and prosecuted to completion. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution ought to be adopted so that this House and the people may have some knowledge of the reason for the inexcusable delay which has occurred.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to yield me five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the statements which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT] has made as reasons for the adoption of this resolution certainly deserve some attention. The inference which might be drawn from his remarks is, that during the last four years there has been a refusal on the part of the Administration to enter upon the construction of many authorized public buildings for lack of public money.

Mr. SCOTT. Not refusal, but failure.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, failure; just as the gentleman pleases. Now, as a matter of fact during the last four years, as I find by a statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, there has been an expenditure of $23,977,477 on these public buildings, while during the previous four years there was an expenditure of only $16,341,064, showing that under the present Administration there has been much more done in the construction of public buildings than was done in the previous four years.

Now, the reason why more of the buildings which have been authorized have not been constructed is evident to anyone who will read the reports already made to the House. It is that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, whose force has not been increased with the number of buildings authorized, has not a sufficient force to prepare the plans and put all the buildings authorized under construction. He has done all that could be done with the force under his control; and this must be evident because he has expended seven and a half million dollars more in the last four years than was expended in the preceding four years.

Now, all that can be said in answer to the resolution of inquiry, which is all right, is simply in this direction, that in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses we authorized the construction of an unusually large number of public buildings, and in the Fifty-first Congress we increased this large number, the result being that during the last four years we have been completing the construction of buildings authorized by the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, and have entered upon the construction of only a part of the new buildings authorized by the Fifty-first Congress.

In order to carry forward more rapidly the buildings which have been authorized there must be a larger force provided by Congress in the office of the Supervising Architect. Yet, with the existing force, the expenditure for this purpose has been seven and a half million dollars, more within the last four years than during the previous four years. In justice to the Supervising Architect this statement ought to accompany the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT]. I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield two minutes and a half more to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the record will show that many of the buildings authorized by the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses are in the same condition as those authorized by the Fifty-first Congress. The inquiry that we now present is not whether recent Congresses have appropriated more money for public buildings than previous Congresses. The object is to ascertain why the Department charged with this public duty has not pursued the work authorized by Congress.

It is believed, and I am sure the facts will show, that the real reason—although the gentleman seeks to obscure it by making a comparison between the amounts appropriated by this and other Congresses——

Mr. DINGLEY (interrupting). The amounts expended, not appropriated.

Mr. SCOTT (continuing). Is that the Government itself has felt the sore need of money such as it has rarely felt before. It has desired to prevent as far as possible any demand for ready cash being placed upon it. For this reason it has held up the construction of these public buildings.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not true that the great purpose is because a proper appropriation has not been made for the Architect's office to employ the necessary force to make plans for the work and to carry it out?

Mr. SCOTT. No; I think not. The Architect's office has either been negligent or incompetent for this work; or it may have been restrained by its superiors from making contracts in order to save the Government from the perils of a threatened deficit. The object of this inquiry is to elicit the reason of this delay. I think the cause I have given is the correct one. The people are entitled to fair treatment in the prosecution of public works.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let us have a vote and then discuss this matter when the facts come in.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, under which the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DUNPHY, until Wednesday next, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2345) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River above New Orleans; and

A bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon the growing out of illegal violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. PUGH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Southern Kansas Railway Company to construct and maintain a pipe line from the North Fork of the Canadian River, Indian Territory, to said railway;

A bill (S. 3383) to amend the act of May 6, 1890, fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 3690) to incorporate the Tabernacle Society of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 3727) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided;" and Joint resolution (S. R. 134) authorizing the loan, for exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition, of the picture entitled "The Recall of Columbus," by Augustus G. Heaton.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, having in charge the appropriation bill, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House until the completion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

DIGEST, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed —— copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the second session of the Fifty-second Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House; ——copies thereof to be bound in paper covers.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendments: Fill the first blank by inserting "2,500," and the second by inserting "500;" so that it will read: "2,500 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the second session of the Fifty-second Congress," etc., and "500 copies thereof to be bound in paper covers."

The estimated cost of same is $3,568.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the standing and select committees for reports.

SOILED PAPER CURRENCY.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back the bill (H. R. 10012) to provide for the speedy and frequent redemption of United States paper currency and national bank notes which have become soiled, impure, unclean, or otherwise unfit for use; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS, ETC.

Mr. BACON also, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10118) to amend section 5209 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 10232) to amend the act to regulate commerce; which was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STORER also, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 10250) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce;" which was referred to the House Calendar.

BUOYAGE WATER LINE, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. BRICKNER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (S. 3707) to make an appropriation for the establishment of buoyage on the water front of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Ill.; which was referred to the House Calendar.

ROCKPORT AND HARBOR ISLAND SUBURBAN RAILROAD.

Mr. CRAIN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 9174) authorizing the Rockport and Harbor Island Suburban Railroad to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, near its entrance into Aransas Bay, in Aransas County, Tex.; which was referred to the House Calendar.

MILLE LAC INDIAN RESERVATION IN MINNESOTA.

By Mr. AMERMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands: Joint resolution (S. R. 86) for the protection of those parties who have heretofore been allowed to make entries of lands within the former Mille Lac Indian Reservation in Minnesota—to the House Calendar.

TRUST, LOAN, AND OTHER CORPORATIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: A bill (H. R. 10248) to amend an act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other incorporations within the District of Columbia—to the House Calendar.

SALE OF LIQUORS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: A bill (H. R. 7207) to regulate the sale of distilled and fermented liquors in the District of Columbia—to the House Calendar.

SATURDAY HALF-HOLIDAY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: Joint resolution (S. R. 130) to amend an act entitled "An act making Saturday a half-holiday for banking and trust companies in the District of Columbia," approved December 22, 1892—to the House Calendar.

ECLECTIC MEDICAL SOCIETY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: A bill (S. 741) to incorporate the Eclectic Medical Society of the District of Columbia—to the House Calendar.

EAST WASHINGTON CROSS-TOWN RAILWAY COMPANY.

By Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: A bill (H. R. 5353) to incorporate the East Washington Crosstown Railway Company of the District of Columbia—to the House Calendar.

WASHINGTON, BURNT MILLS AND SANDY SPRING RAILWAY COMPANY.

By Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: A bill (H. R. 9956) to incorporate the Washington, Burnt Mills and Sandy Spring Railway Company—to the House Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of the standing and select committees for reports. The morning hour begins at five minutes to 1. The call rests with the Committee on the Library, which committee had a bill pending yesterday.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that bill.

The SPEAKER. This is the second call for the purpose of permitting committees to bring up measures for consideration.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent to pass the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with the right to be taken up later without prejudice.

Mr. BACON. I object.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

HOSPITAL CORPS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9925) to establish companies of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the companies of the Hospital Corps, organized by the Secretary of War in the Medical Department of the Army, are hereby established upon the same military status as companies of infantry, and shall hereafter be known as companies of the Hospital Corps.

SEC. 2. That each company shall consist of eight hospital sergeants, one of whom shall be selected as first sergeant and one as quartermaster sergeant; six hospital corporals, two musicians, one artificer, and as many privates, not exceeding one hundred, as the President may direct.

SEC. 3. That the hospital sergeants shall be detailed as such from the hospital stewards, the hospital corporals from the acting hospital stewards, and the remaining members of the companies from the privates of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, and each shall receive the pay of his grade in the Hospital Corps.

SEC. 4. That the necessary officers to command the companies of the Hospital Corps shall be detailed from the Medical Department, United States Army.

SEC. 5. That the President is authorized to organize for bearer, ambulance, field, hospital, and other like service, such companies of the Hospital Corps as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The bill does not provide for any appropriation or require any expenditure of money whatever. It should be on the House Calendar. If it is on the Union Calendar it is there by mistake.

The SPEAKER. That being true, the Committee of the Whole will be discharged from the further consideration of it, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 3, in section 1, by adding the word "already" after the words "Hospital Corps," and striking out all of section 6.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POST TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3117) relating to post traderships.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a vacancy now exists or hereafter occurs in the position of post trader at any military post it shall not be filled, and the authority to make such appointment is hereby terminated: Provided, That in the event of the death of a post trader his personal representative shall be allowed by the Secretary of War a reasonable time in which to close the business.

Mr. HEARD. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to make a brief explanation. I do not know of any good reason why the bill should not pass, but I should like the gentleman to state briefly the reason why he thinks it should pass.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. OUTHWAITE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3117) to abolish post traderships, are of the opinion that this measure should become a law, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The Senate report, a copy of which is hereunto attached, is adopted by the House committee.

[Senate Report No. 713, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3117) relating to post traderships, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to abolish post traderships. It will not produce a radical change, and the present system will continue until those persons who are now post traders shall either die or retire, but when vacancies occur from either of those causes, then the post tradership shall be abolished. The bill has received the approval of the War Department and the Major-General Commanding the Army, whose report is herewith appended. An extract from the last report of the Secretary of War upon this subject is also annexed.

Your committee has amended the bill and in its amended form recommend that it pass.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1892.

SIR: Referring to Senate bill 3117, entitled "A bill relating to post traderships," I have the honor to report as follows:

The position of post trader was originally established in part, perhaps, as a substitute for the old sutlership which had been abolished, but mainly as a means of supplying necessities to emigrants and travelers passing or visiting military posts on the frontier at a period of time when the Army and roving Indians were almost the sole inhabitants of a vast region of country. Around all those, then new, frontier posts have grown up thriving towns where traders of all kinds are able to supply the necessities above referred to, by means of which the post trader became only a privileged rival of citizens engaged in legitimate business in the near vicinity.

These trade stores were also found to be a demoralizing element in nearly every garrison, being places of dissipation for both officers and enlisted men. Under the wiser social custom gradually developed in the Army, both officers and enlisted men have generally been provided with far better means for social entertainment and recreation, the officers having their post messes or clubs, and the soldiers the institution now called "exchange," both of which are in the main coöperative stores in their character, and as such supply to the officers and their families and to the enlisted men of every garrison all those comforts and luxuries which are deemed essential in modern society.

The post trader is no longer necessary, and in nearly all cases, if continued at all, would be only a source of detriment to the best interests of the Army. In some cases the policy of the War Department to do away with all post traders has been delayed through a just and generous regard for vested interests of the present incumbents, and such have been permitted to continue their business until they could close out without material loss, and their buildings have been or are to be purchased at a fair price whenever that may be done to the advantage of the Government. So rapidly as this can be accomplished the system of post traders should be eliminated entirely, and I therefore fully concur in the wisdom of the proposed law repealing the authority to appoint post traders in the Army. This necessity can never hereafter again arise so long as the territory of the United States remains with its present boundaries.

Very respectfully,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General Commanding.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

[Extract from the last report of the Secretary of War.]

At the beginning of this administration there were licensed post traders at most army posts. They were a privileged class, exempt from taxation, because located on Government reservations, and had practically a monopoly of the trade in such articles as were not furnished or sold by the quartermaster or commissary. Wherever cities and villages have grown up near the formerly remote Western posts, and the post trader has thus ceased to be a necessity, it has been my purpose to discontinue the system as rapidly as possible and permit the trade of military posts, outside of the ordinary governmental supplies, to take its regular channels.

On the 4th of March, 1889, there were eighty-five of these traders. There are now but twenty-two, and seven of these have been notified that their licenses will be revoked within a short time, at a date so fixed as to give them an opportunity to sell or reduce their stocks. Four of the remaining fifteen are at posts whose abandonment has been ordered, or soon will be, so that at the end of the fiscal year there will be only eleven remaining.

The parties who held these privileges had large personal and political influence, and it has not been an easy or pleasant task to make this change. Many of them also had invested considerable capital in these enterprises, and were, therefore, entitled to consideration and a reasonable time to close their business. But their profits had been large, and I believe that no injustice has been done them. It was a pernicious system and necessity was the only excuse for its existence at any time. It has outlived whatever usefulness it may have had, and its longer continuance is not for the interest of the service or for the public good.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (during the reading of the report). I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. HEARD. I am content with the report as far as read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LINES OF BATTLE OF THE ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA AT GETTYSBURG.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 2914) for marking the lines of battle and positions of troops of the Army of Northern Virginia at Gettysburg, Pa., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was reported.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BYNUM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, so far as the bill has been read it places before the committee fully and clearly the purposes of the bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that the Clerk now commence with the reading of the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of preserving the lines of battle at Gettysburg, Pa., and for properly marking with tablets the positions occupied by the various commands of the armies of the Potomac and of Northern Virginia on that field, and for the purchase or condemnation of land of historical importance, and for opening and improving avenues along the positions occupied by troops upon those lines, and for fencing the same, and for determining the leading tactical positions of batteries, regiments, brigades, divisions, corps, and other organizations with reference to the study and correct understanding of the battle, and to mark the same with suitable tablets, each bearing a brief historical legend, compiled without praise and without censure, and to be prepared by said commission and approved by the Secretary of War, the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three commissioners, two of whom shall have been participants in the battle of Gettysburg, and one of whom shall have been an officer of the Army of Northern Virginia; and the said commissioners shall have the general charge of the work aforesaid, and shall recommend the purchase of such land as they deem it necessary for the United States to acquire for the purposes aforesaid, and they shall, under the directions and instructions of the Secretary of War, execute the provisions of this act. The said commissioners shall be paid such compensation, out of the appropriation provided in this act, as the Secretary of War shall deem reasonable and just, not exceeding $10 each per day of actual service, and they may employ such surveying parties and clerical assistance as may be necessary, and secure such historical information as they may need, at compensations for these several services to be fixed by the commission, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and to be paid out of the appropriation provided in this act.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendments to this section be voted on in gross, unless a separate vote be demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments be voted on in gross. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURROWS. What are the amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, section 1, after the word "field," insert "and the securing and compiling of additional historical data now available beyond that now in possession of the Government."

In line 8, section 1, strike out the words "the leading" and insert in place thereof the words "delineating the most important." At the end of same line add the words "and evolutions."

Section 2. Strike out all after the word "censure," in line 13, to and including the word "and," in line 21, and insert in place thereof the following:

"A commission is hereby created and established, under the name of 'The Gettysburg Battlefield Commission,' to consist of three members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, one of whom shall be a civilian who is recognized as the person best informed in the history of the battle, possessing the most thorough knowledge of the history of the battle, and who shall be chairman of the commission and its historian; one an officer of the Army of the Potomac who participated in the battle, and one an officer of the Army of Northern Virginia who participated in the battle. Said commission shall have a principal office in connection with the War Department in the city of Washington.

"The said chairman shall, as soon as possible after his appointment, compile historical maps showing not only the general lines of battle of the two armies, but approximately the successive tactical and strategic positions and evolutions of all bodies of troops taking part in said engagement, to the end that all the principal operations of batteries, regiments, brigades, divisions, and corps, and other organizations, when acting as such respectively, may be represented upon said maps, and by means of which the said several positions and evolutions of said organizations may be marked upon the field, and for said special services in the preparation of said maps said historian shall be paid a reasonable compensation, not exceeding the sum of $25,000, to be fixed by the Secretary of War: the same to be paid in such installments, according to the progress of the work, as may be determined upon between said historian and the Secretary of War."

Line 20, section 1, strike out the word "aforesaid" and insert in lieu thereof the words "upon the field."

Line 21, section 1, after the word "purchase," insert "or condemnation."

Line 25, section 1, after the word "commission," insert "in addition to the special services of the historian."
Line 31, section 1, after the word "such," insert "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, on page 2 of the bill, line 17, after the word "tablets," I would like to inquire whether the gentleman in charge of the bill would object to inserting the words "of uniform designs."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would have to object to that, for the reason that the plan would involve different designs to indicate the different bodies of troops. And the position of different bodies of troops would be indicated by tablets of different designs. For instance, where a battery of artillery had been planted, possibly the tablet might have a circular top; where a company or regiment of infantry had been, the tablet might have a square top; and where cavalry had been, it might have a pointed top. Therefore, I think there is no necessity for introducing such a suggestion as that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROSIUS. Now, if the gentleman will have the kindness to allow me just a moment, I will state that it does not seem necessary for the purpose of this marking to indicate lines of battles and to furnish information concerning the battle to have the different designs which the gentleman has suggested, and it seems to me that it may be better, inasmuch as these tablets are to be for a uniform purpose, namely the marking of lines of battle, it seems to me there would be a propriety in having a uniform design. Now, I do not intend to press this, and will not ask for a vote upon it, but would prefer to have it adopted if the gentleman would do so.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, it is not simply to mark the lines of battle, but to mark the evolutions and movements of the troops. The same troops may have occupied several positions. Troops may have had one position at one time, and the same body of troops had another position at a little later period, and the purpose is to mark the evolutions of the troops.

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, then, I will not press the amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask the Chairman to submit my request that the amendments be voted on in gross.

Mr. PICKLER. This will not interfere with any markings that are there now, will it?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not in the least; it simply supplements the markings there now.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to make a verbal amendment. On page 2, in line 12, insert the word "and" before the word "delineating."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now desire to amend, on the same page, line 13, by striking out the words "and evolutions," where they occur, and insert them after the word "positions" in the same line.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The clerk read section 2 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the title to such lands as the Secretary of War may find it necessary to purchase to carry into effect the provisions of this act may be acquired by purchase, by condemnation, under the act of the Pennsylvania Legislature providing for the condemnation of land on said battlefield, approved the 7th day of May, A. D. 1889, or in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes;" and all lands acquired by the United States under this act, whether by purchase, condemnation, cession, gift, or otherwise, and all avenues constructed, and all tablets or other structures erected shall be under the care and supervision of the Secretary of War, whose duty it shall be to make such rules and regulations for their protection and preservation as he may deem necessary.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, there are one or two verbal amendments in that section which the committee desire to have made.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Line 2, after the word "find," strike out "it."
After the word "necessary" strike out "to purchase."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That to enable the Secretary of War to begin the work contemplated by this act, and prosecuting it to include the location of lines of battle and positions of troops, the selection and mapping of such lands as the commission may deem it necessary to acquire to carry out the purposes of this act, and to pay the expense of surveys, the per diem of commissioners, and the necessary clerical assistance, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. I see that there is an amendment proposed by the committee to this section, increasing the appropriation to $50,000. Sir, this will not be one-tenth of the expenditure that will be involved in the execution of this bill should it become law.

Mr. COGSWELL. How do you know?

Mr. SAYERS. I know, because the marking of the battlefield of Chattanooga has cost over $400,000 already, and I take it for granted that this will cost not less, but probably more.

Mr. COGSWELL. But the cost at Chattanooga includes the acquiring of land.

Mr. SAYERS. And this bill also proposes to acquire land.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments proposed by the committee to this section be voted on in gross unless some gentleman desires a separate vote.

Mr. SAYERS. We shall demand separate votes upon all the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] asks unanimous consent that the amendments to this section may be voted upon in gross. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMPSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Section 3, lines 1 and 2, insert after the word "war" the words "to pay for said historical maps and."

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 44, noes 15.

Mr. SIMPSON and Mr. ANTONY. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman appointed Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. ANTONY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 135, noes 5.

Mr. ANTONY. No quorum.

The count was resumed; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 6. So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Section 3, line 2, after the word "the," insert the word "other;" so as to read: "and to begin the other work," etc.

The question was taken, and the CHAIRMAN declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 0.

Mr. LONG. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. LONG were appointed to act as tellers.

Pending the count by tellers the morning hour expired, and the committee rose.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (S. 2914), and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10267) making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DINGLEY and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky reserved all points of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 21st instant, beginning immediately after the second morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; bills to be considered in the order indicated by said committee.

NATIONAL QUARANTINE BILL.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9759, the quarantine bill, but before doing that I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL], who desires to call up a local bill which has the unanimous approval of the committee and to which, I think, there can be no objection.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Maryland yields the floor the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL] to call up the bill, which, the Chair understands, comes from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, GAY HEAD, MASS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1631) to establish a life-saving station at Gay Head, on the coast of Massachusetts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near Gay Head, on the coast of Massachusetts, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend: Provided, That the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum of $10,000.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that that committee be discharged from the consideration of the bill and that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL QUARANTINE BILL.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9757) "To provide for the better protection of commerce and for the general welfare by the establishment of a national quarantine, etc.," and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9757) to provide for the better protection of commerce, and for the general welfare by the establishment of a national quarantine, etc.

Mr. RAYNER. I wish to say that in lieu of the original bill introduced by myself at the beginning of this session the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported as a substitute an entirely different bill. It would be an absolute waste of time to read the original bill, because it is a totally different measure from that which the committee have reported. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the Clerk in reading omit the original bill, and read simply the substitute reported by the committee.

There was no objection.

The substitute reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

"That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or other vessel from any foreign port or place to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such rules and regulations of State and municipal health authorities as may be made in pursuance of or consistent with this act; and any such vessel which shall enter, or attempt to enter, a port of the United States in violation thereof shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States. In all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States; and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That all vessels at foreign ports clearing for any port or place in the United States shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure, or from the medical officer where such officer has been detailed by the President for that purpose, a bill of health, in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth the sanitary history and condition of said vessel, and that it has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed for securing the best sanitary condition of the said vessel, its cargo, passengers, and crew; and said consular or medical officer is required, before granting such duplicate bill of health, to be satisfied that the matters and things therein stated are true; and for his services in that behalf he shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulation be allowed, to be accounted for as is required in other cases.

"The President, in his discretion, is authorized to detail any medical officer of the Government to serve in the office of the consul at any foreign port or ports for the purpose of furnishing information and making the inspection and giving the bills of health hereinbefore mentioned. Any vessel clearing and sailing from any such port without such bill of health, and entering any port of the United States, shall forfeit to the United States not more than $5,000, the amount to be determined by the court, which shall be a lien on the same, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States. In all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States; and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia; and at such ports and places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations under State or municipal authority, where such regulations are, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, necessary to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State or municipality which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, if in his judgment it is necessary and proper, make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, and when said rules and regulations have been made they shall be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States and municipalities, where the State or municipal health authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President shall execute and enforce the same and may detail or appoint officers for that purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are authorized by the laws of the United States and necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage, where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place at which contagious or infectious disease exists, or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped, to any port or place in the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such vessel, her cargo, passengers, and crew which shall be published and communicated to and enforced by the consular and medical officers of the United States. None of the penalties herein imposed shall attach to any vessel or owner or officer thereof until a copy of this act, with the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, has been posted up in the office of the consul or other consular officer of the United States for ten days, in the port from which said vessel sailed; and the certificate of such consul or consular officer over his official signature shall be competent evidence of such posting in any court of the United States.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act, and to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officer of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, including State and municipal sanitary authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States, and shall prepare, publish, and transmit to collectors of customs and to State and municipal health officers and other sanitarians weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by him, and shall also, as far as he may be able, by means of the voluntary coöperation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations, and private persons, procure information relating to the climatic and other conditions affecting the public health, and shall make an annual report of his operations to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem important to the public interests.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port, and otherwise make publicly known, the rules and regulations made by him, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports, for securing the best sanitary condition of such vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crew, before their departure for any port in the United States, and in the course of the voyage; and all such other rules and regulations as shall be observed in the inspection of the same on the arrival thereof at any quarantine station at the port of destination, and for the disinfection and isolation of the same, and the treatment of cargo and persons on board, so as to prevent the introduction of cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious diseases; and it shall not be lawful for any vessel to enter said port to discharge its cargo, or land its passengers, except upon a certificate of the health officer at such quarantine station certifying that said rules and regulations have in all respects been observed and complied with, as well on his part as on the part of the said vessel and its master, in respect to the same and to its cargo, passengers, and crew; and the master of every such vessel shall produce and deliver to the collector of customs at said port of entry, together with the other papers of the vessel, the said bills of health required to be obtained at the port of departure and the certificate herein required to be obtained from the health officer at the port of entry; and that the bills of health herein prescribed shall be considered as part of the ship's papers, and when duly certified to by the proper consular or other officer of the United States, over his official signature and seal, shall be accepted as evidence of the statements therein contained in any court of the United States.

SEC. 6. That on the arrival of an infected vessel at any port not provided with proper facilities for treatment of the same, the Secretary of the Treasury may remand said vessel, at its own expense, to the nearest national or other quarantine station where accommodations and appliances are provided for the necessary disinfection and treatment of the vessel, passengers, and cargo; and after treatment of any infected vessel at a national quarantine station, and after certificate shall have been given by the United States quarantine officer at said station that the vessel, cargo, and passengers are each and all free from infectious disease or danger of conveying the same, said vessel shall be admitted to entry to any port of the United States named within the certificate. But at any ports where sufficient quarantine provision has been made by State or local authorities the Secretary of the Treasury may direct vessels bound for said ports to undergo quarantine at said State or local station.

SEC. 7. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or yellow fever in a foreign country there is serious danger of the introduction of the same into the United States, and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by immigration that a suspension of the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have power to suspend immigration from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 8. That the act entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. STUMP. I ask for the reading of the reports.

Mr. RAYNER. Oh, I hope they may be read afterward.

Mr. STUMP. We want at least one of the reports read.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for the reading of the majority report, and also the minority report, which, in my opinion, is a perfect answer to the report of the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not yield the floor at present for the reading of any report. I will have those reports read as a part of my remarks, as I do not intend to address the House for more than ten or fifteen minutes. But I do not desire to have time occupied now with the reading.

Mr. COMPTON. I would like to inquire whether the bill just read from the desk is the same as the bill passed by the Senate?

Mr. RAYNER. No, it is not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a few general remarks upon the subject of quarantine, and I shall then explain very briefly the status of these bills. I kindly ask that I may not be interrupted until I get to the bills and then I will yield for any question and will do my utmost to make every necessary explanation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether, under the rules, I have not the right to have the majority report read?

The CHAIRMAN. Not while another gentleman has the floor.

Mr. RAYNER. The gentleman shall have the reports read; I will have them read in my own time; there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are all agreed upon the proposition that something should be done, if possible, to avoid the threatened presence of pestilence upon our shores during the coming summer; and that while we are providing for temporary security we ought to adopt some permanent plan to protect us in the future from the continual danger to which otherwise we should be exposed.

It is needless for me to state to the House that it would be impossible to estimate the sacrifices we would incur and the losses which would be inflicted upon us if this deadly scourge that has lately depopulated one of the greatest commercial centers of Europe should gain an entrance upon our territory. War or famine would prove far less destructive, because against war we could defend ourselves and against famine we might seek deliverance through the relief and benevolence of mankind.

I do not wish to create any false apprehensions upon this subject; but with the tide of immigration that is pouring in upon us at every port of entry the highest authorities unite in predicting that it is almost impossible for us to evade or escape the threatened danger. If we adopt no preventive measures, if we look heedlessly on without any combined effort at resistance, if with all its horrors staring us in the face we defy it to approach us, if we are willing to take our chances and rely upon temporary devices and expedients when the emergency is upon us, then, Mr. Chairman, it will be a miracle if we escape; and I am almost tempted to say that it will be a just punishment if the danger overtakes us.

I shall not consume the time of this House in discussing our constitutional power to pass a bill of this sort. The right to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign countries carries with it the fullest power that is necessary for this purpose. I believe not only in the power, but in the imperative duty of the Federal Government to assume jurisdiction over this matter; and I would, if I had my way—for I want to be very frank, and will say that this bill does not suit me, though I am willing to take it as a compromise—if I had my own way I would curtail every unnecessary expense in order to provide for the creation, the equipment, and the maintenance of a board of maritime sanitation that would render the presence of this great calamity impossible in our midst. And if we are unwilling to do that, Mr. Chairman, I want to go a step farther and say that I would be in favor of suspending all immigration from infected ports until the danger from infection is passed.

There are two classes of immigrants coming to this country. The one class has been and will continue to be a benefit and a blessing to the country; the other is a detriment and an injury. This country was intended as an asylum for the downtrodden and the oppressed from every land who are in sympathy with our institutions. But it never was contemplated that our land should become a place of refuge for those who do not believe in any established institutions, who are the disciples of lawlessness, who have been educated in the schools of disorder and anarchy, and who come here simply because they believe that this being a free country it will afford them a free opportunity to put their pernicious principles into successful execution.

We may as well, Mr. Chairman, have plain, candid words on the subject; and I have no fear about expressing my exact convictions in reference thereto; because a number of these helpless wanderers whom despotism has lashed over every frontier in Europe, and driven in on our shores, have my warmest and deepest sympathy in their distress. Robbed of their birthright, unprotected by law, punished and expatriated, they have been despoiled of their homes, forced from their sanctuaries, and sent as outlaws from place to place upon the face of the earth, simply for committing the crime of worshiping God according to the traditions of their faith and the dictates of their own consciences.

I believe, sir, that every civilized nation on the face of the globe ought to combine to demand of their persecutors that they shall be required to amend their code of religious intolerance and become proselytes at the altar of reason and humanity, or that they shall be no longer tolerated or maintain friendly contact and intercourse with the free nations of the world. But as deeply and profoundly as I feel on this subject I do not believe that we ought to become the receptacle for the conditions and the vice and the crimes that are turned in on us from the continent of Europe.

Last summer, as all will remember, a foreign steamship company sent one of its vessels from an infected port, and with a living sepulcher beneath her decks, with flying colors, entered the harbor of New York, utterly regardless of the sanitary laws of that Commonwealth and of the hundreds and thousands of human lives being imperiled at the port of destination. Had it not been for the heroic conduct of your sanitary officer in that city there is no foretelling what disaster might have been inflicted on our population. The master of this ship was willing to tie his vessel to the dock and actually to distribute his cargo and steerage not only in defiance of the laws of New York, but in disregard of the maritime code of nations.

This instance, Mr. Chairman, only illustrates how utterly powerless even the great State of New York, with its vast municipal powers, would be to provide itself and the balance of the State from an invasion of this character.

Now, I propose very briefly to give the status of these bills, and if any gentleman on the floor desires to ask any question I will cheerfully yield for the purpose of answering, because I am anxious that this measure shall be completed to-day, and hope to be for that reason very much briefer in my remarks than I should otherwise desire.

I introduced at the beginning of the session of Congress a bill for the creation and equipment of a board of maritime sanitation. On consultation with a committee of the Senate I saw at once that there would be little opportunity or chance for a bill of that character getting through the Senate even if it should have passed the House. Then the Senate bill was passed. This bill is a compromise measure. It does not put quarantine regulations in the hands of the Federal Government exclusively.

Mr. CRAIN (interrupting). Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. I would not do so, but I understood the gentleman to say that he solicited interrogatories.

Mr. RAYNER. I did not say that I wanted questions, but I am perfectly willing to answer them, if for information.

Mr. CRAIN. I want to know if the gentleman is entirely correct in his last statement that the municipal authorities or the State authorities have absolute control in this matter, and that the Federal authorities only act in cases where there is no State or municipal authority?

Mr. RAYNER. I will explain the point to which the gentleman alludes so that every one will understand, but I must ask to be permitted to do so in my own way.

There has been no quarantine legislation in this country virtually for almost one hundred years. The first act was passed in 1799.

Mr. CRAIN. The first Federal act.

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, the first Federal act. This is the first one, and that was passed nearly one hundred years ago, and amounts to absolutely nothing. It was never intended to be executed, and the only provision of consequence in it was a provision which permitted the President to remove the Government's offices here from the city of Washington, in case of danger, to some other city which was not infected.

There has been nothing done under that act until 1878—no quarantine regulations—for nearly eighty years. Both of these enactments followed epidemics of disaster, the yellow fever immediately preceding the year 1799, and there having been also an outbreak of yellow fever in 1878. The act of 1878, which was crudely and inartificially drawn, gave rise to the complication of last summer in New York, so much so that the most distinguished counsel in the land had conflicting notions as to the powers of the Government under that act. At the end of that act was a provision which provided that nothing herein contained shall conflict or interfere with the regulations of any State, etc.

This act did not provide for any consular or any other inspection at ports of departure as the bill of the Chairman of the Committee on Immigration provides.

It does not provide for anything except that the Federal officials may assist the State officers in the execution of the law. That is about all that the act of 1878 provides for. Now, there is only one more act on the subject, and that is the act of 1890. That act has not been brought to public attention as much as it should have been. It provides that the President can put it into execution whenever cholera exists in the country. The act is very brief, and to show you how utterly inefficient it is for the purposes for which it was intended, I propose to read it to you.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. What is the date of the act?

Mr. RAYNER. The act was passed March 27, 1890. This act was entirely overlooked in the discussion last summer, I may say, and the Treasury officials in doing what they did at the port of New York are said to have overlooked some of the important provisions of this act.

After the enacting clause the text of the act is as follows:

That whenever it shall be made to appear to the President that cholera, yellow fever, small-pox or plagues exist in any State or Territory or in the District of Columbia—

Whenever it shall be made to appear that it exists. It must be made to appear that it exists before he can do anything. It may exist upon a vessel that comes across the ocean. It may exist even in a port of entry, but it must actually exist within the territorial limits of a commonwealth before the President can act or before the Federal authorities can act under this law, so as to avail themselves of its provisions. Not only that. The act provides that the President is—hereby authorized to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the spread of such disease from one State into another.

Gentlemen have talked a great deal here about the enormous powers that this act confers upon the Federal authorities, and have said that it enables a Federal inspector, for instance, if the disease exists in some city in Texas or in Louisiana, to enter there and blockade and barricade the city, but they have omitted and forgotten the fact that while this act gives no such power there is an act existing, the act of March 27, 1890, to which I am referring, that gives identically these powers, so far as they can be given under the Constitution of the United States.

But that act, as I say, contains the unfortunate provision that the President must be satisfied that the disease exists, and then, when he finds that it does exist, what can he do? He can not stop it. He can not pass any regulation, and the Treasury Department can not pass any regulation that will take effect at the port of entry, but he can take measures to prevent it from going from one State into another. Now, that act could never be carried out. The Treasury officials knew they could not carry it out. They never made the slightest effort to carry out this act, because it did not apply to the emergency which existed last summer, or to the emergency with which we are threatened, and that is the appearance of the disease at a port of entry.

Now that is the situation with reference to legislation upon this subject, with the exception of the act of 1888, which establishes certain Federal quarantine stations. There are only five or six Federal quarantine stations in the United States. There is one, I think, at Cape Charles. There is another at the Delaware Breakwater. There is one at Ship Island——

Mr. STOCKDALE. Chendeliers Island it is now.

Mr. RAYNER. There is none in the State of New York, none in the State of Massachusetts. There is no Federal quarantine station in Louisiana. There is none in Texas. There is none in any of the maritime States with the exception of the stations at the Delaware Breakwater and Cape Charles, and one or two other places which I have mentioned.

There is not in this bill a single word that gives the Government a single right to take possession of the quarantine stations. I want if I can to impress that upon gentlemen who, for reasons no doubt satisfactory to themselves, are opposed to this bill.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. Does the gentleman from Maryland deny the fact that in this bill the Secretary of the Treasury is made a supreme court to pass upon the legislation on quarantine subjects of the States of this Union?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not recognize that fact.

Mr. CRAIN. Then, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. RAYNER. I know the section that the gentleman refers to, which is section 3. I was coming to that. I am going through the different sections of the bill in my own way. I was coming to that in a moment, but as you have asked the question, I may as well come to that now. Section 3 provides that the Federal Government shall make necessary rules and regulations where there are no quarantine regulations.

Now, let us look at that. There are some States of the Union that have no quarantine regulations at all. There are a number of States that have quarantine regulations about the impounding of cattle, and so forth, but some States of this Union have absolutely no quarantine regulations upon their statute books. This third section provides, in the first portion of it, that in a case of that sort the Government may make necessary rules and regulations.

If the States have not these regulations, then why not give the Government, if necessary, the right to make them. The second portion of that section to which the gentleman refers provides that where these quarantine regulations are inefficient for the purposes for which they were designed the Treasury Department can make rules and regulations that are needed.

Mr. CRAIN. Will you pardon me? The second portion of section to which you refer authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, if, in his judgment, the State regulations upon this subject are insufficient, to make such additional rules and regulations as he may desire to make; and if the municipal or State authorities do not carry out his suggestions, then the President is authorized to use the force of this country to carry them out. That is making the Secretary of the Treasury a supreme court to pass upon legislation of the States.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, now——

Mr. BOWERS. Where the States fail or refuse to make such regulations.

Mr. RAYNER. That leads us into a discussion——

Mr. CRAIN. It is the plain English.

Mr. RAYNER. You are right about that; but let me answer that now. That leads us into a constitutional discussion as to whether it would not be very much better for the Federal Government to assume the entire jurisdiction of this matter.

Mr. CRAIN. Ah!

Mr. RAYNER. I think it would be very much better.

Mr. CRAIN. That may be true.

Mr. RAYNER. Now, let me finish in my own way.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that I believe in as strict a construction of the Constitution as he does; that I was trained by the strictest school in the construction of the Constitution, at the institution of learning that Thomas Jefferson founded; but I never will believe in an interpretation of that instrument that wholly nullifies the intention of the spirit of its framers, and that makes this Government of fully enumerated powers a feeble and a frail fabric to be humiliated and be trampled upon at the capricious bidding of any of the members that compose it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAIN. But that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. RAYNER. Now, if the gentleman wants me to go on let me say to him that I believe that this subject of health is a vital subject, and if I did not so believe I would not be in favor of the Federal Government assuming jurisdiction over it. You have a right to declare war by the Constitution, but you have no right, according to your construction of the Constitution, to defend against an enemy who can desolate your seaboard and convert your prosperous cities into a withering wilderness. You can, under the Constitution, provide uniform laws for naturalization; but according to the Texas construction you can not pass a uniform law of health. You can provide for the common defense, but you can not defend against an enemy that is more subtle than any enemy that ever appeared in human form.

I believe that under the Constitution the Government has the absolute right to provide for the protection of the public health; and, so far as I am concerned, I am utterly opposed to leaving this to the conflicting powers of forty-four different States. But I have accepted the Senate bill, not because I like, not because in all of its parts its meets with my approval. But I want to say to the gentleman that when this portion comes up for consideration there are plenty of gentlemen who will move to amend it; and there will be a motion made to strike out the very portion of this section he refers to.

Mr. CRAIN. That is all right.

Mr. RAYNER. And we will take a vote of the House upon that, so that the House itself can pass upon it. But I want to give the House my views, and that is that upon the subject of quarantine and of public health I am in favor of Federal legislation.

Mr. Chairman, let us go on a little further. This bill meets with two classes of objectors.

Now, let us try to do something to oblige those who think it is too strong, and also to oblige those who think it is too weak. I object to this bill because I think it is too weak, but I am perfectly willing to accept it. There are several gentlemen here who think it ought to be much stronger. There are several gentlemen here who think it ought to be much weaker. After four or five days' discussion in the Senate this bill was adopted as a compromise measure; and, while it does not suit me in all its parts, while it is not a perfect measure, rather than take the risk we are taking, I am willing to accept it, as it may be improved with amendments, as a compromise measure, in order to meet the exigencies and the emergencies of the case. I will refer to one other point, and then I will reserve the balance of my time or yield the floor.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Before the gentleman closes I would like him to explain the provisions in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, on page 20.

Mr. RAYNER. I will come to that presently. I understood that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] desired to ask me a question.

Mr. OATES. I wish to ask the gentleman to yield me some time.

Mr. RAYNER. I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. CRAIN. One more question before the gentleman sits down. I understand that he agrees with me that that part of section 3 ought to be stricken out.

Mr. RAYNER. No; you must not understand any such thing. I do not agree with you at all. I never disagreed with anybody more in my life. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN. You admit that the Secretary of the Treasury has power to pass upon legislation, whether State or municipal, in regard to quarantine subjects.

Mr. RAYNER. I do decidedly.

Mr. CRAIN. Therefore, to that extent you agree with me.

Mr. RAYNOR. I agree with you as to the construction of the statute.

Mr. CRAIN. Now, what is there in this bill which provides for the keeping out of infectious or contagious diseases along the border between the State of Texas and Mexico?

Mr. RAYNER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] will at the proper time introduce an amendment to protect the Mexican frontier and the Canadian frontier, and, as far as I am able to do it, I have accepted that amendment; so that the gentleman from Texas will be protected from cholera in his State.

Mr. CRAIN. It is not cholera that we fear.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, yellow fever, or anything else. I don't know what you do have down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me a question?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee had adopted the Senate bill.

Mr. RAYNER. No, sir; we have not adopted the Senate bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. Now, will you explain why you have reported certain changes in the bill passed by the Senate? I do not wish to interrupt you again, so I will call your attention now to line 36, on page 16, as compared with the language on the same subject found on page 5 of the Senate bill. I will also call your attention——

Mr. RAYNER. There are a dozen different changes from the Senate bill, and there is no use in calling my attention to every one of them.

Mr. CHIPMAN. There is; because I wish to know what you think of them. I call your attention to the changes made in section 7, very important changes, which, in my judgment, radically alter the meaning of the Senate bill. I should be glad to hear the reasons for those changes.

Mr. RAYNER. The committee of conference reported the bill that Senator HARRIS reported, identically the same measure. When this bill came up the other day in the House, I asked leave to substitute the Senate bill, but, by an objection from the gentleman from New York, I was prevented from doing that. There are a number of differences between the Senate bill and this. The principal difference is that that bill appropriates a million dollars.

Now, I do not think we need a million dollars for this purpose. I trust we shall not need any considerable amount of money; at all events, not any such amount as that, because there is already, I understand, an epidemic fund in the hands of the President, which he can use, under the law, for the purpose of meeting an emergency of this kind. That is the most radical difference between the Senate bill and ours, but there are other differences; and as the bill will probably go into conference, and as the House refused to permit us to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, the committee decided to present the bill in this form. But, Mr. Chairman, the vital point is the one stated by the gentleman from Texas; that is, whether or not you want to give the General Government the right, where the State regulations are inefficient, to supplant them by making better regulations, which shall be efficient.

Mr. CRAIN. I trust the gentleman will not misunderstand me. I recognize the fact that Congress has power to legislate upon this question, and also that the States have power to legislate in the absence of national legislation. There is no question about that. But what I contend against is giving the power to the Secretary of the Treasury to override State legislation upon this subject.

Mr. RAYNER. Oh, it is not the Secretary of the Treasury that you object to. You object to the whole Federal Government. If I were to amend that section by putting in the President and all the Cabinet officers you would still object to it.

Mr. CRAIN. I beg your pardon. If you will confine yourself to a statement of your own ideas on the subject you may be correct, but you have no right to submit to this House what you think my view or my idea is.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, what is the idea of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CRAIN. My idea is that the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to be permitted to override the regulations of the States or municipalities.

Mr. RAYNER. Who ought to be?

Mr. CRAIN. Why, Congress.

Mr. RAYNER. Congress! That is a beautiful idea! Just imagine! Is not that a lovely idea? Imagine cholera about to enter the city of New York next summer, and the gentleman sitting at his beautiful home in Texas undertaking to legislate to prevent the cholera from entering that city. How can Congress legislate?

Mr. CRAIN. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly there is not. you can not put in it a provision that Congress should legislate, because it would be perfectly impracticable and ridiculous.

Mr. CRAIN. But Congress can legislate——

Mr. RAYNER. Congress is legislating; but Congress can not make rules and regulations to apply——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] will suspend for a moment. The Committee of the Whole will come to order so that gentlemen occupying the floor may be heard.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to put an inquiry to the gentleman.

Mr. RAYNER. I will yield in a moment. I want to settle this question in the mind of the gentleman from Texas. How can Congress legislate with regard to the coming of cholera into the port of New York next summer? How can Congress possibly know how to deal with a case of that sort?

Mr. CRAIN. We can pass a general act.

Mr RAYNER. Is not this a general act?

Mr. CRAIN. No, sir.

Mr. RAYNER. What is it?

Mr. CRAIN. Why, it proposes to deal with the matter in detail by conferring jurisdiction upon an officer of the Government to override State legislation.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, Mr. Chairman, that amounts to this——

Mr. CRAIN. Of course the gentleman can indulge in ridicule, if he pleases; but that is not answering my proposition. I want him to understand that the people of my State may be seriously affected by this matter. I am anxious to join in the adoption of a measure for keeping out infectious and contagious diseases.

Mr. RAYNER. Your board of trade has unanimously instructed you to vote for this bill.

Mr. CRAIN. That shows my independence. When I think my board of trade wrong, I vote against it.

Mr. RAYNER. I think your board of trade knows more about this question than you do. With all due deference I prefer to take the opinion of your board of trade on a question of this kind. I would take the opinion of yourself and your colleague's on a constitutional question, but upon the subject of the cholera I prefer the opinion of the board of trade.

Mr. CRAIN. If you are willing to take my opinion on constitutional questions you will agree to the motion I propose to submit to strike out.

Mr. RAYNER. Now, I hope the gentleman will let me go on. I ask him to permit me to proceed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. From what the gentleman from Maryland said a few moments ago in reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], I understand that the gentleman from Maryland is in favor of the Senate bill with certain modifications. Yet we have before us the House bill with certain amendments. I wish to inquire why the committee, the Senate bill having come to the House, did not call up that bill in order that we might take action upon it, and put it in such a parliamentary status as might bring the two Houses into accord upon the same measure, instead of bringing before us an entirely new bill?

Mr. RAYNER. I explained that matter a moment ago, but I will explain it again. I asked permission to do that very thing, but objection was made, and it was not done. I could not do it without unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGLEY. Could not the Senate bill have been sent to the gentleman's committee instead of lying on the Speaker's table, and could it not have been reported and called up?

Mr. RAYNER. It was too late to do that. We did everything we could in the matter. The Senate bill came to this House upon the very day that the report of our committee came in. I was afraid to ask the commitment of the Senate bill to the Committee on Commerce, because our bill might come up in the mean time before the Senate bill could be reported. My purpose was to ask the substitution of the Senate measure for the House bill, the very thing which the gentleman from Maine thinks would have been the proper course. I did make that request; but the gentleman from New York objected; so the Senate bill is not now before the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. But you could have accomplished that result by referring it to your committee and reporting it back again.

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly, and if I had known that anything in the way of objection was going to be urged to my request, I might have done so. But I did not think that such a reasonable request would have met with an objection.

Now, I hope I may be permitted to go on for the purpose of explaining this bill. In the first place let me say that if the Secretary of the Treasury is not to be the judge, who is to be? Suppose that you have a State regulation which is inefficient and that there is a Federal regulation on the same subject; who is to judge which is to be enforced? If the gentleman objects to the Secretary of the Treasury having this power, he can put it in the hands of the President of the United States to appoint any one else. But his point is that Congress shall make rules and regulations.

How can Congress make rules and regulations? Congress can only pass a general bill giving the officials in charge the right to make such rules and regulations as will meet the aspects of the case as they may arise. We can not take into consideration a subject that does not exist. We do not know what rules and regulations we will require, because sometimes rules and regulatsons applicable to one disease do not apply to another. We do not know whether we want a vessel disinfected or not, or sent from one station to another, or whether the people on board are to be disinfected and quarantined. That is to be left to the officer who, under the statutes of the United States, would have charge of the subject. He must make such local rules and regulations as will meet the case.

Now, there are one or two other sections of this bill to which I want to allude briefly. Referring to the first section again there certainly can be no objection to that. It provides for a method of procedure. The Senate bill provides for a consular inspection. There can be no objection to that, and I understand the chairman of the Committee on Immigration will offer an amendment to this bill providing for an inspection at the ports of departure, and certainly there will be no objection to that.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. RAYNER. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. CRAIN. I thought you said you were willing to have any gentleman ask questions for information?

Mr. RAYNER. Any gentleman; yes. But you are the same gentleman who has been asking me questions all along and consuming my time.

Mr. CRAIN. I will yield you my hour.

Mr. RAYNER. You have no hour to yield.

Mr. CRAIN. Am I not a member of the committee?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

Mr. CRAIN. Then every member of the committee has a right to an hour if he desires it.

Mr. RAYNER. I think there is no such rule. There are seventeen members of the committee, and that would take seventeen hours.

Mr. CRAIN. Is the gentleman willing to submit to a question propounded, not for the purpose of retarding the bill, but for information?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

Mr. CRAIN. Why limit this to a medical officer of the Government? Why limit the discretion of the President?

Mr. RAYNER. Well, I imagine a medical officer will be necessary. Lawyers can not do the work. What kind of an officer do you want?

Mr. CRAIN. But why limit the discretion of the President to the selection of a medical officer of the Government? Why not allow him to choose from persons outside of the Government service?

Mr. RAYNER. Oh! I have no objection to that. He can appoint wherever he finds a fit person. That is a matter of detail. But when he appoints an officer for this duty he becomes an officer of the Government, anyhow.

Now we come to the fifth section and the sixth, which provide for certain statistical information. There is no objection to them, and the only objection now, as I understand it, is to the fourth section of the bill.

Now, I want gentlemen to determine whether or not they are willing to give the public officers of the Government the right to make rules and regulations where there are none, or where they are inefficient, and make them the judges of the insufficiency in such rules and regulations as may exist.

A word more, Mr. Chairman, and I will conclude what I have to say now, as I desire to reserve the remainder of my time. It has been said that there is no danger of this dread disease next summer, and that we need not anticipate it. I want to say that the concensus of medical opinion on the subject is that when this disease once commences in summer, and slumbers in winter, the experience of the world shows that it is likely to break out again during the following heated season. Follow the track of this disease where it starts in the tropical regions of Central Asia, where sanitary science is absolutely unknown, and whence it finds its way to the great capitals of Europe, notwithstanding every effort has been made to restrain its dread progress.

Last summer, without a moment's warning, it entered the gates of one of the fairest cities of Europe, and during months of untold anguish and sorrow it strode like a destroying angel from door to door and home to home of her afflicted people. The highways of traffic were closed. Commerce was prostrated and a half a million of human beings were isolated from intercourse with mankind. The slightest precaution would have avoided this catastrophe.

I believe in preventive rather than remedial measures, and I call upon this House not to adjourn without heeding the appeal that comes to us from almost every school of medicine, from every chamber of commerce, from every board of trade, from every board of health to guard the coast, and to at least place in the hands of the hospital service of the revenue marine the right to pass rules and regulations with which a State shall have no more right of interference than the militia of a State would have the right to interfere with the regular Army in protecting our coast from the invasion of a foreign foe.

If the House desires to know my opinion upon it, I tell you very frankly that I am opposed to leaving it to the States. That only means conflict and contention. But more than that, I am opposed to presenting to our people the awful policy of inaction. If the blight of this scourge should come upon us, in those hours of despair when the whole world shall become our enemy, when its hospitable shores are closed upon us, when there is no hope and no relief till nature runs her deadly course, exhausted by the number of victims that she has gathered for her sacrifice, I for one would never have forgiven myself, if, when the opportunity was presented, I had not at least sounded an alarm which, however feeble it may be, may have possibly awakened us to a proper sense of our responsibility and may have rescued the homes of our countrymen from the perils of this affliction. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks of the eloquent gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and I am in full accord——

Mr. RAYNER. Is the gentleman occupying my time?

Mr. MALLORY. I am occupying my own time.

Mr. RAYNER. I have reserved the balance of my time and promised to yield to several other gentlemen.

Mr. MALLORY. I am in opposition to some features of this bill.

Mr. RAYNER. I simply wanted to know the situation with reference to time.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, as I was proceeding to say, I am in full accord with the gentleman in the view that he takes as to most of this bill. I believe that there is an urgent necessity at this moment for Congress to take active and efficient measures for the purpose of preventing the invasion of an epidemic, and I think, sir, that this bill indicates that it has been most carefully considered and weighed well by those qualified to do so.

So far as the question of maritime quarantine is concerned I am in favor of all of the features of this bill. I believe it is within the power of Congress, under that clause of the Constitution that gives it the right to regulate commerce, to enact all measures that are necessary for the purpose of preventing the importation of diseases to our shores and across our borders; and if this bill were confined to that alone, I would do all that my Chamber of Commerce and my city council have telegraphed me requesting me to do, namely, to cast my vote for the measure.

But, sir, there is a feature in this bill which I do not think we should allow to pass without at least some criticism. I refer to a portion of the third section.

Under that portion of the third section to which I refer the Secretary of the Treasury is given power to prescribe rules and regulations, and State and municipal sanitary authorities are empowered to enforce them if they desire; but in the event of State and municipal sanitary authorities failing or refusing to enforce them, then the President is armed with power to appoint Federal officials for the purpose of carrying out those provisions.

These provisions, Mr. Chairman, relate to inhibitions upon intercourse between the States. Now, I will go as far as any gentleman who professes to entertain democratic principles, in giving the Federal Government ample power in this matter; but, sir, do what I could, I have failed, after a careful examination of the situation and into the judicial decisions bearing upon this point, to find any authority in Congress to say that a citizen of the State of New York, not engaged in commerce, not in any way connected with commerce, can have the heavy hand of the Federal Government laid upon his shoulder and be compelled to abide in the State of New York against his will.

That is a power we all concede to the States. The State of New Jersey can inhibit the passage of a citizen of New York across the Hudson River. The State of Kentucky can prohibit the passage of a citizen of Ohio across the Ohio River. But, sir, I say there is nowhere in the Constitution nor in any of the decisions that have been rendered by the tribunals in this land upon this question that you can put your finger upon a single utterance or intimation that gives that power to the President or to Congress.

That, Mr. Chairman, is my special objection to this bill. I appreciate, as I have said, the necessity of our entering upon legislation of this character at this time. I think there is no State in the Union that has had a sadder experience of the necessity of some general legislation of this character than the State which I have the honor in part to represent here.

Year after year our shores have been invaded by pestilence. Year after year the Legislature has been battling with it, and passing law after law endeavoring to reach a point whereby the sanitary condition of our country could be preserved; and I, who figured somewhat in the legislation of those days, long since reached the conclusion that so far as American quarantine is concerned it is in the power of the United States Government to impose or establish rules and regulations as stringent as may be, and that in the end it will prove to be for the benefit of the community. But, sir, I think that before we indorse the principle that is embodied in this portion of the third section, to which I have referred, before we open the door to the exercise of Federal power any more than it has been, notwithstanding the fact that the appeal is a most urgent one, notwithstanding the fact that eloquence can be poured upon us and every argument that oratory can employ can be ably employed, I say that we will be recreant to our duty if we pass this bill in the form in which it is presented.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that our powers are limited by the Constitution, and unless authority is granted either directly or by reasonably necessary implication, I for one, sir, shall not pass beyond what I believe to be the limitations prescribed in that instrument.

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] that it is desirable to keep out an invasion of cholera, and also of anarchists and communists. I quite agree that it is right and proper for Congress to do whatsoever it has authority to do to these ends. But when the gentleman, proclaiming himself a Jeffersonian Democrat, talks about Congress "assuming" the power to do anything, there we part company. Congress can not "assume" to do anything. It derives all of its power to act in all cases from the Constitution; and the Supreme Court of the United States, in every decision that was ever made touching the question, has so emphatically declared.

Mr. RAYNER. Does the gentleman say that I said that Congress could pass an unconstitutional law?

Mr. OATES. You say that you are in favor of Congress "assuming" the power to extend its quarantine over States in the absence of any grant to that end.

Mr. RAYNER. "Assuming" it under the Constitution, and as far as the Constitution allows it.

Mr. OATES. That is not the claim you made. That is not the ground you took. You claimed that Congress had the right to "assume" the power, and that in States where there was no quarantine regulation or an insufficient one in the opinion of a Federal official, that the Government should take the authority.

Mr. RAYNER. I withdraw the word "assume."

Mr. OATES. The gentleman has no right to "assume" that Congress can assume jurisdiction when the Constitution has not given it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The word "assume" is all right.

Mr. OATES. The Congress of the United States, under the Constitution, has no jurisdiction to enact quarantine or health laws overruling the laws of the States.

Mr. RAYNER. Why, the Supreme Court has decided that question, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. OATES. I know what the decision is, and I am going to give it to you.

Mr. RAYNER. What case have you?

Mr. OATES. Never mind, you will find out if you will keep your seat and behave yourself. [Laughter.]

Now, in this bill there are some good provisions; but the bill is gotten up (pardon the form of expression) wrong end foremost. It puts the Federal Government in the lead, and allows it to control this matter of quarantine regulation, when it has no power to do anything of the kind. It should follow and give aid to the States; but it can not take the lead of the States.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Follow the cholera through the States! [Laughter.] Is that what the gentleman means? That it should follow the cholera through the States? [Laughter.]

Mr. OATES. If you will take your seat and behave yourself, I will tell you what Chief Justice Marshall said in delivering the decision of the Supreme Court, and you will be better informed than you are now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. But Chief Justice Marshall might not be on hand to deal with the cholera. [Laughter.]

Mr. OATES. Then I will give you a later one, delivered by one of your own party, and you will stand on that, I suppose, cholera or no cholera. [Laughter.]

In the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, many years ago, this question came up and the court held:

> That inspection laws may have a remote and considerable influence on commerce will not be denied; but that a power to regulate commerce is the source from which the right to pass them is derived can not be admitted.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] contended, and other gentlemen who differ with him as to the details of the bill have contended, that under the power to regulate commerce you may make quarantine regulations. You can not do it.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OATES. Not now; later on.

Mr. RAYNER. Will you not give me the name of the case you are quoting?

Mr. OATES. I will treat you as you treated me. I am reading from the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden.

Mr. RAYNER. Oh, I do not think there is anyone in this House that does not know all about that case.

Mr. OATES. I think you are perhaps about the only exception. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYNER. I have gone over that case probably one hundred times.

Mr. OATES. Well, you did not read it to much purpose, judging from your remarks this evening. The court proceeds:

> The object of inspection laws is to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of a country; to fit them for exportation, or, it may be, for domestic use. They act upon the subject before it becomes an article of foreign commerce, or of commerce among the States, and prepare it for that purpose. They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the General Government; all which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State and those which respect turnpike roads, ferries, etc., are component parts of this mass.
> No direct general power over these objects is granted to Congress, and consequently they remain subject to State legislation. If the legislative power of the Union can reach them it must be for national purposes; it must be where the power is expressly given for a special purpose or is clearly incidental to some power which is expressly given. It is obvious that the Government of the Union, in the exercise of its express powers, that, for example, of regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the States, may use means that may also be employed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers—that, for example, of regulating commerce within the State.
> If Congress license vessels to sail from one port to another in the same State, the act is supposed to be, necessarily, incidental to the power expressly granted to Congress, and implies no claim of a direct power to regulate the purely internal commerce of a State, or to act directly on its system of police. So, if a State in passing laws on subjects acknowledged to be within its control, and with a view to those subjects, shall adopt a measure of the same character with one which Congress may adopt, it does not derive its authority from the particular power which has been granted, but from some other, which remains with the State and may be executed by the same means.
> All experience shows, that the same measures, or measures scarcely distinguishable from each other, may flow from distinct powers; but this does not prove that the powers themselves are identical. Although the means used in their execution may sometimes approach each other so nearly as to be confounded, there are other situations in which they are sufficiently distinct to establish their individuality.
> In our complex system, presenting the rare and difficult scheme of one General Government, whose action extends over the whole, but which possesses only certain enumerated powers; and of numerous State governments, which retain and exercise all powers not delegated to the Union, contests respecting power must arise. Were it even otherwise, the measures taken by the respective governments to execute their acknowledged powers would often be of the same description, and might, sometimes interfere. This, however, does not prove that the one is exercising, or has a right to exercise, the powers of the other.
> The acts of Congress passed in 1796 and 1799 empowering and directing the officers of the General Government to conform to and assist in the execution of the quarantine and health laws of a State, proceed, it is said, upon the idea that these laws are constitutional. It is undoubtedly true that they do proceed upon that idea; and the constitutionality of such laws has never, so far as we are informed, been denied. But they do not imply an acknowledgment that a State may rightfully regulate commerce with foreign nations or among the States; for they do not imply that such laws are an exercise of that power, or enacted with a view to it.

The General Government does not derive authority in this matter from the power to regulate commerce among the States.

Congress is simply authorized to aid in the execution of the health laws of the State. The court continues:

On the contrary, they are treated as quarantine and health laws, are so denominated in the acts of Congress, and are considered as flowing from the acknowledged power of a State to provide for the health of its citizens. But as it was apparent that some of the provisions made for this purpose, and in virtue of this power, might interfere with, and be affected by the laws of the United States, made for the regulation of commerce, Congress, in that spirit of harmony and conciliation which ought always to characterize the conduct of governments standing in the relation which that of the Union and those of the States bear to each other, has directed its officers to aid in the execution of these laws.

Now, that decision is affirmed in a later case, reported in 19 Wallace.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OATES. I will.

Mr. LIND. I believe the decision just cited by the gentleman was not rendered upon a case where Congress had assumed to exercise this jurisdiction, was it?

Mr. OATES. Not precisely.

Mr. LIND. It was rendered, as I understand, in a case where Congress had simply provided for concurrent action.

Mr. OATES. My friend, as I infer from his question, is assuming that the case I have cited does not decide the question which I contend it does decide.

Mr. LIND. Only indirectly.

Mr. OATES. Now, I propose to settle the question by citing the case of Peete vs. Morgan, 19 Wallace, page 582. In that case the court, in an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Davis, said:

That the power to establish quarantine laws rests with the States, and has not been surrendered to the General Government, is settled in Gibbons vs. Ogden.

That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. LIND. But that is a dictum, is it not?

Mr. OATES. Well, the Supreme Court of the United States answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. LIND. It is a dictum, nevertheless.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman may consider it a dictum; but the Supreme Court does not.

Mr. LIND. I ask the gentleman whether he does not consider it a dictum?

Mr. OATES. No; I am not wiser than the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LIND. I think it is clearly obiter dictum.

Mr. OATES. No; I do not so consider it, and the Supreme Court of the United States did not so consider it. On the contrary, I have just read the language of the court, in which it declared without dissent, in a unanimous opinion, that the court in Gibbons vs. Ogden did so decide. In this case of Peete vs. Morgan the opinion of the court continues:

The source of this power is in the acknowledged right of a State to provide for the health of its people, and although this power, when set in motion, may in a greater or less degree affect commerce, yet the laws passed in the exercise of this power are not enacted for such an object.

Now, I concede that it is competent for Congress to enact legislation in aid of the health laws of the States; but I deny the proposition that Congress can override or annul the authority of the State within its own territory in respect to quarantine and health laws.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MALLORY. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. OATES. I deny the proposition that Congress has the right to enact any law to override the laws of the States or to assume to exercise quarantine power and health-regulating power within the borders of the States. You can not find in the Constitution any provision granting such power. It therefore is a part of the body of police power reserved to the States.

It does not make any difference that a supposed necessity may arise for the exercise of this power on the part of the General Government. I am not discussing the question whether it would have been wiser to vest this power in Congress than in the States. I am discussing the question as to where the power is lodged and what rights Congress has over the subject, for whatever may be the supposed necessity we have no right to usurp power, or, in the language of the gentleman from Maryland, "assume" it. We have gotten on pretty well for more than a century without any such legislation as this bill proposes, and I do not see any very great necessity for the enactment into law of any of its provisions.

Mr. BOATNER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that Congress by legislative declaration should decide that the danger of the introduction of infectious disease was an impediment to interstate and foreign commerce, would that legislative declaration be subject to review in the courts or would it be conclusive of the question?

Mr. OATES. That would depend on the facts of the case. Congress has certain jurisdiction and the States have certain jurisdiction. Congress has no authority except such as it derives from the Constitution; my friend knows that well. Congress has, as I stated awhile ago, jurisdiction to enact laws affecting commerce on the high seas and affecting vessels in our ports and in the navigable waters of the United States. Within that province the States have no jurisdiction as a matter of course.

Mr. BOATNER. I entirely agree with the gentleman in his argument; but I simply want to call his attention to the fact that the position has been taken and attempted to be maintained that whatever Congress may declare to be an obstacle to interstate or foreign commerce becomes thereby such an obstacle, and consequently Congress may legislate with regard to it as it pleases.

Mr. OATES. If that be so, then whatever Congress may determine is to be accepted as an absolute fact, and there is no check or limit upon its authority. Whereas, on the contrary, the United States is a government of enumerated and limited powers. I am surprised that my friend's Democracy allows him to take any such position as that.

Mr. BOATNER. I say to the gentleman that I do not indorse the proposition at all. I have simply called his attention to that proposition because it is now maintained in the other end of the Capitol, and I desire to know the gentleman's views upon it.

Mr. OATES. I thought my friend from Louisiana was too learned a lawyer and statesman to make that kind of a blunder, and thank him for the compliment he pays me.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MALLORY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited now. The committee has this day only, and of course this bill will be killed if we adjourn without action upon it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I shall object unless I can have a limited time.

Mr. RAYNER. I will give you the time you desire.

I ask unanimous consent that the debate be now closed and the bill be taken up for consideration under the five-minute rule.

Mr. COCKRAN. One moment before consent is given, Mr. Chairman. What is the effect of that motion? Would it preclude the offering of amendments?

Mr. RAYNER. Not at all. It permits the offering of amendments and limited debate upon them.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, general debate will be considered as closed and the bill will be read by sections.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or other vessel from any foreign port or place to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such rules and regulations of State and municipal health authorities as may be made in pursuance of, or consistent with, this act; and any such vessel which shall enter, or attempt to enter, a port of the United States in violation thereof shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States. In all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States; and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That all vessels at foreign ports clearing for any port or place in the United States shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure, or from the medical officer where such officer has been detailed by the President for that purpose, a bill of health, in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth the sanitary history and condition of said vessel, and that it has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed for securing the best sanitary condition of the said vessel, its cargo, passengers, and crew; and said consul or medical officer is required, before granting such duplicate bill of health, to be satisfied that the matters and things therein stated are true; and for his services in that behalf he shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulation be allowed, to be accounted for as is required in other cases.

The President, in his discretion, is authorized to detail any medical officer of the Government to serve in the office of the consul at any foreign port or ports for the purpose of furnishing information and making the inspection and giving the bills of health hereinbefore mentioned. Any vessel clearing and sailing from any such port without such bill of health, and entering any port of the United States, shall forfeit to the United States not more than $5,000, the amount to be determined by the court, which shall be a lien on the same, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States. In all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States; and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

Mr. STUMP. I offer an amendment to this second section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "port or ports," in line 20 of the bill, on page 14, insert "during the prevalence of any dangerous, contagious, or infectious epidemic in such port or ports."

Mr. WISE. I have no objection to the amendment, as far as I am concerned.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to section 2, if in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 of section 2, after the word "detailed," insert the words "or appointed;" so that it will read: "where such officer has been detailed or appointed by the President of the United States."

Mr. WISE. I have no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer a further amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Government," in line 19, insert "or appoint any other medical man;" so that it will read: "The President in his discretion is authorized to detail any medical officer of the Government, or appoint any other medical man, to serve, etc."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. STUMP. I now offer an amendment to come in immediately after section 2, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of March, 1893, and until otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, no alien immigrant shall be permitted to land at any port in the United States who has not been quarantined at the port of departure for from five to seven days immediately preceding the day of embarkation. Such quarantine shall be strict and thorough, and apply to the person, clothing, and baggage of each, under such rules, regulations, requirements, and conditions as said Secretary may deem proper, making use of the most approved appliances and methods to detect, develop, and eradicate all epidemic, contagious, and infectious diseases. That before embarkation the vessel shall be thoroughly cleansed, fumigated, and inspected, and after embarkation the surgeon of the vessel shall make a daily inspection of the immigrant passengers thereon, and upon arrival render a report as to the sanitary condition of each immigrant to the health officer at the port of entry.

It shall be the duty of any person, or a member of any partnership, or agent of any corporation engaged in transporting alien immigrants to the United States, and such person, member, or agent is hereby required to make oath before the United States consul at the port of departure that such quarantine station as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require has been established, and the medical officer detailed by the President, as provided in section 2 of this act, shall furnish a list, in duplicate, of all alien immigrants permitted to embark on each vessel, that all and each of the rules, regulations, requirements, and conditions relating to each immigrant have been strictly and faithfully complied with, and that no one has been released from said quarantine and permitted to embark who has any taint or suspicion of any dangerous epidemic disease, contagious or infectious, that can be ascertained by known medical science, one of which lists shall be delivered by the commanding officer of the vessel to the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival of said vessel, and the other shall be retained by said consul.

The United States consul at said port shall inspect said quarantine station from time to time and report its condition and management to the Secretary of the Treasury. And should the owner or owners of any vessel willfully violate any of the provisions of this section, no alien immigrant shall be permitted to land in the United States from any vessel owned or operated by him or them without the special permission of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon such conditions as he may impose; and the owner or owners of any vessel bringing alien immigrants who have not been quarantined as required by this act shall be fined the sum of $5,000, which fine shall be imposed and enforced in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and shall be a lien upon said vessel, and said vessel shall not be allowed to leave port until it is paid or approved security given for such payment.

And if it shall appear to said health officer that all of said immigrant passengers have undergone the said quarantine at the port of departure, and are entirely free from all contagious or infectious diseases, and that said vessel, cargo, and other passengers are also free from said diseases, it shall be the duty of said health officer to cause said immigrant passengers to be landed without further detention; and no vessel, passengers, or cargo entering port shall be subjected to a second quarantine or inspection by any health officer, State or Federal, after having undergone a first quarantine or inspection by either State or Federal officials.

Mr. RAYNER. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept this entire amendment. It seems to relate to the disinfection of vessels and passengers at the port of departure.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the statement of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. RAYNER. I say, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the amendment. Of course I can not bind the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland if the last portion of the amendment which has been read, which does not appear in the printed bill and is an addition thereto, does not practically nullify all the other provisions?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It provides that an immigrant, having been subjected in a foreign country to such quarantine as the owners of the vessel may think proper, shall be admitted into this country without any further quarantine.

Mr. RAYNER. That can be remedied by providing that it shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Treasury Department may provide.

Mr. STUMP. This amendment provides that every immigrant shall be obliged, before he can take passage on a ship coming to this country, to have his clothing and baggage disinfected, and the immigrant himself must be put in quarantine for from five to seven days. Then in addition to that, we have the actual quarantine of, say, seven to twelve days in coming across the ocean.

Now, it is provided by this amendment that after having undergone the quarantine abroad and the quarantine of the voyage, immigrants shall not be subjected to another quarantine unless there is danger from some infectious disease aboard which has been developed during the voyage. All that this intends is to prevent the immigrant who has undergone the quarantine I speak of, of from five to seven days abroad, and also the quarantine on the voyage, from being again subjected to another quarantine here without any necessity for it, upon his arrival.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STUMP. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Under the operation of that amendment, the immigrant, having undergone the seven days' quarantine at the point of departure, would be absolutely entitled to entry at the point of discharge, unless the Federal authorities acting under this bill held that there was some danger from infectious disease developed during the progress of the voyage?

Mr. STUMP. So I understand.

Mr. COCKRAN. So that there would be no State quarantine at all?

Several MEMBERS. None at all.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reation to this amendment. We have the statement of the author of it [Mr. STUMP] that it means the total abolition of State quarantine, the total abolition of all municipal or State precautions for the protection of municipalities from disease brought across the seas.

Mr. STUMP. I am afraid the gentleman has misunderstood me.

Mr. COCKRAN I certainly have misunderstood the gentleman if that is not the effect of his statement. Nor do I see, under that act, how the State authorities could interfere at all for the protection of the public health. Under this amendment every immigrant must undergo this quarantine in the port of departure, and having been subjected to it he has the absolute right to discharge at the port of entry unless some danger shall have developed during the voyage, which danger must become apparent to the Federal authorities mentioned in the bill reported by the committee. This, I understand, will be the practical operation of the amendment.

Mr. STUMP. There are other sections in the bill which will cure that seeming defect.

Mr. RAYNER. It is provided that they shall not come in except subject to State regulations.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the amendment be adopted there would not be any opportunity for the enforcement of State regulations, that I can see.

But if the gentleman will pardon me, I want to state another and more serious objection to this amendment, and one that, it seems to me, ought to commend itself to the common sense of every member of the House.

We have here a provision that every person who seeks to come to this country, whether he sail from an infected port or from a port free from infectious disease, must undergo seven days imprisonment at the hands of the steamship companies before he is eligible to prosecute his voyage. Now the practical operation of this section, if it go into force, will be that no decent man will submit to the regulation, and the man whose arrival in this country would be advantageous to the community will decline to embark under such conditions, while those who are forced from their homes under the operation of circumstances that reflect upon their own characters, whose condition will not permit them to decide for themselves whether they shall depart or stay, will submit to this or any other provision that you may choose to adopt. Instead of improving the character of immigration to this country by a device of this character, you will degrade it, because you will impose conditions to which honest and respectable men will not submit.

That this amendment should apply to every port in the world is in itself, it appears to me, a statement of its own absurdity. If you intend to limit its application to infected ports, it does not go far enough. I am willing to vote here for an amendment that will prohibit all immigration from any infected port; but I am opposed to this amendment, because it applies alike to the infected and the uninfected, and because it will enable the steamship companies to add the cost of this quarantine to the cost of passage, thus forcing the honest, healthy, and vigorous men who seek to come here, the class of men whose immigration should be encouraged, to suffer an unnecessary, expensive, and degrading indignity, if it be adopted by this House.

The quarantine described in this amendment does not enter in any way into the scheme of the bill presented by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Here we have an act which provides for a quarantine system to be administered in some respects by the States and in other respects by the United States. Gentlemen may differ as to the extent to which the control of the quarantine laws should be intrusted to the State or to the Federal Government; but no honest and sensible man, it seems to me, can support an amendment which practically imposes a penalty of seven days' imprisonment, under more rigorous rules than prevail in many penitentiaries, on every person who seeks to come to this country to earn an honest livelihood.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman who introduced this amendment allow me to ask him why he limits this quarantine to alien immigrants? Is there not as much reason to fear that infectious diseases may be introduced in this country by others as well as alien immigrants?

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCHRAN] that the object of this amendment was really for the benefit of the immigrants. The proposition made at the time this bill was drawn was the exclusion of all immigrants from the United States for a period of one year.

At this time, with a view to ascertaining what would be a proper safeguard, the terror of the cholera being introduced solely through immigrants, these facts staring the immigrants in the face, certain physicians of the city of New York were examined, and their testimony has been adduced, and the consensus of opinion of all these physicians was this: that unless immigrants were quarantined abroad that the immigration itself should be suppressed for the period of one year; so that the object, intent, and purpose of this act was to allow immigrants who desire to come to this country, to have the advantage of quarantine there, and not to be subject to quarantine on their arrival in this country.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the objection to it, in that aspect.

Mr. STUMP. Now, I should like, before I take my seat, to call attention to the opinions of these physicians. I read from the opinion of Dr. W. A. Ewing, who had fifteen years' experience in the health department of the city of New York as sanitary inspector. In answer to the questions there propounded to him, he says:

I am strenuously opposed to the general suspension of immigration from European countries, for the reason that it is unnecessary if the following measures are adopted and carried out:

One of the measures is—

At least five days before sailing each emigrant should be kept in a house of detention, in suitable, cleanly, well-ventilated apartments, provided with bathing and fumigating——

Mr. COCKRAN. He is not to be handcuffed, is he?

Mr. STUMP. No; he is only to be kept in a house of detention. That is all—suitable, cleanly, well-ventilated apartments, provided with bathing and fumigating facilities, so that these persons may have at least five daily baths and their clothing and other luggage fumigated.

Steamships should be kept thoroughly clean——

I will read from the opinion of Dr. Sayres:

III. The danger to be apprehended from immigrants and their belongings is very great, and the best measures to reduce this danger to a minimum are to have all immigrant passengers and their belongings thoroughly cleansed and disinfected, and carefully isolated and watched for at least five days before they are permitted to take passage. This careful inspection of all the passengers should be made daily, during the entire voyage, by the medical officers of the ship, and their nurses and their assistants, so that the first evidences of the disease may be detected and the disease itself arrested.

* * * * * * *

If this efficient plan can be properly carried out in every port of entry on this continent we can certainly prevent an invasion of cholera.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then that applies to all ports, infected or not infected?

Mr. STUMP. I will state what the application of this bill is when I can get a copy of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman should turn his face to the Speaker, so that we can hear what he says.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts, but the gentleman will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I think there can be no doubt——

Mr. STUMP. Has my time expired?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that it has; and the Chair recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland had expired.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Maryland be extended.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt that the surest way of preventing the introduction of cholera into the country, and one upon which, I think, all the best medical opinion is agreed, is by a total suspension of immigration during the prevalence of the epidemic. Under this act we have given that power to the President; so that all immigration can be stopped when an epidemic is raging in Europe and it seems best to the President to prohibit immigration from any infected ports.

But this amendment, it seems to me, does not strengthen the bill, but weakens it. I believe with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and believe most profoundly, in a thorough, comprehensive, and purely national quarantine; but if we can not have that, I am in favor of the best we can get. A quarantine bill we must have, and at once. I believe that we should only hurt the bill by the adoption of this amendment, for, in its practical operation, it provides for quarantine in a foreign port where we can not control the regulation of it, and where we have absolutely no power over the details.

Having it in a foreign port for seven days, the result practically would be to admit emigrants after such a quarantine as that, instead of a thorough twenty-day quarantine, which we could control absolutely ourselves. I can see that if this amendment is adopted and becomes law it might smooth the path of the steamship companies, but I can not see that it would have any effect in defending this country against an invasion of cholera; and I therefore hope, sir, that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I have not time to go at length into this question, but I want to assert that proposition first and foremost, that I think the concensus of all well-informed opinion upon this subject points conclusively to the view that absolute quarantine is no protection against the invasion of infectious diseases. It seems to me, sir, that the argument of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] against the proposition in this amendment will not hold.

In the first place, I believe—and I base my belief upon the opinions expressed by experts on these questions, because personally I have no knowledge, and therefore must depend entirely upon such testimony as a basis for my own opinion—I believe, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and others who oppose this amendment, to the fact that, without one single exception, every learned physician in the city of New York whose opinion and advice upon this question was called for by the authorities of that city stated (as gentlemen will find in the testimony taken by the committee) that a quarantine on the other side of the ocean would reduce the quarantine on this side to a minimum, and that it was really the only effectual mode whereby the incoming of contagious diseases could be prevented.

The gentleman from New York deems it a great hardship that a worthy man, an emigrant seeking to leave his own country to make his home here, should be taken and kept under restraint, it may be, as the gentleman suggests, under rules more exact and rigid and disagreeable than those in your penitentaries, for seven days before being allowed to sail. But why should that be a greater hardship than it would be for the same man to be seized by a State, municipal or Federal quarantine officer when he reaches these shores after a long and tedious voyage, and to be held, it may be, for months, before being allowed to land, as emigrants were held upon an infected vessel last year, and, even after leaving the infected vessel, were kept in very uncomfortable quarters? I cannot see that the argument of the gentleman from New York does not prove as much against quarantine at the port of entry as against quarantine at the port of departure.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman evidently misunderstands my position in this matter. I would not object to a seven days' quarantine in an infected port. I would not object to a fifty days' quarantine in an infected port. I would not object to a total exclusion of emigrants from an infected port; but I do object to imposing seven days' imprisonment upon every man who starts for this country from another country, no matter whether he comes from a port that is free from infection or from a port that is suffering from infection.

Mr. COMPTON. Take a case of this kind. Suppose an interior city is afflicted with cholera, and a citizen of that city comes to a city on the coast and seeks to emigrate, how would the gentleman determine here in any such case that the individual was or was not from an infected port? Would he determine it simply by the fact that the port of departure on the coast was declared to be exempt from infection?

Mr. COCKRAN. My answer to that is that for one hundred years the immigration into this country has continued without any of the dangers or evil consequences which the gentleman dreads. If we are called upon here to legislate to meet an extraordinary situation let us legislate with reference to that, but I object to this amendment because it is an attempt to subject all transatlantic travel in the steerage, whether it be from places infected with cholera or from places which are entirely free from infectious disease—to subject it to conditions so onerous that honest men, self-respecting men, will not submit to them.

If this were a provision relating to cholera, if this were a provision relating to any infectious disease, if this were a provision relating and limited to any particular period, the objection to it would not be so strong as it is to the amendment in the shape in which it is presented. But you propose to change the whole system. You want to subject every man, no matter whether disease be rife or whether disease be absent in the place from which he comes, to the imprisonment proposed here; and that in my judgment is an insuperable objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. STUMP. Would not this amendment meet the object of the gentleman from New York? After the words "Secretary of the Treasury," in the fifth line of the bill, insert "no alien immigrant from any infected port or place shall be permitted to land in any port in the United States."

Mr. COCKRAN. My objection to that is that it would not be strong enough.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Say "from any infected or suspected port."

Mr. COCKRAN. "Suspected" is rather too vague a term. But my objection to the amendment as it would be with the addition of the words proposed by the gentleman is that then it would not be strong enough. In other words, I am willing to go any distance to meet infection; but I am not willing to impose onerous and degrading conditions on persons who do not come from infected ports.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The bill would not be so strong after the adoption of the amendment as it is now.

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is now pending an amendment to an amendment. No further amendment is in order at this time.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Chairman, there is another objection, and one which seems to me fatal in principle to the amendment now offered. The proposition submitted by our committee provides for a consular or other official inspection on the part of the United States of vessels in all ports abroad. The proposed amendment substitutes what is apparently a most stringent and drastic measure, but one which is to be carried out in what way? Simply under the oath of the agent of the transportation company, and upon the written statement of two surgeons paid by the company.

Mr. STUMP. The proposed amendment does not include such a provision. It provides that the two surgeons shall be appointed by the President under section 4 of the bill. The amendment in its present form is in perfect harmony with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STORER. Then I did not understand correctly the reading.

Mr. LIND. I wish to call attention to another objection to the amendment, an objection to which I think the statement just made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STUMP] is not a sufficient answer. If the proposed amendment be read as a whole it will be seen that instead of instituting and maintaining a national or quasi-national quarantine, as we propose to do in the bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, this proposition is only for a steamship quarantine—a quarantine by the steamship companies.

There is another point to which I wish to call attention. Under our treaty regulations with most of the European powers we are required, if we observe those treaties, to admit citizens from those countries upon the same terms and conditions on which they admit our citizens, for purposes of trade, business, visiting, etc. Without violating those treaties we can not exclude any person coming from any of those countries who says that he is coming here for the purpose of business. If an Italian organ-grinder says that he is coming to the United States to prosecute his business he can not be quarantined, but the man who states that he is coming here as an immigrant to settle will be. This amendment puts it in the power of any man to escape all quarantine regulations by subterfuge. He need only deny that he is an immigrant.

I believe, as suggested by the gentleman from New York, that we ought to pass a law which will enable our Government to suspend absolutely, if necessary, not only immigration but intercourse with infected ports for the time being. I believe it proper to give the President power to suspend immigration from infected countries for a year or for any length of time which may be required. But I do not concede that all the danger comes from immigration. I want to see quarantine regulations that apply to all. An amendment of the sort now proposed, which would enable the very class of persons whom we are seeking to exclude from the country to come in without regard to quarantine restrictions by their simply resorting to the subterfuge of saying that they are not immigrants, would be, to my mind, preposterous. This amendment, if adopted, would place the execution of our whole scheme of protection in the hands of the steamship companies themselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAIN. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], if he will answer me one question. I wish to know whether infectious and contagious diseases are communicable only by alien immigrants, and whether the amendment, if adopted, should not contain a provision applicable to all persons coming from an infected country?

Mr. LIND. I think that question answers itself.

Mr. CRAIN. I am in accord with the gentleman's argument. I merely desired to make that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COMPTON. Is that subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. STUMP, there were on a division (called for by Mr. STUMP)—ayes 15, noes 111.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards, and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia; and at such ports and places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations under State or municipal authority, where such regulations are, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, necessary to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State or municipality which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, if in his judgment it is necessary and proper, make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, and when said rules and regulations have been made they shall be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States and municipalities, where the State or municipal health authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President shall execute and enforce the same and may detail or appoint officers for that purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are authorized by the laws of the United States and necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place at which contagious or infectious disease exists, or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped, to any port or place in the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such vessel, her cargo, passengers, and crew which shall be published and communicated to and enforced by the consular and medical officers of the United States. None of the penalties herein imposed shall attach to any vessel or owner or officer thereof until a copy of this act, with the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, has been posted up in the office of the consul or other consular officer of the United States for ten days, in the port from which said vessel sailed; and the certificate of such consul or consular officer over his official signature shall be competent evidence of such posting in any court of the United States.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in section 3 all after the word "Columbia," in line 17, down to and including the word "purpose," in line 35.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the language of the section. It seems to me that my amendment ought to be considered first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS,] and the Chair will then determine whether it has precedence.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Columbia," in line 9, section 3, insert "whenever the supreme health authority of the State, Territory, or District, through proper officials, makes application for assistance."

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk as a substitute for the amendments of my colleagues.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "foreign countries," in line 7, page 15, down to and including the words "from another," in line 27, page 16.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that other amendments are not now in order.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to ask a ruling from the Chair as to whether or not the amendment I offered has not priority over either of the amendments offered by my colleagues?

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, in response to that inquiry I suggest to the Chair that I offered my amendment some time ago, and the Chair said that it would be considered as pending; that it was not properly before the committee at that time, but as soon as the Clerk had concluded the reading of the section it would be pending. I am perfectly willing after my amendment is adopted, not only willing, but anxious that the amendment of my colleague, Mr. SAYERS, should be adopted, it being in the line of my suggestions to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAY-

NER]. But I think my motion has precedence over all other amendments for the reasons I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the amendment of the gentleman from Texas first offered.

Mr. ANTONY. I offered my proposition as a substitute for the amendments of both of my colleagues from Texas. Does not the vote come first on that?

Mr. CRAIN. I would suggest that a substitute can not be offered for an amendment that is not pending, and an amendment to an amendment is not in order at this stage of the bill. We are considering now a committee amendment to which I have offered an amendment. Therefore the suggestion of my colleague has no force.

The amendment of my colleague on the right [Mr. SAYERS] is not before the House; and the substitute of my colleague on the left [Mr. ANTONY] can not be considered, so far as the propositions or matters embodied in the amendment of my colleague are concerned, that matter not being before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. COCKRAN. May I ask that that amendment be reported again?

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on page 15, line 17, after the word "Columbia," down to and including the word "purpose," in line 35, on page 16.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have some explanation of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, before a vote is taken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late in making his request, as the Chair had submitted the question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I was on my feet, Mr. Chairman, making the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the circumstances, the Chair will permit the gentleman from Texas, if he so desires, to explain the amendment.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is so much confusion that it is utterly impossible to understand a word of what is being said in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been endeavoring to preserve order, and will ask the committee again to observe order, so that the proceedings of the House will be uninterrupted.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has asked me for an explanation of the effect of the amendment I have suggested. It strikes out all after the word "Columbia," in line 17, on page 15 of the bill, down to and including the word "purpose," on page 16, being the following words:

and at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State or municipality which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, if in his judgment it is necessary and proper, make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, and when said rules and regulations have been made they shall be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States and municipalities, where the State or municipal health authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President shall execute and enforce the same and may detail or appoint officers for that purpose.

Mr. DINGLEY. That takes away all the good that may be effected by the bill.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from Maryland in charge of the bill agrees that this provision would give to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to consider the force and effect of municipal or State regulations upon the subject of quarantine, and if in his supreme judgment, he being the sole arbiter to determine the question, the regulations and rules whether municipal or State should be insufficient, he is authorized to add to them legislation by promulgating such rules and regulations and orders, as in his discretion, added to the force and effect of existing legislation, would keep out infectious or contagious diseases.

Now, I contend that that is conferring too much power on any officer of the Government. I say it is dearer to my people and nearer to my people to keep away infectious and contagious diseases than it is to the Secretary of the Treasury 2,000 miles away.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, I say that the power of legislation should be vested and is vested by the constitutions of the States and of the United States in the Legislatures of the respective States and in the National Legislature assembled at Washington, and that that power should not be conferred upon any other individual.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentlemen who are in favor of striking out these lines, and the gentleman who offered the amendment, if practically the effect is not to make the State paramount to Federal or United States authority in all these quarantine matters?

Mr. CRAIN. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. The States ought to have, on all questions over which they have jurisdiction, just that power.

Mr. BOWERS. That is the point I wanted to reach; and I want the House and the people of the country to understand that the struggle right here on this bill is whether the States shall be permitted to become paramount to the United States or not. You speak of the Constitution and of the constitutional limitations. I am not a constitutional lawyer, but I do read it; and I read that the States have conceded to the General Government power to provide for the common defense and general welfare, and this bill is to provide for the general welfare and common defense against common disaster.

Now, I do not care whether it is the Secretary of the Treasury you invest with the power or the President or whoever he may be, but somewhere there should be a power bestowed, when a State fails to enforce the quarantine regulations, that the other States might demand of the General Government protection from impending national disaster because of the inability or the refusal of any one State to take protective action and provide proper remedies.

I tell you that the Asiatic cholera does not stop at State lines or State boundaries. It will march through the State of New York, and it will not even stop when the typical tiger shows its teeth, but will walk right on over its body in the same way that a gentleman named Cleveland did the other day. When you give us cholera that will stop at State lines, I shall not object to this proposition, but taking the disease as it is the people of the country have a common right to this provision of defense by the General Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] goes even further than the point which has been under discussion between him and the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWER]. It also includes—such ports and places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations.

And if that be stricken out ports and places in States that have no quarantine regulations would remain in the same condition.

Mr. RAYNER. I am willing to accept an amendment including those.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. CUMMINGS and others. Division.

The CHAIRMAN. The "noes" seem to have it. The "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL] sends up an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

Mr. SAYERS. There is an amendment pending which was offered by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know of any such amendment pending.

Mr. SAYERS. I sent an amendment up to be read. I desire to have the amendment which I offered presented to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from and after the word "Columbia," in line 17 of section 3, to and including the word "another," in line 22 of said section.

The words proposed to be stricken out are as follows:

"And at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State or municipality which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another."

Mr. SAYERS. That is not the amendment I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL]. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] sent up an amendment awhile ago which was not in order.

Mr. SAYERS. But I understood the Chair to say that just as soon as the amendment of my colleague [Mr. CRAIN] was acted upon the Chair would present the amendment offered by me to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no recollection of making such a statement, but there will be an opportunity to offer the amendment as soon as the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL] is disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do I understand the Chair to say that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] is passed?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is rejected.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I called for a division at the time of the vote, and so did the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the demand and the Chair announced the result. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. ROCKWELL. I desire to say a word in explanation of that amendment.

Mr. CHIPMAN and others. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, the difference between the effect of this amendment and the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] is, that this simply strikes out from the provisions of the bill those States which have existing quarantine regulations and does not permit the Secretary of the Treasury to interfere with the existing quarantine relations of the different States; but it leaves the bill so that, in any State where there are no quarantine regulations, the Secretary of the Treasury may make such provisions as are provided for in the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. That practically destroys the bill.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL] was rejected.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire now to have the amendment which I offered a few moments ago presented to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Columbia," in line 9 of section 3 of the bill, insert the words:

"Whenever the supreme health authority of a State, Territory, or district, through proper officials, makes application for assistance."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SAYERS, the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SAYERS) there were—ayes 56, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 36 and 37 of section 3, strike out the words "as are authorized by the laws of the United States."

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the Senate bill, one that has already been passed, and has been sent to the House. This amendment restores the language of the Senate bill, which was stricken out by the bill before us. Those gentlemen who have scruples as to the power of the State, and those who have constitutional qualms on this question, should vote against the amendment which I have offered; and unquestionably should vote against the Senate bill. But those gentlemen who wish an efficient protection against an incursion of cholera into this country, and who have no such qualms and scruples, should vote for this amendment, and should ultimately vote to substitute the Senate bill for the bill now pending before us.

Trusting to the States alone to enforce quarantine laws will be a very poor dependence if this trouble we anticipate comes upon us. Cities such as I represent here have no difficulty in time of epidemic, as a general rule, in protecting themselves, but within 5 or 10 miles of them may be a community with a local board of health governed by gentlemen as economical in their notions as gentlemen who frequently appear on this floor, and all the efforts made by places which have effective quarantine will be utterly valueless. This House bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Does the Chair count the time he was calling the committee to order? A great deal of time was consumed in that way.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Michigan will be allowed to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, what we wish on the northern frontier is an effective bill from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Throughout that great extent of country on the Canadian border we demand a protection which will be efficient against an irruption of cholera. Cholera has come into the United States time and again from Canada. The quarantine regulations in that country, like most of their regulations, except those in imitation of our own, are very inefficient.

The result will be that unless we have the aid of the strong hand of the Government we will have no protection. If we are to trust to local laws and to the inchoate system of small communities along that border, extending thousands and thousands of miles, the legislation which we may enact here will be utterly valueless to us.

The Senate bill, in my judgment, preserves the powers of the States, and it also exercises the legitimate power of the National Government. It has been sedulous in regard to preserving and harmonizing those different powers, and I hope and trust that this House will sooner or later, before this debate is concluded and before this bill is disposed of, reinstate the Senate bill bodily and put it in the place of this bill, which in the most important particulars differs from it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 3, page 17, line 53, the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to authorize any Federal officer to relax, modify, or suspend any rules, precautions, or regulations which may have been or which may hereafter be adopted by State or municipal authorities for the exclusion of contagious or infectious diseases from any port of the United States or to permit the entry or discharge of any vessel in any port of the United States where quarantine regulations have been established by State or municipal authority until such vessel shall have complied with such regulations."

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I would like simply to state that the committee accepts that amendment. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. If the gentleman from New York desires to speak in favor of his amendment, I will yield to him.

Mr. COCKRAN. The amendment has been accepted by the committee.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Then I want to say something about the amendment myself.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say one word in explanation of the amendment. It does not prevent the Federal authority from enforcing quarantine in any part of the United States, but it does prevent them from relaxing or suspending any regulation that the State authorities may have made.

Mr. DINGLEY. Makes it come after the State authority?

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not care which is first or second. It means that the Federal Government can not make less stringent regulations than those which have already been made by the State.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me it substitutes the State for the Federal authority.

Mr. COCKRAN. It does not do anything of the kind.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I desire to say a word on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let us have order.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have order before I submit my remarks, so that I may be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will suspend until the committee is in order.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], in my judgment, utterly eliminates from the bill all of the powers which it is proposed shall be exercised by the Federal Government in establishing efficient quarantine.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is just what it does.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. In 1878 we had a visitation of yellow fever which decimated the whole Southern country. It followed the lines of the great rivers and penetrated as far into the interior as Louisville, Ky., and St. Louis, Mo., in a few sporadic cases, and it became necessary that we should adopt some general system of quarantine.

The necessity gave rise to the creation of the National Board of Health, which was composed of seven distinguished sanitarians appointed from as many States, the law providing that not more than one should be appointed from any particular State. I remember that upon that Board there was a distinguished sanitarian from the State of Massachusetts and another from the State of Virginia, a member of the medical faculty of the University of that State, associated with five other distinguished gentlemen. I do not think the country has ever had a law passed that did more for the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases in this country than the law which created the National Board of Health; a body which, as I understand by the terms of the Senate bill, is proposed to be abolished, and which has in fact been virtually abolished by the expiration of the period of time fixed by the statute of 1879.

The object of the establishment of that Board was to prevent a recurrence in this country of what had occurred previously. In 1878 it was seen to be necessary that we should have, for this purpose, a power which should not be subject to, but should act in concert with, the State authorities, and, as a part of my remarks on this occasion, I ask leave to print the original act passed March, 1879, which I have not time to read now, and in that connection the laws and regulations on this general subject which were then in existence, and which have been referred to by the gentleman from Maryland.

Following are the acts April 29, 1878, March 3, 1879, and June 2, 1879:

CHAP. 66.—An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no vessel or vehicle coming from any foreign port or country where any contagious or infectious disease may exist, and no vessel or vehicle conveying any person or persons, merchandise or animals, affected with any infectious or contagious disease, shall enter any port of the United States or pass the boundary line between the United States and any foreign country, contrary to the quarantine laws of any one of said United States, into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined, or except in the manner and subject to the regulations to be prescribed as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That whenever any infectious or contagious disease shall appear in any foreign port or country, and whenever any vessel shall leave any infected foreign port, or, having on board goods or passengers coming from any place or district infected with cholera or yellow fever, shall leave any foreign port, bound for any port in the United States, the consular officer, or other representative of the United States at or nearest such foreign port shall immediately give information thereof to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, and shall report to him the name, the date of departure, and the port of destination of such vessel; and shall also make the same report to the health officer of the port of destination in the United States, and the consular officers of the United States shall make weekly reports to him of the sanitary condition of the ports at which they are respectively stationed; and the said Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be charged with the execution of the provisions of this act, and shall frame all needful rules and regulations for that purpose, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, but such rules and regulations shall not conflict with or impair any sanitary or quarantine laws or regulations of any State or municipal authorities now existing or which may hereafter be enacted.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service and of customs officers to aid in the enforcement of the national quarantine rules and regulations established under the preceding section; but no additional compensation shall be allowed said officers by reason of such services as they may be required to perform under this act except actual and necessary traveling expenses.

SEC. 4. That the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall, upon receipt of information of the departure of any vessel, goods, or passengers from infected places to any port in the United States, immediately notify the proper State or municipal and United States officer or officers at the threatened port of destination of the vessel, and shall prepare and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to the State and municipal health authorities in the United States weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by him.

SEC. 5. That wherever, at any port of the United States, any State or municipal quarantine system may now or may hereafter exist the officers or agents of such system shall, upon the application of the respective State or municipal authorities, be authorized and empowered to act as officers or agents of the national quarantine system, and shall be clothed with all the powers of United States officers for quarantine purposes, but shall receive no pay or emoluments from the United States. At all other ports where, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be deemed necessary to establish quarantine, the medical officers or other agents of the Marine Hospital Service shall perform such duties in the enforcement of the quarantine rules and regulations as may be assigned them by the Surgeon-General of that service under this act: Provided, That there shall be no interference in any manner with any quarantine laws or regulations as they now exist or may hereafter be adopted under State laws.

SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Approved April 29, 1878.

CHAP. 202.—An act to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a National Board of Health.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be established a National Board of Health, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than one of whom shall be appointed from any one State, whose compensation, during the time when actually engaged in the performance of their duties under this act, shall be $10 per diem each and reasonable expenses, and of one medical officer of the Army, one medical officer of the Navy, one medical officer of the Marine Hospital Service, and one officer from the Department of Justice, to be detailed by the Secretaries of the several Departments and the Attorney-General, respectively, and the officers so detailed shall receive no compensation. Said board shall meet in Washington within thirty days after the passage of this act, and in Washington or elsewhere from time to time upon notice from the president of the board, who is to be chosen by the members thereof, or upon its own adjournments, and shall frame all rules and regulations authorized or required by this act, and shall make or cause to be made such special examinations and investigations at any place or places within the United States, or at foreign ports, as they may deem best, to aid in the execution of this act and the promotion of its objects.

SEC. 2. The duties of the National Board of Health shall be to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the several departments of the Government, the executives of the several States, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on all questions submitted by them, or whenever in the opinion of the board such advice may tend to the preservation and improvement of the public health.

SEC. 3. That the Board of Health, with the assistance of the Academy of Science, which is hereby requested and directed to coöperate with them for that purpose, shall report to Congress at its next session a full statement of its transactions, together with a plan for a national public health organization, which plan shall be prepared after consultation with the principal sanitary organizations and the sanitarians of the several States of the United States, special attention being given to the subject of quarantine, both maritime and inland, and especially as to regulations which should be established between State or local systems of quarantine and a national quarantine system.

SEC. 4. The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the salaries and expenses of said board and to carry out the purposes of this act.

Approved, March 3, 1879.

CHAP. 11.—An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or vessel from any foreign port where any contagious or infectious disease exists, to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act, and all rules and regulations of the State boards of health and all rules and regulations made in pursuance of this act; and any such vessel which shall enter, or attempt to enter, a port of the United States, in violation thereof, shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $1,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States. And in all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States, and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. All such vessels shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure, or from the medical officer, where such officer has been detailed by the President for that purpose, a certificate in duplicate setting forth the sanitary history of said vessel, and that it has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed for securing the best sanitary condition of the said vessel, its cargo, passengers and crew; and said consular or medical officer is required, before granting such certificate, to be satisfied the matters and things therein stated are true; and for his services in that behalf he shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulation be allowed, to be accounted for as is required in other cases.

That upon the request of the National Board of Health the President is authorized to detail a medical officer to serve in the office of the consul at any foreign port for the purpose of making the inspection and giving the certificates hereinbefore mentioned; Provided, That the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed at any one time six: Provided further, That any vessel sailing from any such port without such certificate of said medical officer, entering any port of the United States, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500, which shall be a lien on the same to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States. And in all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States, and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the National Board of Health shall coöperate with and, so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State from another; and at such ports and places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations under State authority where such regulations are, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, necessary to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another; and at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State, which, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, the National Board of Health shall report the facts to the President of the United States, who shall, if, in his judgment, it is necessary and proper, order said Board of Health to make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, which, when so made and approved by the President, shall be promulgated by the National Board of Health and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States, where the State authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose.

The Board of Health shall make such rules and regulations as are authorized by the laws of the United States and necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place at which contagious or infectious disease exists, to any port or place in the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such vessel, her cargo, passengers, and crew, and when said rules and regulations have been approved by the President they shall be published and communicated to, and enforced by, the consular officers of the United States: Provided, That none of the penalties herein imposed shall attach to any vessel or any owner or officer thereof, till the act and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof shall have been officially promulgated for at least ten days in the port from which said vessel sailed.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the National Board of Health to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officers of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the National Board of Health shall make to said Board of Health weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as said Board of Health may prescribe; and the Board of Health shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, including State and municipal sanitary authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States; and shall prepare, publish and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities, weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by said board; and shall also, as far as it may be able, by means of the voluntary coöperation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations and private persons, procure information relating to the climatic and other conditions affecting the public health; and shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury an annual report of its operations, for transmission to Congress, with such recommendations as it may deem important to the public interests; and said report, if ordered to be printed by Congress, shall be done under the direction of the board.

SEC. 5. That the National Board of Health shall from time to time issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port, and otherwise make publicly known, the rules and regulations made by it and approved by the President, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports for securing the best sanitary condition of such vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crews, before their departure for any port in the United States, and in the course of the voyage; and all such other rules and regulations as shall be observed in the inspection of the same on the arrival thereof at any quarantine station at the port of destination, and for the disinfection and isolation of the same, and the treatment of cargo and persons on board, so as to prevent the introduction of cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious diseases; and it shall not be lawful for any vessel to enter said port to discharge its cargo or land its passengers except upon a certificate of the health officer at such quarantine station, certifying that said rules and regulations have in all respects been observed and complied with, as well on his part as on the part of the said vessel and its master, in respect to the same and to its cargo, passengers, and crew; and the master of every such vessel shall produce and deliver to the collector of customs at said port of entry, together with the other papers of the vessel, the said certificates required to be obtained at the port of departure, and the certificate herein required to be obtained from the health officer at the port of entry.

SEC. 6. That to pay the necessary expenses of placing vessels in proper sanitary condition, to be incurred under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to make the necessary rules and regulations fixing the amount of fees to be paid by vessels for such service and the manner of collecting the same.

SEC. 7. That the President is authorized, when requested by the National Board of Health, and when the same can be done without prejudice to the public service, to detail officers from the several departments of the Government for temporary duty, to act under the direction of said board, to carry out the provisions of this act; and such officers shall receive no additional compensation except for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of such duties.

SEC. 8. That to meet the expenses to be incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury on estimates to be made by the National Board of Health, and to be approved by him. Said National Board of Health shall as often as quarterly make a full statement of its operations and expenditures under this act to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall report the same to Congress.

SEC. 9. That so much of the act entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," approved April 29, 1878, as requires consular officers or other representatives of the United States at foreign ports to report the sanitary condition of and the departure of vessels from such ports to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, and so much of said act as requires the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service to frame rules and regulations, and to execute said act, and to give notice to Federal and State officers of the approach of infected vessels, and furnish said officers with weekly abstracts of consular sanitary reports, and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 10. This act shall not continue in force for a longer period than four years from the date of its approval.

Approved June 2, 1879.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. How does the amendment which has just been offered by me and accepted by the committee in any way limit the powers of the National Government as to quarantine?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It does so because it proposes that although you establish a national quarantine, to be enforced by national officers, yet the action of the State officers may qualify or control it, and make it obedient to State laws and regulations.

Suppose that in the State of New York they do not choose to enact a rigid quarantine for the city of New York; suppose the same should be the case in the State of Louisiana or in any other State in the Union which has great ports of entry like New York and New Orleans. Now, the board of health, acting under this national law of 1879 and under previously existing laws, established a cordon of posts outside and beyond the limits of the State authorities. For instance, they established a post at Ship Island on the Gulf coast of Mississippi.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COCKRAN. I hope the gentleman may be permitted to answer my question. If he had allowed me to finish it he would perhaps have answered it in briefer terms. I wish the gentleman would state how that part of the amendment just offered by me which he criticises can in any way limit the power of the Government in any square inch of the territory of the United States to establish the most rigid quarantine it desires.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will take five minutes, with the permission of the House, to answer the gentleman. [Laughter.] The creation of the National Board of Health was brought about, as I have said, by the condition of affairs that was found to exist in 1878 and 1879. Now, sir, we want a general national quarantine.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. No, sir; I will not be interrupted any more. I am going to explain the matter if you will allow me. The National Board of Health established quarantine posts outside the limits of the States and required that vessels should stop at those posts; that the passengers should be quarantined and the freight should be fumigated, and, in short, that proper sanitary regulations should be observed. One was established on Ship Island, and was afterward removed still farther out, on Chandelier Island.

Now, this National Board of Health, while it was in existence, did more to prevent the recurrence of the disease which devastated the country in 1878 than any other board of health ever established by State or national authority. That board was broken up because men engaged in trade at the great ports on the Atlantic coast from New Orleans to Galveston objected to the restrictions which the regulations of that board imposed upon trade.

A committee of Congress consisting of Senators and Representatives was sent to New Orleans to investigate the origin of the yellow fever in 1878. That committee, of which I chanced to be a member, took evidence on the subject. Yellow fever reappeared at New Orleans in 1879; and when Gen. Hood and his wife and one of his children died from the disease—when a particular part of the city was infected—the National Board of Health, under the regulations which it adopted, drew a cordon around the infected district in the midst of that great commercial city and stamped out the disease.

Mr. Chairman, it was unwise policy to abolish that board. It was a national board, whose members were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It adopted regulations which were universal in their character. It did not come into conflict with the State authorities, but was in harmony with them. That board acted the more efficiently because it was unrestrained by any local interest that attempted to dictate the form and the language of the restrictions which might be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the attitude taken by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], I think it proper that I should explain the amendment. I agree with the gentleman in the spirit of his remarks. I am partial to cordons, inside and outside and all around—fortifications, bastions, and everything else that can be erected in defense of the country, whether from invasion by war or invasion by pestilence. My amendment recognizes the power of the United States to establish a quarantine anywhere and everywhere in the United States. But it provides that where quarantine regulations have been established by the States, the Federal Government shall not relax or repeal or suspend those regulations.

The Federal Government may adopt additional regulations, may increase the precautions tenfold if it will. It may give the gentleman four times as many cordons and bastions as he has ever known in the history of this country, but it must not at any time relax the regulations and precautions which have been adopted by the States. The amendment recognizes the power of the Federal Government to extend its protection as far as possible, but does not allow it to limit or restrict the protection which the States may have already adopted.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, the only objection I have to the proposition of the gentleman from New York is this: The amendment provides, as I understand, that the General Government shall not relax the State regulations at any port.

Several MEMBERS. At any point.

Mr. TERRY. I understood it to read "port." Now, in the interior we have to defend ourselves sometimes by a shotgun quarantine [laughter]; and I have been trying to get in an amendment to protect our people in the interior as well as those at the "ports," which is the word I understood to be used in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish to call attention to the effect of this proposition; and we can better understand it by looking at its practical application. Suppose that a vessel arrives in the lower harbor of New York——

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I have examined the amendment, and I find that the language is "port." [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Let it be changed, then, so as to read "port or place."

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to make a practical application of the gentleman's amendment——

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order. We would like to hear what the gentleman from Maine has to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not allow any business to proceed until order is restored. [A pause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, as I have already said, I think this Committee of the Whole should understand thoroughly the effect of this amendment in its practical application. Suppose a vessel arrives in the lower harbor of New York from a foreign port. If this bill should become a law that vessel, before it can enter, is met by the Federal officials who have charge of the Federal quarantine——

Mr. COCKRAN. Where do you find that?

Mr. DINGLEY. That I understand is the provision.

Mr. COCKRAN. No, the gentleman is mistaken. The measure now before the House provides that the local authorities shall enforce the Federal regulations; so that the vessel does not meet the Federal authority if there happens to be a State authority there.

Mr. DINGLEY. When the vessel arrives in the lower harbor and meets the officers, if you choose to put it in that form, who are to enforce the Federal quarantine laws, it is held to the performance of the Federal quarantine according to the tenor of this bill and pays the proper fees for such quarantine. Having completed the Federal quarantine, what next?

A State quarantine is to be authorized and recognized by the amendment of the gentleman from New York; and if the State officials see fit to demand that the vessel so performing a second quarantine shall pay fees to the local New York officer, which is the nut of this amendment, then this vessel thus entering the harbor is compelled to go through two quarantines, State and Federal, with all the detentions that may be caused thereby; and we put ourselves in the attitude of saying practically by that amendment that no vessel can enter the port of New York and discharge her cargo until she has performed not only the Federal quarantine, but also the State quarantine that is proposed under this amendment.

Now, if it is the desire of the gentlemen of this committee and of the House to impose this on vessels which may arrive in the waters of the United States, then this amendment will accomplish it absolutely.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would have no objections to the two quarantines mentioned by the gentleman from Maine, but it does seem to me that the wording of the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not correct. He has explained it to say that he means there shall be no relaxation or suspension of quarantine regulations. But he uses the word "modify," that it shall not be "relaxed, modified, or suspended." That would make it impossible to amplify, for that is a modification.

I do not think the gentleman from New York intended that the General Government should make no change whatever if it was found necessary to extend the quarantine regulations, for if so there is no use in this legislation.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment, and in response to the objection of the gentleman who has just spoken, I want to say that as I understand this bill the State establishment of a quarantine is recognized by every one of its provisions. The Federal Government has the right to supplement State regulation by an independent quarantine, and to that there is no objection. But I do not think it proper nor is it the intention of this bill to give the Federal Government the right to step inside of the State lines and modify or relax its regulations in regard to quarantine. It may supplement them, but not modify or suspend them, and the amendment is drawn precisely in that form because I conceive in that form it expresses the intent of the framers of this law.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. When regulations are made both by State and Federal authority which do you concede ought to govern?

Mr. COCKRAN. Which do I concede ought to govern? Why, both should govern, each in its own sphere, and it is the intent of this act that they shall. It is the intent of the act that the Federal authorities shall establish such a quarantine as is necessary to protect every part of the whole country.

The local authorities will also have the right to establish a quarantine to protect themselves, and the only excuse for the interposition of the Federal authorities is because of the fact that the question is not a local but a national one. It is right, therefore, for the Federal Government to prescribe its regulations for the safety of the nation, and the municipality or State will prescribe such regulations as are deemed fit and necessary for the protection of the locality itself.

The amendment does not change the scope or nature of the bill reported by the committee; it simply defines and specifies the right of the State or municipality to take such precautions and establish such rules as to it may seem proper. These regulations the Federal authorities must respect, while they are at liberty to supplement them by any additional regulations that they may deem essential to the complete protection of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who conjures up a fanciful condition which he thinks might arise from the adoption of this amendment, and which is due evidently to the fact that the gentleman has not read the bill. There is no danger that additional quarantine may be imposed in order to secure fees for the health officer in the city of New York for the simple reason that no fees have been paid to the health officer there since a Republican incumbent of the office rendered the fee system infamous. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that my friend from New York, whose ability to make the worse appear the better reason I should be the last person to deny, in this ingenious amendment and his explanation of it fails to present to the House clearly just what is proposed to be done.

If I can understand the English language, the proposition in this bill is that wherever the State authorities shall not have established quarantine regulations that are deemed adequate or satisfactory, the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make other regulations to be enforced. Now, the gentleman's amendment proposes that no quarantine law or provision or regulation of any State shall be relaxed, or modified, or changed in the enforcement of this statute.

Mr. COCKRAN. Or suspended.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Or "suspended." I do not care which of those words you use. I say that the adoption of any one of the provisions of this amendment will render the law absolutely nugatory, because it will be utterly impossible for the United States quarantine authorities, where the State regulations may be inadequate or improper, to establish adequate or proper regulations without substituting the proper and necessary action in place of the inadequate and improper methods that are disapproved.

Mr. COCKRAN. Can you not supplement them?

Mr. BOUTELLE. You can not "supplement" that which is improper and inadequate by that which is adequate.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why not?

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it is not a question of supplementing. You can not do two contrary things at the same time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is the gentleman's objection to the word "modify"?

Mr. BOUTELLE. My objection is to the entire amendment. I will answer the gentleman categorically, that if it is not proposed to keep the word "modify" or its equivalent in the amendment, the amendment will mean nothing. I am equally opposed to either of the words employed to prevent the national quarantine authorities from substituting efficacious methods for those of a State that are found inefficient or worthless.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will take the amendment as it is, then.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If a ship comes into the port of New York with infected passengers on board, and the State of New York has provided that certain things shall be done with that ship in the nature of quarantine regulations, and the United States Government under this law is to be made absolutely unable to modify or relax or change or suspend those State regulations, then it is perfectly plain to my mind, however it may appear to others, that the quarantine authorities under the law of the United States, while the regulations of the State of New York are permitted to be carried out, can not at the same time carry out other and entirely different regulations that may be established by the Secretary of the Treasury. They are liable at any time to be in conflict.

The quarantine officers of New York State may say that a vessel shall go to her wharf and land her passengers at once or after three days' quarantine. The quarantine officers appointed under this United States law may say the vessel and passengers, in order to be surely purged from contagion, ought to go to the Lower Bay and lie there twenty days. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] proposes that the national quarantine law shall not "relax," "modify," or "suspend" the regulations of the New York State authorities, but that in such a case as I have supposed the vessel shall go to her wharf in New York and discharge her cargo and passengers after the three days' quarantine in spite of any protest by the national quarantine board; but after that is done, and after contagion may have been let loose upon the country over every trunk line leading out of New York, the quarantine authorities provided for by this law may take the empty hull down to the Lower Bay to be disinfected at leisure under the United States regulations!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. COCKRAN) there were—ayes 87, noes 95.

Mr. COCKRAN. I call for tellers on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering tellers.

Mr. DICKERSON. I want to move that the committee do now rise. There is so much confusion, and I think we have worked long enough; I think that the committee should now rise.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say that if you defeat this amendment you will defeat the bill.

Mr. COGSWELL. If the amendment is carried the bill will be worthless.

Mr. MILLIKEN. With the amendment in it, we do not want the bill.

Tellers were ordered on the amendment of Mr. COCKRAN, and the Chairman appointed Mr. COCKRAN and Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. COCKRAN. Inasmuch as objection has been made to the word "modify" in that amendment, I ask unanimous consent to strike it out.

Mr. ANTONY. I object.

Mr. DICKERSON. Is a motion that the committee do now rise, in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing, and the motion is not in order.

The tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 88.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I give notice that I shall call for the yeas and nays on that amendment in the House.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Substitute for the word "vessels," in the 37th line, on page 16, and all other words to and including the words "and crew," in line 44 of the same page, the following:

"By persons, shippers, and common or other carriers of persons or goods either at the port or place of departure or shipment for the United States, of any persons or goods, or on the journey, voyage, or transport to the United States of any persons or goods or at any port or place at or from which in the opinion of the President, contagious or infectious disease exists, or there is danger that infected goods or persons are likely to enter the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such persons or goods, and any medium of transport thereof."

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Chairman, this legislation, being had in such confusion as this, it is impossible for any one to understand what it is. I do not understand the provisions of this bill, and I think we ought to have a little time in which to consider it; and for that reason I want to move that the committee rise so that we may have until Monday morning to consider the bill. There is such a variety of opinion as to what its provisions are, that we can not determine on this confused consideration. I am not doing this through any captious opposition to the bill, but simply because I do not know what it means.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WISE. Division.

Mr. COCKRAN. A parliamentry inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCKRAN. What will be the effect of the committee rising now? Does that end the consideration of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It ends the consideration of the bill under the present rule.

Mr. REED. Not if the House takes a recess.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, what is the motion before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. That the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 42.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OUTHWAITE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9757) to provide forthe better protection of commerce and for the general welfare by the establishment of a national quarantine, etc., and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. COGSWELL. Make it 11.55.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield so that I can make a report on an appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday; and, pending that motion, the gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield until I can make a report on an appropriation bill?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANTONY. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 150.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday.

Mr. DOCKERY. Eleven o'clock and 55 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Eleven o'clock was the motion.

Mr. RAYNER. Eleven o'clock.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield so that I may make a report on an appropriation bill?

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes) the House was declared in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. Monday, January 23.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. BELTZHOOVER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported the bill (H. R. 10282) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department (Report No. 2329); which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

By Mr. OHLIGER: A bill (H. R. 10277) granting a pension to Leslie N. Aylsworth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10278) granting a pension to Mrs. Lovinia A. Hewitt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 10279) granting restoration of pension to the widow of Gen. Dan McCook—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 10283) granting a pension to Elizabeth Beesley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 10284) to authorize the presentation of a gold medal to Lieut. Frank D. Webster for gallant conduct—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DURBOROW: Petition of William Green and 40 others, of Jamestown, Pa., in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of John F. McMenamin and 6 others, of Chestnut street, Philadelphia, in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of John H. Atz and 75 others, of Philadelphia, in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of E. P. Hatch and 2 others, of Chicago, in favor of Sunday opening of the World's Fair—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of Fred Klepnow and 60 others, of Chicago, for opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of Rev. Francis Gordon and 98 others, of Chicago, in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of Harry Coleman and 50 others, of Philadelphia, in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of H. Falkner and 89 others, of Philadelphia, in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of Ed. Metins and 47 others, of Philadelphia, in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

SENATE.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of FRANCIS MARION COCKRELL, elected by the Legislature of Missouri a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1893; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. WASHBURN presented the credentials of CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, elected by the Legislature of Minnesota a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1893; which were read and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1631) to establish a life-saving station at Gay Head, on the coast of Massachusetts.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 2345) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River above New Orleans; and

A bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Louisiana at the election held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governor of that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with law, a statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, showing open market purchases of goods and supplies for the Indian service during the fiscal year 1892 in excess of $500, and the exigencies of the service rendering such purchases necessary; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented memorials of the Armory Methodist Episcopal Church of Dover, Del.; of the Union Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, Pa., and of the Presbyterian Church of Lawndale, Pa., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented memorials of J. W. R. Smith, of Updegraff; of E. J. Davis, of Jamestown; of the congregation of the Church of Christ of Quaker City; of Benjamin Talbot, of Columbus; of the Christian Endeavor Union of Cleveland, and of Adolph Bossel, of New Bremen, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of the State board of agriculture, of the Lake County Farmers' Institute, and of Pomona Grange, No. 3, of Knox County, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Edward J. Wallace, of the Safety Cycle Club of Springfield, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation providing for better roads; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of Miami Lodge, No. 441, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen of Cincinnati; of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of Springfield; of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of Springfield; of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of Tiffin; of the Stonecutters' Association of Cincinnati, and of 76 citizens of Portage County, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MANDERSON presented petitions of Theodore Koch, C. A. Miller, J. W. Whitney, and other citizens of Fullerton; of citizens of Central City; of Theodore Dunham and other citizens of Lincoln; of Robert Squires and 49 other citizens of Imperial; of Iron Molders' Union, No. 190, of Omaha; of members of Local Union No. 184, of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America; of members of Journeymen Stonecutters' Union of Omaha; of Local Union No. 11, International Union of Carriage and Wagon Workers, of Omaha; of Elkhorn Lodge, No. 28, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of North Platte; of Tom Potter Lodge, No. 140, of the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association of North America, of Lincoln; and of Cigar-Makers' International Union, No. 67, of South Omaha, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented memorials of the German Methodist Episcopal Church of Arlington, Nebr., and of the Presbytery of Nebraska, remonstracting against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of citizens of Stephenson, Shelby, and Iroquois Counties, in the State of Illinois, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented the petition of Scott Field and other citizens of Battle Creek, Mich., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented additional papers to accompany Senate bill No. 3720, to set aside the verdict of a court-martial in the case of George J. Barnes; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present the petition of C. M. Hildreth and 39 other business men of Lebanon, N. H., who represent that the experience of the past two years has convinced them that the purchase of silver under the act of Congress known as the Sherman bill, or any other bill having that object in view, has proved detrimental to the business interests of our country, and that a continuance of such purchases may within a short time result in financial disaster, and should therefore be immediately discontinued. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE presented petitions of Atascosa County Alliance, of Tarrant County Alliance, and of Cedar Creek Alliance, No. 2804, of Bastrop County, all in the State of Texas, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the repeal of all laws authorizing the purchase of bar silver by the Treasurer of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Winona, Minn., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the national control of quarantine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Winona, Minn., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act of 1890, or any other act compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Congregational Ministers' Conference, the Baptist Pastors' Conference, and the Presbyterian Pastors' Association of Minneapolis, of the Presbyterian Synod of St. Paul, and of the Woman's Auxiliary Board, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of M. Mouston, president, and other associated members of the council of La Prairie, Minn., praying that La Prairie be connected with Duluth by canal, it being one of the objective points on the Mississippi River for such purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented petitions of the Carpenters and Joiners' Labor Unions, Nos. 103 and 785, and of the Iron Molders' Unions, Nos. 16 and 20, of Louisville and Covington, in the State of Kentucky, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WASHBURN presented petitions of Iron Moulders'

Union, No. 226, of Brainerd, and of Local Union, No. 8, Master Workmen and Joiners' Union of America, praying for the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, praying that that Territory be admitted to Statehood at an early day; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Council joint memorial No. 1.—Statehood.

(Introduced by A. B. Fall, Dona Ana, Grant, Lincoln, Chaves, and Eddy Counties.)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, now in session at Santa Fe, most respectfully represent that—

Whereas by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, made between the United States and the Republic of Mexico on the 2d day of February, A. D. 1848, by virtue of which the Territory of New Mexico became a portion of the United States, it was solemnly declared that at the proper time such Territory should be incorporated into the Union and vested with all the powers of a sovereign State; and

Whereas the assessed value of property in the Territory is $45,500,000, while that of Idaho and Wyoming, when admitted, was respectively twenty-eight and thirty-one millions; and

Whereas the population of the Territory, exclusive of Indians, is more than 175,000, while that of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming when admitted was, respectively, thirty-nine, eighty-four, and sixty thousand; and

Whereas the proportion of foreign-born inhabitants in this Territory is seven to one hundred less than that of any of the recently admitted States; and

Whereas in every respect the Territory is entitled to demand, as a right based on justice and equity, her admission to the Union, an enabling act such as has lately passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate of the United States: Now therefore:

Be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, That honest justice to the people of the Territory demands that the Territory be admitted at an early day, and the Senate of the United States is respectfully requested to pass the House bill now pending therein, with the school clause as contained in the House bill, or with such a modification of the Senate committee amendment thereto as will do justice to the Spanish-speaking people, citizens, and tax-payers.

Be it further resolved, That the clerks of the council and House are hereby directed to transmit copies of this memorial to the Hon. Antonio Joseph, and through him to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the Senate of the United States.

J. FRANCO CHAVES,
CHAS. F. HUNT,
Chief Clerk of Council.
A. L. BRANCH,
Speaker of House.
FILADELFO BACA,
Chief Clerk of House.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of citizens of Columbia City, Ind., praying for the repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act of 1890; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of 25 citizens of Indiana; of Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 215, of Logansport; of Hoosier Lodge, No. 163, Independent Order American Mechanics, of Elkhart; of Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 335, of Hammond; of Typographical Union No. 286, of Marion; of Kickapoo Lodge, No. 310, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Brogit; of Cigar-Makers' Union of Bluffton; of International Brotherhood of Machinery Molders, No. 64, of Michigan City; and of Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 134, of Laporte, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. TURPIE. I present a communication from the governor of the State of California, stating that in accordance with a resolution of the Legislature of that State, at the general election held therein last November a vote was had under an act to ascertain the will of the people of the State upon the subject of the election of United States Senators by a vote of the people. The communication shows that upon that proposition the vote in favor of it was 187,987 and the vote against it 13,342. That was the result of a direct vote in the State of California on the question submitted to the people under a local law of that State.

I ask that the communication, which is very brief, containing about ten lines, and is transmitted by direction of the State Legislature, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the character of the communication? Is it the memorial of a State Legislature?

Mr. TURPIE. It is a communication from the governor of the State of California, transmitted in accordance with a resolution of the Legislature of that State.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall interpose no objection under those circumstances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TURPIE. I may be permitted to remark that I regard as a felicitous omen the fact that a great and growing State, and a comparatively new one like California, has given such a magnificent indorsement and approval to the policy of the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Sacramento, Cal., January 12, 1893.

SIR: In accordance with the resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, I hereby inform you that at the general election in this State, held on the 8th day of November, A. D. 1892, an act to ascertain an expression of the will of the people of the State of California upon the subject of the election of United States Senators, was submitted to the qualified voters of the State of California, and that the vote thereon was 187,987 in favor of the election of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people, and 13,342 against the election of such Senators by the direct vote of the people.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of State to be affixed at Sacramento this 10th day of January, A. D. 1893.

[SEAL.] H. H. MARKHAM, Governor.

Attest:

E. G. WAITE, Secretary of State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2110) for the relief of Henry Haltman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3506) for the relief of John Palmier, Pine Ridge, Shannon County, S. Dak., asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER (for Mr. CAMERON), from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3672) to amend the act approved June 8, 1880, relating to the pay to the Judge-Advocate-General, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9069) for the continuance of the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3728) for the relief of the Blalock Wheat-Growing Company, reported it without amendment.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound of the special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle and cattle feeding 60,000 copies, of which 20,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 40,000 for the use of the House.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 132) to print 100,000 copies of the special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle and on cattle feeding, to report adversely thereon and move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the title of the joint resolution be read.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Missouri for printing 100,000 copies of the report on cattle diseases. As we have just disposed of the House concurrent resolution to print 60,000 copies, it would hardly seem to be necessary to place the joint resolution on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN on the 9th instant, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely; as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed of the special report on the diseases of cattle and cattle feeding prepared by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, 100,000 copies, of which number 30,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 60,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 to be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

REPORT ON THE SHEEP INDUSTRY.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound of the special report on the sheep industry of the United States 60,000 copies, of which 20,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 40,000 for the use of the House.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 9th instant, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely; as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed of the special report on the sheep industry of the United States, prepared by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, 35,000 copies, of which number 10,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 20,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Secretary of Agriculture.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3753) relating to the anchorage and movement of vessels in the port of Chicago; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 3754) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3755) for the relief of Col. Azor H. Nickerson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3756) providing for the manufacture of steel high-power rifled guns, under the designs of R. J. Gatling, for coast defenses; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3757) granting a pension to Henry Curtis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3758) granting a pension to Robert Parker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 3759) to extend California avenue, in West Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3760) granting a pension to Samuel J. Rhoads; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3761) granting a pension to John Helfrich; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3762) for the relief of Mrs. M. P. Sawtelle, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3763) for the relief of the Oregon Improvement Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth, of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1892, 1,500 extra copies of part 1, in quarto form, of which 200 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 600 copies for the use of the House, and 700 copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and of part 2, in octavo form, 2,800 extra copies, of which 200 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 600 for the use of the House, and 2,000 copies for distribution by said Superintendent.

PROHIBITION OF CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CALL. I submit a resolution and ask for its consideration at this time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the official correspondence of the Government of China with the United States relating to the acts of Congress forbidding the emigration of Chinese and the treaty stipulations between the two countries, and that the same shall be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the resolution except that it ought to contain the usual provision. It is always usual when a call is made of that kind in regard to diplomatic correspondence to insert "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that modification. The correspondence on the part of our Government has already been printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2 of the resolution insert "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

WILLIAM K. COPELAND.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the bill (S. 3747) for the relief of William K. Copeland be recalled from the Committee on Pensions and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, inasmuch as it appears that that committee ought to have jurisdiction of the bill rather than the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). If there be no objection that order will be made.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE AT CINCINNATI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the bill (H. R. 10007) to provide for lowering the height of a bridge proposed to be constructed across the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., by the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRYE. The bill is reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce unanimously, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself agree about it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the antioption bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent of the Senate that it take up for consideration at this time the unfinished business. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], upon which the Senator from Mississippi is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have been informed by the Senator from Minnesota, who has charge of the bill, that he expects to ask the Senate to continue in session to-day until a vote shall be reached. I have also heard various Senators express their great anxiety that this matter should be finally disposed of. In view of that I propose this morning simply to occupy a very few minutes of the attention of the Senate on the proposition involved in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the minority of the Judiciary Committee.

The proposition involved in that amendment is that Congress is not the judge of what constitutes an obstruction to interstate and foreign commerce. I read before as authority, in a speech which I made six months ago, the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Wheeling Bridge Company. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to read it again. I propose to read that which I read six months ago from the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the State of Pennsylvania vs. The Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company:

We do not enter upon the question—

Say the court—

whether or not Congress possess the power, under the authority in the Constitution—

To establish post-offices and post-roads—

to legalize this bridge—

Counsel had insisted that that gave the power. The court waived that—for, conceding that no such powers can be derived from this clause, it must be admitted that it is, at least, necessarily included in the power conferred to regulate commerce among the several States. The regulation of commerce includes intercourse and navigation and, of course, the power to determine what shall or shall not be deemed in judgment of law an obstruction to navigation, and that power, as we have seen, has been exercised consistent with the continuance of the bridge.

The Senate will remember that after the court in a very elaborate and learned decision had concluded that the bridge in question was an obstruction to navigation and ordered it to be pulled down or raised to a certain height, then when the court was taking active steps to enforce the judgment, Congress passed a law legalizing the structure. Then the question came up before the court whether, after Congress had passed that law, the judgment of the court could be enforced. I wish the Senate to bear in mind that here was a distinct conflict between the judgment of the Supreme Court declaring the bridge to be an obstruction to navigation and the act of Congress on the subject declaring that it was not.

Now, which did the court say should prevail? The court gave effect to the last act of Congress, saying, as I have read, that the power to regulate commerce includes the power to determine what shall or shall not be deemed in judgment of law an obstruction to navigation, which is a part of commerce. That seems to be conclusive. That decision was made in the year 1855.

But that was no new doctrine of the Supreme Court. It was but the application of a doctrine which had long anterior to that time been settled by the Supreme Court. I propose to read what was said by the court in another very celebrated case on that very subject. I read now from the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Marshal in Gibbons vs. Ogden. On page 197 of the ninth volume of Wheaton's Reports, the court says:

This power—

To regulate commerce—

like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges—

Note the language—

no limitations other than prescribed in the Constitution. These are expressed in plain terms and do not affect the questions which arise in this case or which have been discussed at the bar. If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate especially to the language which follows:

The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections, are in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse. They are the restraints on which the people must often rely solely in all representative governments.

That is the doctrine of the Supreme Court, as announced in the year 1824 by Chief Justice Marshall. I have read what the court said in 1855. There is no authoritative decision of the Supreme Court against this doctrine, and why should there be, Mr. President? There must be some one who is the final judge in matters of this sort. Shall it be the Supreme Court or shall it be Congress? It is not to be understood that the Supreme Court has any revisory power over the action of Congress. It has no power except to decide a case. Gentlemen sometimes think that the Supreme Court has been invested by the Constitution with the power to decide all questions of constitutional law. It has no such power. The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction, nor has any Federal court jurisdiction to decide anything but a case, and of course in reaching a conclusion in a particular case the court decides the questions that are involved. Let that be borne in mind. It is not the theory of our institutions that the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court has a revisory power over the action of Congress.

I will allude to one or two instances in which this power of Congress has been exerted beyond control by the Supreme Court. There are two ways only in which the Supreme Court can ever make a decision upon the question involved. One mode must exist in all cases. There must arise a case between parties which has been instituted in the lower courts, and which, by appeal or writ of error, has been brought to the Supreme Court. Then what does the court do? I wish Senators to consider this point. The court decides the law upon the facts made in that particular case. If it is a case of A against B it decides the law as A and B have evolved it by the proof which they have made in that particular case.

So a particular obstruction to commerce, if left to the final decision of the Supreme Court, would depend upon the proof which private parties may have made in that particular case with reference to that particular obstruction, and when the judgment of the court is rendered, if the court please, it is a judgment adjudicating rights to A as against the action of B. Let that be borne in mind.

But gentlemen may ask, how can the Supreme Court in any case adjudicate that a particular thing is an obstruction to commerce? Only, sir, because Congress may have left to the decision of the court that particular question.

We have two statutes, both recent, which illustrate the action of Congress on that particular subject. In the antitrust law Congress declared all contracts and all combinations, whether in the shape of a trust or otherwise, which obstructed interstate and foreign commerce to be illegal and void. In that case Congress laid down the rule and left it to the courts to ascertain the fact; and in all cases of that kind the courts may, in obedience to a rule of law fixed either by the Constitution or by Congress, adjudicate whether a particular act, whether it be a contract or whether it be something else, is an obstruction to commerce.

Congress not only can and does prescribe rules by which the courts are governed in the ascertainment of the judgment which they shall announce, but Congress has also assumed for itself in many instances the final settlement of the question whether a particular thing is or is not an obstruction to commerce. We have an instance of that—and I cite it now only for that purpose—in the interstate-commerce law, in which Congress makes an enactment of that sort, to which I desire to call the especial attention of Senators who are giving attention to this question. Remember that Congress may either prescribe the rule by which the courts shall act and leave it to the courts to settle the fact, or, as was decided by the Supreme Court in the case to which I have called attention, Congress may decide the fact itself, and there is no appeal. This statute provides:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract—

These are contracts with which we are dealing—agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads or any portion thereof.

In that case Congress did not leave it to the courts to say whether or not pooling was an obstruction to interstate commerce, but Congress assumed to decide for itself that it was an obstruction, and denounced it. Has any court ever held that Congress could not do that thing? I know of no instance of that sort.

I have a list, I will not read all of it to the Senate, of various statutes in which Congress has done the very same thing. It is no new thing in American constitutional law for Congress to decide that a particular specific thing is a proper regulation of commerce as being a facility to commerce in removing obstructions.

I wish to call attention to some of the late acts of Congress on that subject to show that Congress assumes to decide, and does decide finally, and there is not a Senator here who will undertake to say that every one of those statutes is not constitutional.

I call attention to section 4258 of the Revised Statutes. I will read a part of it so that the Senate may understand what it is:

SEC. 4258. Every vessel carrying more than fifty such passengers, and engaged in transporting them between the United States and Europe, shall have for their use on deck, housed and conveniently arranged, at least one caboose or cooking-range, the dimensions of which shall be equal to 4 feet long and 1 foot 6 inches wide for every two hundred passengers.

Can the Supreme Court or any other court set that aside upon the ground that Congress did not have the right to decide the specific thing which should be done? If Congress had desired to leave it to the courts, it would have said unless vessels had on board a cooking range of sufficient dimensions to accommodate the crew; but Congress does not do that. It says the range shall be just so many feet wide and just so many feet long. I come to section 4260, which provides:

All vessels so employed in transporting passengers between the United States and Europe shall have on board, for the use of such passengers, at the time of leaving the last port whence such vessel shall sail, well secured under deck, for each passenger—

What? A sufficient amount of wholesome and nutritious food, leaving it to the court to ascertain whether there was a sufficient supply on hand or not? No, sir; but—shall have on board, for the use of such passengers, at the time of leaving the last port whence such vessel shall sail, well secured under deck, for each passenger, at least 20 pounds of good navy bread.

No other bread will do—at least 20 pounds of good navy bread, 15 pounds of rice, 15 pounds of oatmeal, 10 pounds of wheat flour, 15 pounds of pease and beans, 20 pounds of potatoes, 1 pint of vinegar, 60 gallons of fresh water, 10 pounds of salted pork, and 10 pounds of salt beef, free of bone, all to be of good quality.

Here Congress prescribes the specific thing, a bill of fare. It does not leave it to the courts to ascertain whether a sufficient amount of food and water and clothing—for clothing also is prescribed here—shall be put on board of a vessel, but the statute fixes it, and it goes on to provide in the last part of the same section that where these things can not be had, a sufficient quantity of something else shall be put on board. A penalty is also imposed for sailing without these provisions and water prescribed. Then there is a provision for ventilators, providing that they are to be of a certain size and placed at certain parts of the vessel.

Can Congress do that unless it has power to find the fact which ought to be done? Senators say these are not obstructions to navigation. I admit they are not, but the absence of these things constitute the obstruction, and these provisions constitute the act of removing the obstruction and the particular way in which it shall be removed.

There is a statute which requires that every ship shall be clean. There is another statute, section 4276, in which social intercourse between the passengers is regulated and a penalty imposed for allowing seamen to visit the immigrant part of the ship. There are various other provisions to which I simply call attention for the purpose of allowing Senators to examine the statutes. I call attention to section 4282, where, so far as fire is concerned, there is removed the liability of the owner of a vessel who was liable by the common law and liable by the law-merchant for the destruction of property committed to his care, unless it comes from the act of God or the King's enemies.

There is another section, 4283, where the liability of the owners of a vessel for embezzlement is limited to the interest of the owner in the vessel, and his personal liability is taken away.

There is a regulation relative to log-books, which contains some minute provisions as to their contents, and among them a provision that every birth happening on board is to be registered and reported, and also every marriage, with the names and ages of the parties.

Section 4386 provides a penalty for transporting certain animals over a certain length of time without food or water.

All these things go to show that Congress has uniformly exercised the power which Chief Justice Marshall said in Gibbons vs. Ogden was solely invested in it, and which the Supreme Court twenty-five years afterwards reaffirmed as being solely invested in it; but Senators say that that makes the will of Congress supreme; that Congress, if it can decide this question finally, may make certain absurd and ridiculous provisions, and they would be the law of the land. Is not that equally so with reference to the Supreme Court? I suppose you have to make somebody the final judge.

Suppose I should say, like Mr. Jefferson did, who was so feelingly alluded to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other day as a great light from which we were not to depart; or suppose any of us on this side were to say that it is as dangerous to place the final decision of this constitutional question in the Supreme Court as anywhere else. What did Mr. Jefferson say with reference to the Federal judiciary? He simply called them the sappers and miners of the Constitution.

I do not reiterate that language: I am only speaking of what good men and great men have said about leaving anything to any department of the Government as a final decision. Of course Mr. Jefferson contended all along, as all the State-rights men did until the war, that no department of the Government should be the final judge of the powers which the Government might exercise. We all contended for that. That was Mr. Jefferson's doctrine; that was the doctrine of the resolutions of 1798 in Kentucky, which are said to have been drawn up by him; but who contends for that doctrine now? That part of Jeffersonian Democracy, if it had not been killed before by Jackson and by Taney, has certainly departed from the politics of this country by the result of the war and the amendments to the Constitution made in accordance therewith.

I wish to call attention once more to what John Marshall said upon this unlimited power. Of course, there is bound to be a final judge. Who is to revise the action of Congress upon a declaration of war? Suppose that the Congress of the United States was wicked enough to declare war to-day against every enlightened power in the world, can the Supreme Court revise it and correct it? Sir, the true restraint, since the doctrine of State interposition has been abrogated, lies in what Chief Justice Marshall said in the extract from which I read:

> The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections are, in this—> as in many other instances as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse. They are the restraints on which the people must often rely solely in all representative governments.

The Supreme Court has over and over again announced the same doctrine. What did the court say in the effort made to restrain the enforcement of the reconstruction acts? It said Congress was the final judge. That was the most important question that ever came before the American Congress involving more of weal and woe, more of the rights of the people of this country, than any other question, and yet the court decided that that was a matter left by the Constitution solely to Congress.

Mr. President, it does not devolve upon me at this late day to vindicate the solemn judgment of the Supreme Court upon this subject. It may have been better, and at one time it was a part of my political creed that it was better, that there was outside of the machinery of the Federal Constitution a final judge as to the powers to be exercised by the Federal Government, but that day has gone. There is obliged to be somebody final; it is necessary that the decision of some department of the Government should be final; and the Supreme Court has said that as to this particular measure, the regulation of commerce, Congress was the final judge.

But Senators say, Can Congress do anything? Can Congress make any sort of regulation it sees proper? I answer, no. I answer that the members of Congress are as much bound by their oaths to support the Constitution of the United States and to perform their duties of legislation according to the Constitution and law as the Supreme Court, and so far as the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce is concerned they have the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States for the exercise of that power.

I admit that Congress may do wrong; but may not the Supreme Court? Are the judges of the court infallible? Are they angels? Are they endowed with any power and wisdom superior to the other departments of the Government? I do not think they are. They are good men when they perform their appropriate duties, but when they undertake to travel out of their appropriate duties and to fix rules for the regulation of commerce, then they are performing a function which the Constitution has denied them according to their own decision, and for which they are unfitted.

Mr. President, having said that much, I will not press further any argument upon the question involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], except to consider whether we have before us sufficient evidence upon which to make the declaration. On that point I have heretofore, as have other Senators, produced the evidence before this body. I have one other piece of evidence, however, which I will read on that subject, and then I think I shall have discharged my duty. I read now from an article from the Washington Post of three or four days ago:

> "Cotton buying in the South has been bad," said Mr. C. H. Bond, who is stopping at the Randall. "The crop has been good enough, but the competition has been heavy and the markets extremely unsettled. Some men I know, who are professional buyers of cotton, have been able to do nothing at all. They refuse to put up a cent for the staple for the reason that the quotations from the money centers fluttered up and down in a very bewildering way. Formerly a man who wished to buy cotton for delivery in the Liverpool market was able to make some sort of calculation as to what it would be worth when it reached England. This season it has been impossible to make any calculation at all. The amount of cotton on hand was known all right enough and the amount of future supply was figured to a nicety, but it has been well nigh impossible to do anything on account of the fluctuations."

I will not read the entire article now, yet I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that during this season there have been more dealings in futures than at any other period of our history. In one month alone, in the month of November, futures were sold to the amount, I believe, of over 8,000,000 bales of cotton; in the month of December they were sold to nearly the amount of 6,000,000 bales of cotton, and sold whilst this gentleman complains that real cotton buying could not go on, that men would not buy the real cotton, and yet it is shown by the record of the exchanges in New Orleans and in New York that more fictitious trading in sham cotton was carried on than ever before.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course.

Mr. VILAS. I should simply like to ask the Senator from Mississippi in that connection, for he is better informed on the details than I am, if during the period when the excess of future sales has been so great the price of cotton has not advanced?

Mr. GEORGE. From September until the present time there has been an advance, but he who has paid attention to the cotton market will find that there have been depressions as well as advances; that the markets have not been regular; that there has been a fall altogether, I believe, of over 1 cent as compared to other parts of the market.

I have heretofore read the evidence to the Senate of the fluctuations, sometimes amounting to fifty points in a day, and I refer Senators to it. Those fluctuations, those dealings this gentleman says, make it unsafe for men to deal in actual cotton. He says:

> That the amount of cotton on hand was known all right enough, and the amount of future supply was figured to a nicety.

Does it not seem, when the actual crop was ascertained and when the amount of the supply on hand was ascertained, that all the elements of what was the proper price of cotton were known? But he says:

> The amount of cotton on hand was known all right enough, and the amount of future supply was figured to a nicety, but it has been well nigh impossible to do anything on account of the fluctuations.

Do anything, how? Not to deal in futures, because I have shown that there was more dealing in futures in the last two months than ever before in the same length of time. This writer accounts for it—

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to ask the Senator what was the relative parity in price during this period between spot cotton and future cotton?

Mr. GEORGE. In the New York market, without a single exception upon any one day, futures were sold lower than spots. I showed in the speech, which I made several days ago, that commencing on the 1st of September and ending on the 1st of December, there was not a single exception in the city of New York on any day that futures were not sold lower than spots, and therefore sold against them.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator does not meet the question I asked.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. WHITE. I asked the Senator what was the price of future cotton for January, February, March, April, and May delivery during December in New York, as compared with spot cotton?

Mr. GEORGE. I refer the Senator to the speech I made on that subject, in which the figures were given for the months named. I can not state them accurately now, but I can state that it took futures from one to three months to reach the price of spots.

Let me explain what that means. On the 15th day of November spot cotton was sold in New York at 10 cents a pound; futures on that day, deliverable in that same month, were sold at about 9.6 cents; and it so happened that on the last day of November in which sales were made—I believe it was on the 28th—futures deliverable within the next two days were sold at $2.40 per bale less than spots. I hope I have answered the Senator.

I took, say from the 10th day of November to the 15th, according to the market, as will be seen by looking at my speech—I quoted as accurately as I could, and I had the figures made out by the gentleman to whom the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] introduced me as a reliable man, and I know them to be reliable—it took until January in some instances and February in some instances for the price of futures to be equal to the price of spots on a named day in November and December.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me, my question did not address itself to the relative price of spots and futures in the same month. I think the figures I have heretofore given establish beyond peradventure, and I do not think even the Senator will dispute it, that the effect of the operation on the market has been this: This year the spot market was depressed because of the controversy as to the size of the crop. The spinners being overloaded with cotton for immediate consumption, as I have shown, held out of the market, and the great speculative mind of the country being satisfied of the smallness of the crop, speculators came in and bought cotton for February, March, April, and May delivery, which forced the spot cotton up and forced the spinner to buy. Therefore the speculative demand drove up the price of cotton for consumption, when under the normal demand of the spinner it would have declined.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator does not contradict my facts; he draws only a different inference from that which I have drawn. He asked me as to the relative price of spot cotton and futures, and I have shown that futures are sold from one-tenth to one-half cent lower than spot. As to the inference, I want to say something about that since the Senator has alluded to it; and if this can be answered successfully, then I confess I know nothing about the force of human reasoning.

But let us go back a step, and look at this thing as it is. It is said, as the Senator has just said, that the sale of futures keeps up the price of spots. Let us see what the fact is upon that subject, and see whether it does or does not. The first fact is that futures are uniformly sold lower than spots. How does that keep up the price of cotton? I should like to have that answered. If I be in the city of New York to-day and desire to buy cotton, if spots are offered to me at 9½ cents, deliverable at once, money all paid down, to be insured by me at my risk from the very moment that I buy it, storage to be paid by me from the very moment that I become the owner, and futures, say in April, are offered to me at the same price, and I am not required to pay on the future contract more than $5 a bale and have no insurance and no storage to pay, I should like to know what I as a reasonable man would buy if I am a speculator; and it is all speculation now about which we are talking?

If I am a consumer and I must have the cotton right then and there and can not wait, what will I do? I will buy just as much at 9½ cents a pound as I am compelled to buy, and no more, and wait until the lapse of time shall equalize things a little. If I am a speculator—and it is claimed that it is speculators under these future dealings who keep the price of cotton up—what will I do? I will say, "What is the sense of my paying out $50 a bale for cotton to-day, holding it for sale in April, May, or June, or as I see proper, when I can buy by paying out only $5 a bale cotton at the same price, deliverable to me two or three months ahead?"

Is there any sane man who would hesitate as to what he would do under such circumstances? I ask the Senator from Louisiana, interested as I am as a representative in the raising of cotton, if in fact the uniform selling of futures at lower prices than spots does not prevent the dealing in spots by speculators?

Mr. President, what are the facts? I have given you the prices, I have drawn my inferences, and the Senator has drawn his. Now let us see how the facts work out as shown by the reports of the New York Cotton Exchange for the year 1890-'91. There were sold in New York 26,000,000 bales of futures in round numbers, there were sold 99,000 bales of real cotton for export, and about 96,000 bales to spinners, actual consumers. How much was taken by the speculators, who, it is said, keep up the price of cotton? Just 1,026 bales. I should like to know how the purchase of 1,026 bales of spot cotton in a whole year in the city of New York has the effect of raising the price of spot cotton.

Mr. MORGAN. Does not speculation in fact put the price down?

Mr. GEORGE. It does, and I read the evidence here a week or two ago, and I will ask the permission of the Senate, at the suggestion of a friend of mine, that I may incorporate in my remarks two or three pages of the speech I made some days ago upon that subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

[The extracts from the speech of Mr. GEORGE above referred to will be found as an appendix at the end of his speech in to-day's RECORD.]

Mr. GEORGE. Before I take my seat, I should like the Senator from Louisiana to explain to me how the continuous selling of future cotton below the price of spot tends to keep up the price of spot cotton?

Mr. WHITE. I shall take pleasure in explaining that very fully to the Senator. I have prepared my tables and expected to speak this morning.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; I will yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. No, I shall have the pleasure when my turn comes to pay my respects to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear the Senator or anybody else on that subject. I should like to know if it is a fact that two and two make five? I should like to know how you arrive at that conclusion, and I should like to know, if it be a fact, why a part is equal to the whole? I suppose there is nothing impossible now to logicians. I should like to know why the continual selling of thirty or forty million bales of cotton lower than spots has the effect of keeping up the price of spots?

Mr. President, I have said all I intend to say on this particular question. However, I have not read all of the article in the Post to which I alluded, which it would be very unjust to the gentleman if I did not quote in full. It is but fair to him for me to read the remainder of it.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator read from the New York Post?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; from the Washington Post. After showing all the trouble about cotton and cotton buying, how cotton buyers have been driven out of the market, and the fluctuations in the market, which he says did it, and which were simply fluctuations in the futures market, he accounts for it in this way:

> The way in which the prices have advanced and receded has been due almost altogether to the antioptions bill before Congress. One day it seemed that it would pass, and another day it seemed that it would not. We have been unable to buy on this account, and the farmer, who needed the ready money, has suffered. In my opinion he will suffer still more after the bill becomes a law—if it ever does becomes a law.

There is one little moral I desire to draw in conclusion. The fact to which I wish to call attention is that there have been more sales of futures for the last three months than ever before in a similar time—8,000,000 bales in November and nearly 6,000,000 bales in December. I have not added up the numbers for this month, but trading in futures has certainly not been interfered with by the pendency of the antioption bill; on the contrary, it seems to have been a stimulus to them. If it be a fact that the large tradings in futures or the fluctuations in the futures market have made it unsafe to buy cotton, and therefore men who want real cotton will not buy it, I should like to know what further fact the Senate desires to have proved before it to establish the proposition that dealings in futures do influence the price of cotton.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator will recollect that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] admitted on the floor the other day that he recognized the fact that there had been a great advance in the articles covered by this bill and that the market had wonderfully improved, but that it all grew out of the expectation of the passage of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I express no opinion on that subject. I have just been combatting the statement made by the man from whom I have quoted. Before I sit down I merely wish to add that if men have the power to thus raise and depress prices by future dealings, is not that a reason why this bill should be passed?

APPENDIX.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senate to another very important fact, and that is, as the sales of futures increase in quantity the real transactions in real cotton in New York decrease in quantity. I read from their own report submitted by the New York Cotton Exchange:

"In 1889 there were 218,429 bales of cotton sold for export; in 1890, 163,932; in 1891"—

The very figures which I gave—

"96,666 bales."

The New York Cotton Exchange have become so enamored with trading in "futures" that year by year they pay less and less attention to real transactions. Now let us examine as to spinning.

"In 1889, 200,550 bales were sold for spinning; in 1890, 151,938; in 1891, the amount for spinning was 99,956 bales."

Then, "for speculation." Before I get through I shall have something to say about speculation, but it is as well to read that part of it here. "In 1889, 9,045 bales of spot cotton"—real cotton, genuine cotton—were sold for speculation in New York. In 1890 the enormous sum of 573 bales was sold; in 1891, 1,026 bales were sold for speculation. Now let us see how the "futures" ran in those years. Here it is in their own book:

"The transactions of cotton for future delivery have aggregated 26,389,500 bales"—

That is for the year 1890-'91—

"against 21,084,100 bales last year, and 20,184,400 bales in 1889."

So that as the transactions in "futures" go up the transactions in real cotton go down.

* * * * * * *

On the 1st day of September last in New York spots were worth 7.12 cents. In September futures were worth 7.08 cents, and in November only did futures catch up with the price of spots on the 1st day of September. On the 15th day of September spots were worth 7.19 cents. They reached 7.13 in November, and only got even with the price of spots in December following. For September 28 spots were worth 7.63 cents. They reached 7.65 cents in November in New York. I have taken the 1st, 15th, and 28th of each month and they represent fairly the business of the whole month. On the 1st day of October spot cotton in New York was worth 7.69 cents. Futures reached 7.63 cents in November and 7.75 cents in December.

On October 15 it was worth 8 cents in New York. It reached 8.02 cents in February, about four months afterwards. October 28 spots in New York were worth 8.63. They were as low as 8.38 cents in February, and reached 8.63 cents only in March. November 1, spot cotton was 8.31. It reached 8.19 cents in January, three months afterwards. November 15 spots were worth 9 cents in New York. It reached 8.91 cents only in January, 9.11 cents in March, and so on. It is thus shown by reference to the account of sales of cotton of spots and futures in New York that uniformly, without a single exception in the city of New York, futures ranged from one-tenth to one-half a cent lower for the same day of the same month, and reached a parity with that day only from two to three months afterwards.

* * * * * * * *

I read now from a letter of Atwood, Violett & Co., to the Memphis Commercial, dated September 28. Atwood, Violett & Co. are reputable cotton-future brokers in the city of New Orleans and write a daily letter to the Memphis papers, and also to the papers in the city of Jackson, in the State of Mississippi, and probably in other places. They say, referring to Liverpool:

"Our cables say there was very large selling by the long interest. The spot business there has improved; sales, 14,000 bales. We think the decline there yesterday and in New York as well as here, was premeditated and done to shake out the long interest by influential parties."

There is where the result was accomplished by the predetermined action of speculators in futures. I quote again from the Memphis Commercial:

"NEW YORK, September 27.

"Schwarts, Dupee & McCormick furnish the following review of the New York cotton market: 'The market declined on account of nearly all the outside interest being on the long side and the short interest covered up. There has not been sufficient new buying at the advance to cause a further rise.'"

I read again from the market report of September 30, in the Memphis Commercial:

"The weakness in the several domestic markets occurred late in the day, and was due"—

I have been talking about longs; they had caused the depression—

"was due to shorts realizing and an expected increase in receipts close ahead."

So it goes down by the action of the longs or by the action of the shorts, just as each one sees proper to depress the market.

I read now from the market report of Hubbard, Price & Co., of New York, who are reputable dealers in cotton:

"Liverpool advices this morning were not regarded as a satisfactory response to the advance in New York yesterday, and the result was many realizing orders. Under the liquidation the market eased away 3 to 5 points."

From the same parties, to the Memphis Avalanche and Appeal on October 8:

"Our market opened at 10 points decline for the immediate and 5 to 6 points for the more distant positions, caused entirely by the selling of the local long interest."

I read again from Atwood, Violett & Co., strong opponents of this bill:

"The decline to-day of 20 points from last night's closing, from which there was a recovery of 4, indicates a heavy realizing by the longs, and selling on stop orders."

From the same parties, New Orleans, October 14:

"The long interest closing out to-day at the opening on stop orders and otherwise caused a drop of 8 points here, January selling at 55. Later on, after reports of rain at a number of points in Texas, there was a recovery of 15, January advancing to 71, but selling orders again came on, and January closed at 62."

From Hubbard, Price & Co., again, the New York men:

"A liquidation ensued, causing large sales by orders as stop orders were reached, and with only slight reaction the market declined 14 points by 1 o'clock."

From Atwood, Violett & Co., again, October 27:

"As long as the idea prevails that there is an interest in the market that will be forced to liquidate on a declining market, just so long will there be timidity about increasing the long interest."

That is, by persons buying.

From the same parties, on October 27:

"The situation seems to be about as follows: The bears in all three markets have for the last week been endeavoring to create the impression that by holding off and feeding the market with short sales slowly—

Slowly!

"and feeding the market with short sales slowly the longs would be gradually forced to cover and all that the shorts had to do was to wait. Liverpool has been flooded with information about expected large increase in movement. Frost news has been discredited, although the Government has given its official indorsement as follows for yesterday morning: Atlanta district, minimum temperature, 26°; Augusta, 32°; Charleston, 36°; Little Rock, 34°; Memphis, 32°; Mobile, 34°; Montgomery, 30°; New Orleans, 36°; Vicksburg, 30°. Whether this low temperature has a beneficial effect upon the cotton crop those bearishly inclined must decide. Our own impression is that the market will be one-half cent higher inside of thirty days. Whether it will go lower in the mean time depends upon the influence we have mentioned as to what extent present cotton labors in England will be carried."

Now I read from another very reputable firm in New Orleans, cotton brokers:

"We attribute the weakness almost entirely to the fact of the selling out of long cotton and not to any other cause."

I read from Hubbard, Price & Co., again:

"The New York market opened firm at 13 to 14 points advance, and became easy under continued realizing. On the decline the South and West came into the market as large buyers, and the decline was recovered, January touching 9.01, though freely offered at 9 when the sale was made. During the afternoon the supply proved too much for prices, breaking the market to 8.86 for January."

All these quotations are from persons who are the enemies of this bill, who are reputable cotton brokers, regularly reporting the condition of the markets in New Orleans and New York.

Now, I read from a firm that is on the other side, the Jerome Hill Cotton Company. I am authorized to say with reference to that firm that it has handled within the last twenty-five years in the Southern markets, Memphis and St. Louis, more cotton than any other factoring house in the country. They close up by saying:

"While the situation really is growing stronger each day by reduction of the surplus and bad reports from the crop, cotton is being forced down by illegal methods."

Now, Mr. President, we have the facts. We have the declaration of the representatives of the New York Cotton Exchange, Latham, Alexander & Co., that this can be done. We have the further fact that they uniformly in New York sell futures for from one-tenth to one-half cent lower than spots. We have the declaration of these men, which I have read in the hearing of the Senate, showing that on certain days the market was depressed solely by the action of the dealers in futures. Now, what more do you want? First, we have the actual transactions of the market continued through three months, without a single exception on any day, to the fact that there was a continual selling of futures against the spot market and lower than the spot market. Then we have the declaration of these parties above quoted that on certain days, without reference to anything else, the market was depressed by the action of future dealers.

* * * * * * * *

"Mr. YOUMANS. Now, in these various transactions of the kind you have just explained, do not these men in making these transactions make an effort to depress the market of the actual grain?

"Mr. KNEELAND. No more than the men who buy it make an effort to put it up. It is opposing and contending forces all the time."

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the next sentence. Mr. Kneeland says:

"They can not get up a bear lie that I can not get up a bull lie to equal it."

So there is the confession of this prominent member of the New York Produce Exchange that lies are used on both sides for the purpose of raising and depressing prices. I have some examples of that to show you that this man was not mistaken on that subject.

* * * * * * * *

I read what Hubbard, Price & Co. say October 29:

"In Liverpool the arrival market declined 2 to 3 points. This decline exceeded the anticipation of the trade and our market opened barely steady under heavy selling by local operators. After these offerings were absorbed it became known that the decline in Liverpool was accentuated by a rumor that Neill Bros. had issued an estimate of a crop of 8,000,000 bales. This was afterward denied from New Orleans."

It turned out to be false. Mr. Kneeland would call it a lie. Mr. Neill, it seems, is a gentleman who has great character for being an accurate calculator as to the amount of a crop before it is gathered. On that occasion a decline was forced in the market by a falsehood as to his statement as to the extent of the crop. October 13 they dealt with him again:

"Our Liverpool cable of this morning said there was an uneasy feeling in that market and large selling, which latter, we ascertained, was attributable to a rumor, so our correspondent there informs us, that Neill had issued an estimate of 8,250,000 bales for this crop."

That turned out to be a mistake, and there was a decline in the market. They use Mr. Neill again, and there was another decline in the market. That was in the same month. Then comes a very remarkable statement, which I might as well bring in here as I have it before me. It did not affect the market at all, but it was one of those untruths or rather nontruths which were circulated, not for the purpose of affecting the market exactly, but to affect men here. There was a decline in Liverpool July 5 of several points. At that time the pending antioption bill was before the Senate and was being considered. There was an attempt to manufacture a sentiment against it. There was an attempt to prejudice in the public mind the public men who were advocating it, and so this firm of Atwood, Violett & Co., in reporting the decline in Liverpool, say:

"We think the weakness in Liverpool after 12 o'clock was due to the amended antioption bill to be introduced by Senator GEORGE, of Mississippi."

A most remarkable circumstance, Mr. President, that the price of cotton in Liverpool should be affected adversely by an amendment not offered, but proposed to be offered, by so humble an individual as I am! Of course that was a mistake, a nontruth, intended simply to prejudice the minds of the people of Mississippi against me and my action. That was published in the leading Democratic paper in the State of Mississippi, July 6.

Then comes another very remarkable thing among the capacities of these people, according to Mr. Kneeland, to make representations. This is from Hubbard, Price & Co.'s circular of November 17, New York:

"During the afternoon January declined to 17, closing easily at 18 and 19. The principal cause of the decline is a dispatch from Chicago, reporting an interview with Senator WASHBURN, in which he said that the antioption bill will certainly pass the Senate as soon as it has been convened, unless there should prove to be a a great change in sentiment."

Yet whilst cotton declined in New York, or these traders in New York forced a decline, upon the reported interview from Chicago with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], it appears that all the other articles embraced in the bill, and which are principally dealt with in Chicago, were not affected by the declaration that the bill would pass. I thought when I ascertained that fact that my friend from Minnesota had invented a kind of machine which would have the effect of destroying the interests of the people of the South, and not affecting the interests of the people of the West; but upon further investigation I find it frequently happens that when reports go into the markets with reference to the passage or the nonpassage of the pending bill in the Senate sometimes cotton goes up when the bill is reported as being about to pass, or having a good chance to pass, and wheat goes down. So I take it that there is nothing in that except that as these speculators desire to affect Representatives and Senators from one section or the other they report these alleged effects upon the market. As they have got up a considerable agitation against the antioption bill down South, when they want to increase that agitation they report that the Hatch bill is destroying cotton, and when they want to perform a similar operation in the West, they report that it is destroying corn, wheat, and provisions.

The next point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is one of the alleged benefits to come from the pending bill. It is claimed all along that it steadies operations; that we do not have under the operation of the future dealing violent fluctuations. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to a little of the proceedings of the market upon that point. Cotton has risen and fallen, as everybody knows, since the 1st of September. I with to quote from the market in New Orleans, which is the principal spot market in this country. There is very little spot business done in New York, as we have seen.

On September 1 the spots in New Orleans were worth 7 cents; on the 12th it fell to 6⅞ cents; on the 13th it went back to 7 cents; on the 14th it went back to 6⅞ cents; on the 21st it went up to 7 1/16; on the 23d to 7 1/16; on the 26th to 7 1/16; or, in other words, in the month of September there was a variation of ⅛ cent per pound from the highest to the lowest. Take October. October 1 cotton in New Orleans was worth 7 1/16 cents; on the 3d it was worth 7 1/16; on the 4th, 7 1/16; on the 6th, 7⅛; on the 12th, 7⅛; on the 13th, 7⅛; on the 14th, 7 1/16; on the 19th, 7⅛; on the 21st, 7⅛; on the 23d, 7⅛; on the 27th, back to 7⅛ cents; and the 28th, up again to 7⅛; on the 29th, back to 7⅛; and on the 31st, 7⅛. There was a variation in the price nearly every day, and the variation in that month was ten-sixteenths of a cent, over half a cent.

Take the month of November at New Orleans. On the 1st day of November cotton was worth 7⅛ cents; on the 2d it was worth 7⅛; on the 5th it was worth 7⅛; on the 7th it was worth 7⅛; on the 9th it was worth 8 1/16; on the 10th, 8 1/16; on the 11th, 8 1/16; on the 12th, 8⅛; on the 14th, 8⅛; on the 15th, 9 cents; on the 16th, 9 1/16; on the 17th, 9 1/16, a fall again; on the 18th, 9 1/16; on the 19th, 9 1/16; on the 21st, 9 1/16; on the 22d, 9 1/16; on the 25th, 9⅛; on the 26th, 9 1/16; on the 29th, 9⅛, there being a variation during the month of 2 1/16 cents. So I do not see much steadiness in the market occasioned by future delivery.

Now, I will make some quotations. Atwood, Violett & Co., to whom I have just alluded as prominent cotton men in New Orleans, in their letter to the Memphis Commercial of October 26, say:

"Liverpool vacillated considerably to-day."

I. E. Glenny & Co., in the Appeal-Avalanche, November 12, say:

"New York opened 13 points higher and closed 4 points higher, with sales of 514,100 bales. New Orleans opened irregular, 13 to 18 points higher, declined 16 to 17 points, and closed 8 points higher than yesterday; sales 174,000 bales."

There were four or five variations on the same day, and large variations up and down. The same letter goes on to say:

"We have had another day of very large business and considerable fluctuations. The advance in Liverpool had to a certain extent been discounted yesterday, but it nevertheless brought in large buying orders for the opening of the market, which was at about the highest of the day. We fluctuated frequently and sharply, at one time being very weak, with sales of January as low as 8.60."

I read from the New York Herald of September 26:

"Cotton was more active than on any day for a long time, and the fluctuations were feverish and within a wide range of prices. Early in the day there was an advance of 15 points. Later on a part of this was lost. Still later the market ran back to the best prices of the day, November and December showing a net rise of 16 points compared with Saturday closing figures. Still later there was a reaction, and the final prices were about 10 points higher than the closing official quotations on Saturday."

That looks like a steady market, when there are four or five rises and falls during the same day! I quote now from the letter of I. E. Glenny & Co., who are prominent cotton men of New Orleans, to the Memphis Appeal-Avalanche in November:

"New York opened 2 points lower and closed 14 points higher. New Orleans opened 1 point lower, declined 2 points, advanced, closing 12 points higher."

That looks like being steady. In the same article the same men say:

"But we nevertheless opened easy, and after the first call the market looked rather weak, sales being made at 2 to 3 points decline. The further advance of 1/64d. at the close in Liverpool and the predictions of lighter receipts at our ports to-morrow imparted greater confidence and led to considerable buying, the market improving steadily as the day advanced, until January was sold as high as 8.20. From this we reacted, and sales were made as low as 8.12, but it improved again toward the close, the last sales being at 8.17 to 8.18."

Hubbard, Price & Co. report from New York October 15 as follows:

"Market unsettled and erratic."

Atwood, Violett & Co., New Orleans, November 26, say;

"There must have been very considerable excitement in Liverpool to-day, where the market opened 1/64d. to 1/64d. higher than yesterday and closed 1/64 lower."

A difference of seven sixty-fourths.

"Our cables say there was large dealing by longs."

Now I wish to read from the commercial article of the New York Herald on the 9th day of the present month:

"Cotton advanced 1 to 2 points, lost this and declined 5 to 6 points, recovered this and in some cases advanced 1 point over last night's prices, lost this and declined 10 to 11 points, recovered this and advanced 1 point, and then lost this and fell 18 to 19 points, this being the net decline for the day, closing barely steady, with sales of 352,300 bales."

The article goes on further to say:

"There were six movements of prices distinctly noticeable in to-day's fluctuations—first an advance, owing to an unexpected rise in Liverpool, then a decline on long selling and a fall in Liverpool, then a rally on light arrivals at a few interior towns, then a decline on an estimate that New Orleans would receive 15,000 bales to-morrow, and actual receipts at Baltimore to-day of 7,557 bales; then a rally owing to a reduction in the New Orleans estimated arrivals to-morrow to 10,000 bales, and then a final and precipitate decline, owing to unexpectedly large receipts at the ports and interior towns and an increase in interior stocks, as well as a report that the Hatch bill will come up in Congress."

Mr. President, with these facts before the Senate, I think the claim is not made out, and can not be made out, that we have any steadier market now than we had before; so that the alleged benefit of trading in futures is not made out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, this bill has been discussed for a long time, both at the last and at the present session. I think nearly all the speeches designed to be made have been made. I had hoped to get a vote upon the bill to-day, as it has dragged along for such a length of time, and I think it is in the interest of both the friends and opponents of the measure that we should have a vote upon it. With a view of meeting as far as possible the wishes of everybody, both the friends and foes of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, say at 2 o'clock, we shall take the vote on the bill and amendments, closing the debate. I believe that is a fair proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next at 2 o'clock a vote may be had on the bill and pending amendments, without further discussion. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. I shall have to object, Mr. President, until I can appeal to the Senator from Minnesota through the Chair. I hope the Senator will modify his proposition by making it Tuesday next at 2 o'clock, and I say that with no purpose of delay. To-morrow is set aside for the commemorative ceremonies on the late Senator Barbour. That only leaves Wednesday and Thursday. We shall probably adjourn over on Thursday evening.

I can see no obstacle in the world to prevent the Senator from granting sufficient time to enable two or three Senators who are absent and who desire to be heard on the bill, to have an opportunity of stating their views. They have expressed their intentions to me. One is the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who had his notes prepared and who doubtless would have been here had he thought the pending bill would be reached before 2 o'clock to-day. The Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is in the same category. It seems to me that every useful purpose will be subserved by a vote on Tuesday of next week, which will give ample time for all Senators to be heard, and there will then be no impediment in the way of the passage of the bill. We will agree in the meanwhile, when the pending bill is not under consideration, that any other business may be proceeded with. It is but just to Senators who are absent that this should be done.

Mr. WASHBURN. I think we certainly ought to have a vote this week, and that was the general expectation. I will not object if the Senator will name Friday of this week, which will give an opportunity to everybody who desires to speak. I know the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and other Senators desire to be heard on the bill, and that will give them almost an entire week. I think the Senator from Louisiana should not object to that.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the Senator that the agreement which I have suggested is for the purpose of expediting public business, that it has been made in perfect candor, and I believe it the wisest and safest agreement which can be made. If the Senator will propose that agreement no objection will be raised, and if Senators are not ready to proceed with the discussion other business may go on and the passage of the bill will not be delayed if the Senator has a majority for it. In view of the fact that certain Senators are absent, and in view of the fact that they stated to me their intention to speak on the bill, it seems to me the Senator will save time for his bill by accepting my proposition, and I have made it in no unfriendly spirit. The time will then be limited, and Senators who desire to be heard can be heard, or, if not, it will be their own oversight.

Mr. WASHBURN. Does the Senator prefer Tuesday to Monday?

Mr. WHITE. I do. That will make it an absolute certainty, and no Senator who is not here can then complain that he has not had an opportunity to state his objections to the bill. If the Senators to whom I have referred were here, I might not press the suggestion I have made, but as they are absent, I would not like any Senator who is absent to have ground to complain that I had entered into an agreement which deprived him of the opportunity to be heard on the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I inquire of the Chair if there is any special order which will interfere with the proposed arrangement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent would displace all pending orders.

Mr. WASHBURN. All right. To meet the wishes of the Senator from Louisiana, I will agree that on Tuesday next at 2 o'clock the vote may be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] modifies his request, which now is, that at 2 o'clock on Tuesday of next week the vote shall be had on the pending bill and amendments without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to make the agreement that the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] be taken at 1 o'clock, and then the vote on the bill not later than 2 o'clock. I wish to make a few remarks on the bill, but I do not wish to make them until after the amendments are voted on.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition as now modified is that at 1 o'clock on Tuesday next the vote be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and at 2 o'clock——

Mr. BERRY. Not later than 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That not later than 2 o'clock the vote shall be taken on the bill and the pending amendments without further debate. Is there objection to that proposition?

Mr. WASHBURN. And I will add that meanwhile the pending bill may be laid aside temporarily to consider other business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And meanwhile, if no Senator desires to discuss the pending measure, it may be laid aside temporarily for other business, without interfering with the unanimous consent agreement.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the order will be entered exactly in the words as stated by the Chair, that in the mean time if no Senator desires to be heard on the pending bill, other business may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order if unanimous consent is given. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. VILAS. Was it not part of the understanding that the vote on all the amendments should go over until the time which has been fixed?

Mr. WASHBURN. That was my understanding.

Mr. WHITE. The bill and all the amendments?

Mr. WASHBURN. The vote on the bill and all the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not suppose that the unanimous-consent agreement would interfere with any amendment to the bill which the Senate was ready to act upon, but that the agreement was that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi should be voted on on Tuesday of next week at 1 o'clock, and not later than 2 o'clock the bill and all the pending amendments should be voted on. The Chair did not understand that the agreement necessarily involved any pending amendment, but it is a matter of entire indifference to him.

Mr. WASHBURN. My understanding was that the vote should be taken on the bill and all the amendments at the time fixed, and meantime of course the discussion can proceed on the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. VILAS. I suggest that that be understood as part of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that statement will be understood as part of the agreement, and the vote will be postponed on the pending amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 2, 3, and 4 in the fourth section of the amendment proposed by Mr. GEORGE, in the words:

"Options" and "futures," as hereinbefore defined, are hereby declared to be obstructions to and restraints upon commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to be illegal and void; and.

So as to read:

SEC. 4. That if any person shall be a party, either as buyer or seller, to any contract or agreement hereinbefore defined as "options" or "futures," he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the pending bill (H. R. 7845) imposes heavy taxes upon any person entering into a contract binding the other party to buy certain merchandise from him, but not binding him to sell it, called "an option," and upon any person making a contract to buy or sell such merchandise which he does not own when the contract is made, called "a future."

The object of the bill is to discourage the business of dealing in options and futures, and if the taxes will do it, to prohibit such business, and to encourage merchandise contracts which are mutual, and dealings in merchandise which is owned by the dealers.

The amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the bill declares that the business of dealing in such options and futures is an obstacle to commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and it prohibits such business and punishes persons engaging therein. The bill and amendment only apply to persons dealing in options and futures in cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, and bacon.

The bill, I conceive, may be constitutionally enacted under clause 1 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution authorizing national taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, taken alone, or taken in connection with clause 3, authorizing national regulations of commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

The amendment, I conceive, may be constitutionally enacted under the power to regulate commerce.

From the foundation of the Government, duties on imported merchandise have been imposed for the purpose of discouraging the importation of foreign merchandise; and if the duties would do it, of prohibiting such importation and of encouraging trade in domestic products.

If the power to impose duties on imported merchandise in order to discourage and prohibit its importation and to protect home industries, is derived solely from the clause authorizing national taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, the same clause is sufficient to authorize taxes to discourage and prohibit options and futures, and to encourage legitimate transactions.

If the power to impose duties on imports, which are to be discouraging on the one side and protective on the other, is based partially on the clause authorizing the regulation of commerce, the power to impose discouraging and prohibitive taxes on the business of dealing in options and futures, and to build up legitimate trade, can also be sustained by the same clause. Importing and selling foreign merchandise is an act of commerce. Dealing in options and futures is an act of commerce. If in the regulation of commerce one of these acts may be taxed to discourage and prohibit it, so may the other.

Any distinction requiring the tax to be for revenue only in the latter case and not in the former is, in my judgment, fanciful, and has no real existence. If taxes or excises upon the subjects of commerce must be for revenue only, tariff duties must be for revenue only. The Constitution gives the same power in either case.

Mr. President, having thus briefly stated the views which lead me to a decision concerning the vote which I shall give upon this bill, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate by enlarging upon those views. I am prepared to vote to accomplish the result which is sought, which I admit is to discourage dealings in options and futures, in either form in which the proposition is presented.

I am ready to vote for the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and if my own judgment were to govern I should do that which it is sought to accomplish, by the direct method proposed by that Senator rather than by heavily taxing dealings in options and futures with the object of discouraging them, and, if taxes will do it, of prohibiting them. But I believe that power to do that which is sought to be done constitutionally exists as to each of the methods which is now proposed.

Mr. President, I have been voting for this bill in its various stages principally because the farmers of the country desire the result which the bill purports to accomplish. I had not given the constitutional questions which had been debated very close attention, and I certainly should not have thought it worth while to submit my views to the Senate had it not been that the bill has been challenged by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on constitutional grounds, and the Senate urged not to pass it because it is a violation of the Constitution. Since they have made this challenge I have been led to give such consideration as I could to the constitutional questions involved, and have reached the result which I have indicated. My conclusions are satisfactory to my own mind, and I can vote for the bill without, in my belief, justly subjecting myself to the anathemas which have been hurled at the supporters of the bill by the Senators to whom I have alluded.

It is true that I have not thought that the bill would certainly accomplish the objects which the farmers of the country seek. I am afraid that the bill, if it becomes a law, will prove delusive. I fear that it will be difficult to draw the line between contracts which ought to be discouraged, and if possible prohibited, and those contracts which farmers wish to make, which they ought to be allowed to make, and which ought not to be either discouraged or prohibited. Nevertheless upon the judgment of those better informed than myself I advocate the passage of the bill in one or the other of the forms in which it is proposed, and I believe that in either form it is constitutional.

I am unable to distinguish between a high tariff duty on an article of imported merchandise imposed in order to discourage its importation and its use, and if possible to prevent its importation and its use, and a high tax or an excise imposed upon a business or an article anywhere within the country for the purpose of discouraging or, if the tax or excise imposed will do it, of prohibiting the exercise of that business and the use of that article of merchandise.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a list of five suggested taxes to which I ask the attention of the Senate, to which I would ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] if he were here, and to which I think I will ask the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], if he will do me the honor to listen to me as attentively as I listened to him while endeavoring to learn from him the constitutional point which he urged and the constitutional distinction which he laid down.

If laid for the purposes of revenue only I think it must be admitted that the following taxes, duties, imposts or excises would be constitutional:

First, a duty on imported whisky, wheat, cotton or tobacco;

Second, a tax on persons engaged in the business of importing whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco.

Third, a tax on all whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco produced in this country.

Fourth, a tax on all persons engaged in the business of making contracts to buy and sell whisky, wheat, cotton or tobacco not in their possession at the time of the contracts.

Fifth, a tax on all persons engaged in the business of making contracts to buy and sell whisky, wheat, cotton or tobacco in their possession at the time of making the contracts.

For the purposes of a tariff for revenue only, I think it must be admitted that every one of those five taxes can be constitutionally enacted. The question, then, further is, can those taxes, any or all of them, be enacted for another and different purpose? Can those taxes, any or all of them, be enacted for the purpose of discouraging the use of the articles taxed or of the business of dealing in the articles named? Can there be any other additional motive than the motive of obtaining revenue? That is the question which I ask. If there can be a further motive than that of obtaining revenue, can that motive exist as to any of those five taxes and not exist as to all of them?

First, as to a duty on imported whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco, I suppose no protectionist doubts that a tariff for the purpose of discouraging importations of those articles may be imposed, and that the legislators may properly have in mind the purpose (if the duties will do it) of wholly excluding those articles of merchandise, whisky, wheat, cotton, and tobacco from being imported into the country.

Secondly, as to a tax on persons engaged in the business of importing whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco, does anyone doubt that under section 8, Article I, of the Constitution a tax can be imposed upon persons who engage in the importing business in our great cities? Can there be a tax of $1,000 upon everybody engaged in the business of importing foreign merchandise into the United States, and can there, in addition, be a specific tax upon the articles which shall be the subjects of the contracts which the importing merchants make? I take it there is no doubt about the propriety of such a tax.

If we impose such a tax upon persons engaged in the business of importing foreign merchandise, it is a constitutional requirement that we shall make the tax uniform throughout the United States. We must impose the tax upon all persons engaged in importing the specified merchandise if we impose it upon any persons engaged in that business. But that we can impose such a tax upon all imports there can be no doubt, and that we can impose it with the motive and for the purpose of discouraging the persons taxed from engaging in importing foreign commodities and to promote the use of home products there can be, I think, no reasonable doubt.

Third, as to a tax on all whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco produced in this country, there can be no doubt about our right to impose such a tax. I should like to have any Senator demonstrate that when we impose a tax on whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco produced in this country, we must confine ourselves to the motive of securing revenue for carrying on the Government. We may tax one of these articles and not tax any other. We do put a high tax upon whisky, 100 or 200 per cent, and we put no tax upon wheat or upon cotton.

We have put a tax, which at times has been a high tax, upon tobacco; and yet we have not put a tax upon wheat and cotton. Yet I have never heard anyone deny that we could put a high tax upon whisky and upon tobacco, and could do it not merely for the purpose of raising revenue, but also for the purpose of discouraging the use of those commodities.

Fourth, a tax on all persons engaged in the business of making contracts to buy and sell whisky, wheat, cotton, or tobacco not in their possession at the time of the contracts. Has the Senator from Connecticut succeeded in showing that if you undertake to impose this tax 4 upon my list you must be governed solely by the motive of raising revenue, when you may impose a tax upon a person engaged in importing merchandise into the city of New York for the purpose of discouraging him with that business and of inducing him to leave it and to go into some other business? This tax No. 4, which I have supposed is a peculiar tax. It is a tax upon persons who are engaged in dealing in these articles of merchandise who do not possess them at the time they make the contracts.

When the Senator says that, in imposing a tax of that sort upon persons engaged in such a business, we do an unconstitutional act and commit a violation of the oaths of office which we have taken to legislate in accordance with and not against the Constitution, if we have any other motive than that of raising revenue, I maintain that either the Senator is mistaken in his position or else he is mistaken when he stands up and defends the imposition of heavy tariff duties upon imported merchandise and high taxes upon persons engaged in the business of importation for the purpose of discouraging foreign imports and protecting home industries.

So with the fifth tax, one upon all persons engaged in the business of making contracts to buy and sell whisky, wheat, cotton or tobacco, which was in their possession at the time of the contracts. I do not see, it has not been shown to me, that although you may impose a high tariff duty upon the importation of these articles for the purpose of discouraging their importation, so even as to wholly prevent their introduction into the country and for the purpose of building up the home production of such articles, yet you may not impose taxes and excises upon the same articles with a similar motive and for a similar purpose.

The proposition I make is, that if you may impose taxes upon merchandise imported for the purpose of discouraging the importation you may do the same thing as to merchandise which is not imported. If you may do it as to importers, you may do it as to domestic dealers.

The same clause, section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, authorizes tariff duties and internal taxes:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Where do we find the right to tax internal products? Do we not find it in that clause and in no other? Where do we find the right to impose duties on imports? Do we find it in any other clause? The Senator from Connecticut says yes. The inquiry made by the Senator was, do not Senators understand that the power to impose protective tariff duties is not based upon the first clause of section 8 alone, but is also based upon the clause giving power to regulate commerce with foreign nations? If I misunderstood the Senator I beg that he will correct me.

Mr. PLATT. I did not say that it was not based alone on the clause which permits Congress to lay duties. I said it was based on both or existed under either.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to understand distinctly what the constitutional position of the Senator from Connecticut is, and also that of the Senator from Massachusetts, with reference to the system of protection, of which we all three are advocates.

I understand the Senator to state that I was not mistaken in saying that he bases the power to levy protective duties upon the clause authorizing Congress to impose duties, taxes, imposts, and excises, and also upon the clause giving power to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations. But the clause authorizing Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations also says that Congress may regulate commerce among the several States, and if the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations may be appealed to for the purpose of levying protective duties upon foreign merchandise, may not the clause authorizing Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States be appealed to to justify the imposition of an internal tax or an excise for the purpose of discouraging the use of a domestic article or the engaging in a domestic business?

Where is the distinction, Mr. President? I have studied the subject conscientiously since the Senator from Massachusetts made his very ingenious argument. I studied it with an entire willingness to perceive the constitutional distinction which he undertook to establish, and I must confess I utterly failed to discover it.

When I further considered the argument of the Senator from Connecticut, who now does me the honor to listen to me, and who I know is faithful in his investigations and honest in his conclusions, both upon constitutional questions and all other questions of legislation, I found myself utterly unable to discover how he could denounce as usurpatory and as a violation of the Constitution the imposition of tax upon an article of internal commerce or upon the business of conducting internal commerce unless done only for the purpose of raising revenue and yet continue to maintain that when we impose tariff duties upon any article we are at liberty to impose them for the purpose of discouraging the foreign product and compelling the use of the domestic product

The Senator from Connecticut is a high tariff advocate. The Senator, while saying that we must have no other motive or object in taxing dealers in options and futures, except to derive revenue for carrying on the Government, still contends in the Senate that we have the right to tax by import duties articles of foreign manufacture almost if not quite to extinction in order that we may protect the industries of his own State.

Mr. President, I have in my hand the report of our imports and exports up to last June under the operation of the McKinley act. I find upon page 99 of the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics that there is a duty on rice of 2 cents a pound, which is a duty of 95.54 per cent ad valorem upon the value. I ask Senators why is that duty imposed? Is it a revenue duty or is it a protective duty?

What was the motive of Senators when they voted to impose that duty? Was it entirely to secure revenue to carry on the Government of the United States? Not at all. The motive was protection—protection to home industries, the discouragement of foreign rice, the building up of the rice product of South Carolina and Louisiana, and making the production of rice profitable to the people of those States.

I find on page 116 that the protective duties on woolens of various kinds are very large. We have imposed a tax upon bunting of 10 cents per square yard and 35 per cent ad valorem, and that duty has extinguished the importation of bunting. At one time all the bunting used in this country was imported. Now there is none imported, and the business of importation has been extinguished because we have imposed this high protective duty and because the national legislators, when they passed the bill fixing a duty upon bunting, intended to destroy the importation of foreign bunting and to give to the bunting manufacturers of the United States a monopoly of the business of producing bunting.

I find various high duties in the woolen schedule—59 per cent, 80 per cent, 84 per cent, 61 per cent, 69 per cent, 76 per cent, 64 per cent, 74 per cent, 64 per cent. On woolen or worsted cloths valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, 162 per cent; valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound, 141 per cent; valued at above 40 cents per pound, 97 per cent; and so on, in the woolen schedule, 92 per cent, 89 per cent, 93 per cent, 84 per cent, 105 per cent, 98 per cent, 91 per cent, 107 per cent, 98 per cent, 102 per cent, and 93 per cent. For what purpose were these high duties imposed?

I come now to hats of wool. Hats of wool valued at more than 40 and not more than 50 cents per pound, 105 per cent.

I ask the Senator from Connecticut why a duty of 105 per cent was imposed upon hats? I also find that on knit fabrics valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound the import duty is 138 per cent. On shawls valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound, 138.63 per cent.

All other manufactures of wool or worsted valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, 164 per cent; valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound, 149 per cent.

So all through this tariff schedule these high duties have been imposed, and they were imposed for the purpose of discouraging the use of foreign manufactures and of encouraging home manufactures.

Senators upon this side of the Chamber have almost without exception declared themselves in favor of this kind of legislation as absolutely and entirely constitutional; and yet Senators having this faith in the protective system compel themselves to now say upon this bill that, although we may be actuated by such motives in the levying of tariff duties, yet if we are influenced by the same motives in imposing a duty upon the subjects of domestic commerce only or upon the business of conducting domestic commerce, we are violating the Constitution. If down in our hearts anywhere we discover any motive for passing this bill except that of taxation for revenue only we are guilty of usurpation.

Mr. President, I do not so read the Constitution. I have seen in this Chamber innumerable taxes imposed which were not laid with the sole motive of raising revenue. I have been conscious of the existence in the minds of members of this body of many motives when voting taxes, duties, imposts, and excises other than the motive of obtaining money for the support of the Government, and I have supposed that these were legitimate motives and purposes which might be honestly and honorably entertained by Senators. But we are told the contrary by opponents of this bill.

Mr. President, where do we find the power to expend money for education within the States? Where is the constitutional power to give seventy-five or one hundred million dollars from the Treasury of the United States for education within the States? Point out the constitutional clause. Senators may tell me it is done under the power of appropriation; that when we have money in the Treasury we can expend it for the general welfare.

If we can expend money for purposes of education in the States of the Union without an express authority in the Constitution for doing so, and the Treasury is emptied by this process of assisting in education in the States, can we not impose taxes for the purpose of replenishing the Treasury? If we can empty the Treasury to-day into those States of the Union where there is gross illiteracy for the purpose of removing that illiteracy and promoting education and high development, can we not to-morrow impose duties upon imports or internal revenue taxes for the purpose of filling the Treasury so that we may expend more money for education within the States?

Mr. President, no Senator who has voted to expend seventy-five or one hundred million dollars of the Government money for education in the States ought to oppose a bill which is designed to discourage the dealing in options and futures.

Where do we find the constitutional authority for paying bounties on sugar? I should like to have some Senator point out to me in the Constitution the authority for taking money from the Treasury and paying it for bounties on sugar. Yet we do it. If we can pay out money from the Treasury for bounties on sugar we can impose a tax to raise money to put into the Treasury in order that we may be enabled to pay bounties on sugar. Will any Senator draw a distinction between paying out for bounties for sugar or for educating the people money which we find in the Treasury and imposing taxes for the purpose of raising money by taxation to pay out as bounties on sugar and for educating the people?

Mr. President, I know of no such distinction. But I am not certain that the constitutional lawyers who have discovered that we may impose a tariff duty for a purpose for which we can not impose an excise duty will assert the distinction that while we can pay out money, if we find it in the Treasury, for either bounties on sugar or for education, yet we can not replenish the Treasury which we have exhausted by imposing new duties and new taxes in order to fill it up again.

Such constitutional distinctions, I believe, are too fine for common comprehension or for a basis for standing up in the Senate and fighting to protect the system of protective duties which is now upon the statute books and at the same time opposing the imposition of internal duties and taxes and excises unless they are imposed for the purposes of revenue only.

I believe, Mr. President, in the American system of protection. I believe in a liberal construction of the Constitution to promote the general welfare. I do not however believe that under the general-welfare clause we can pass any act of Congress which is not absolutely forbidden by the Constitution; but I do contend, as Senators of my political faith have always contended, for a liberal construction of the Constitution. It has been by a liberal construction of the Constitution that during the whole existence of this Government duties for the protection of home industries have been maintained upon the statute books of the country.

More than one hundred years after the foundation of the Government a great political party, in the year 1892, challenged the verdict of the American people upon the proposition that tariff duties can only be imposed for the purpose of raising revenue, and that any measure or motive of protection whatever in a tariff act is contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The political party which advocated these propositions declared the McKinley act to be a monstrosity of class legislation.

Mr. PLATT. "The culminating atrocity of class legislation."

Mr. CHANDLER. "The culminating atrocity of class legislation." That was an issue which was involved in the political canvass of last year, and the Senators on the other side of the Chamber will enter the next Congress with a pledge given to the people in the last canvass that they will wipe out this "culminating atrocity of class legislation," and that thenceforward and forever, as long as their party controls the Government, tariff duties shall be levied for revenue only.

Upon this side of the Chamber will be arrayed the members of the opposite party, who will contend, as they have always contended, that duties on imports may be raised as they have been raised from the foundation of the Government, not merely for purposes of revenue, but also for the purpose of discouraging the business of the importation of foreign merchandise, and for the purpose of encouraging and building up home industries and the protection of American manufacturers and American workingmen.

That, Mr. President, will be our contention, and we shall find it very difficult to meet the argument which will be based upon the assertion which has been made here by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Connecticut that internal taxes upon merchandise within the country can not be imposed for any other purpose than that of raising revenue to fill the Treasury.

The Senators will be asked to point out the distinction, and, in my humble judgment, they will be unable to point out the distinction between such taxes and tariff duties that will be a satisfactory answer to the Senators on the other side when they undertake the business in the next Congress of the destruction of the American tariff system which has prevailed for one hundred years, but which they are bound to destroy if they are true to the platform upon which they won their Presidential victory.

Mr. President, while parting company upon this question with the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Connecticut, I am glad to take my stand by the side of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. While I see these distinguished apostles of protection engaged in framing an argument which will be used for the destruction of the system of protection in the next Congress, I have discovered an ally in the work of an enlarged and liberal construction of the Constitution of the United States in the Senator from Mississippi, and I place myself unhesitatingly upon his ground.

I accept his argument in its entirety. I believe it is a sound, constitutional argument with no flaw in it. I do not believe either the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] or the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] will be able to make a demonstration which will make any indentation in the armor with which the Senator from Mississippi has surrounded himself when he has planted himself impregnably upon that clause in the Constitution which gives to Congress the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Senators undertake to say that you can not declare dealings in options and futures to be obstructions to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, because if they are such obstructions they are also obstructions to domestic commerce. What of that, Mr. President? That is only one incident of the obstruction. If in order that our enormous foreign commerce may be carried on, if in order that our immense interstate commerce may be carried on, it is necessary for us to remove a bridge and it is constitutioual to do this, it does not matter that we thereby remove a bridge which is also an obstruction to domestic commerce?

It seems to me that this is an answer to the Senators who undertake to say that because a particular act of Congress may affect domestic commerce therefore it is unconstitutional. It may affect domestic commerce, but no matter if it does, if it is in the judgment of the Congress of the United States necessary to pass that act in order to regulate commerce with foreign nations or among the several States, then the act is as constitutional as any act which can be devised, and its incidental effect upon commerce within the States is not the slightest argument against its constitutionality.

As the Senator from Mississippi has shown, we have enacted that railroads engaged in interstate commerce shall not pool their net earnings, we having determined that the prohibition is necessary for the regulation of commerce between the States. Does it make the act unconstitutional to demonstrate that when you prevent railroads from pooling their net earnings in interstate commerce you also prevent them from pooling their earnings derived solely from commerce within the States?

By no means, Mr. President. The greater includes the less, and the less goes down with the greater. When this Government of ours, acting through the Senate and House of Representatives under the powers given by the Constitution enacts a law, the State, which is less than the National Government, goes down before that law. Whether the law concerns the regulation of trade, whether the law concerns quarantine regulations to keep out disease, or whatever the imaginable purpose and object of the exercise of the national power may be, the State power goes down before it and the national power is supreme.

Mr. President, I think there is no mistake about this argument. I come back again to the case of a bridge. Congress may remove a bridge which passes over a navigable river, although the bridge is solely within one State. I suppose that is conceded. Why does Congress remove a bridge which is erected over a navigable river? It removes it because it will obstruct the water commerce which has the right to pass through that river. Now, when Congress exercises its power of removing a bridge because it is an obstruction to commerce between the States, it is absurd to complain that it also removes a bridge which is an obstruction to domestic commerce within the State where the river runs.

When Congress determines that a bridge in a State is necessary to commerce that passes over the river, notwithstanding the commerce that passes up and down the river, or when Congress decides that the bridge shall be taken down because it is too much of an obstruction to commerce passing up and down the river, in either case the power is exercised by Congress under its power to regulate commerce, and its law is supreme, notwithstanding the incidental and additional effect which that law has upon domestic commerce in the State either passing across or up and down the river.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. I can not afford to lose the opportunity when I find unjustifiable limitations being put upon the constitutional power of Congress by Senators upon this side of the Chamber to attest my gratitude for the advocacy of an enlarged and liberal construction of the Constitution upon the other side of the Senate.

When we come to discuss in the next Congress the question of the constitutionality of tariff laws for the protection of home industries, if the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Connecticut adhere to their doctrine that internal taxation must be for revenue only, I shall expect to see the Senator from Mississippi rise in his place and make as grand a vindication of the power of Congress, under section 8 of Article I of the Constitution to enact protective duties, as he has already made of the power of Congress in regulating commerce to remove every obstruction to that commerce, whether it be a tangible obstruction like a bridge or a vicious and demoralizing and dishonest system of options and futures.

Mr. President, the State of Massachusetts and the State of Connecticut are vitally interested in the American protective tariff system. So is the State of New Hampshire. If that system of protective laws which is now upon the statute book shall be struck down and a system of revenue duties inaugurated the prosperity of New Hampshire is at an end. If the great castle of protection to American industries which we have builded during the last hundred years, which is of so great importance to Massachusetts, and to Connecticut, and to New Hampshire, is to be broken down, and if the Senators from Massachusetts and from Connecticut are to help furnish the engines of warfare which are to batter it to its downfall, New Hampshire will take no part in that destruction. New Hampshire believes in a construction of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution which authorizes tariff duties for the protection of home industries and the discouragement of foreign importations. New Hampshire also believes, when her farmers desire it, that under the taxing power, or under the power to regulate commerce (or under both powers, if you please, for both are quoted by the Senators as the justification of protective duties), it is within the just province of Congress to establish internal taxes or excises which will discourage and prohibit dealings in options and futures, or to pass direct laws which will, by positive and unequivocal denunciation make such dealings hereafter forever impossible.

Mr. PLATT. If no other Senator wishes to speak on the antioption bill this afternoon, I ask that it be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, to make appropriation for carrying out the same, and for other purposes, which is on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT. If there is any one who desires to continue the debate on the antioption bill, of course I will not ask that it be laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

CHEROKEE INDIAN LANDS.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, to make appropriation for carrying out the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to have action on the House bill. A bill for the same purpose has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I shall move, after the bill from the other House has been read, to substitute for it by way of amendment the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. The bill from the House had better be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read the preamble and the first section.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it be in order now to submit amendments, or what is the purpose of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT. I desire to have the House bill read through.

Mr. BUTLER. Before any modification is proposed?

Mr. PLATT. Then I should wish, on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and substitute the bill which has been reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut, if the provisions of the Senate bill are similar to the House bill. I have not read the Senate bill for some time. I understand that that bill makes an appropriation of $8,000,000 in accordance with the terms of the agreement.

Mr. PLATT. It ratifies the agreement.

Mr. BUTLER. And makes an appropriation of $8,000,000.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether it makes the appropriation, but it ratifies the agreement in full, and the agreement calls for the payment of that sum. I had supposed, however, that the appropriation would be made in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The House provision is clearly unjust and wrong, it seems to me.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest to the Senator that he wait until the bill is read through.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to substitute therefor what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The proposed substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the agreement recited, accepted, ratified, and confirmed on behalf of the Cherokee Nation in the said act of the national council of that nation be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed, subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the acts of Congress that have been or may be passed regulating trade and intercourse with the Indians, subject however to amendments of said agreement, as follows: Add to the first paragraph of article 2 of said agreement the following proviso: And provided further, That before any intruder or unauthorized person occupying houses, lands, or improvements, commenced before the 11th day of August, A. D. 1886, shall be removed therefrom, upon demand of the principal chief or otherwise, the value of his improvements as the same shall be appraised by a board of three appraisers, to be appointed by the President of the United States, one of the same upon the recommendation of the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation for that purpose, shall be paid to him by the Cherokee Nation; and upon such payment such improvements shall become the property of the Cherokee Nation.

Strike out paragraph 3 of article 2 of said agreement, and change the number of the subsequent paragraphs to correspond.

SEC. 2. That to pay for the services of the appraisers, to be appointed as provided in the first paragraph of article 2 of the amended agreement, at a rate not exceeding $10 per day for the time actually employed by each appraiser and their reasonable expenses, and to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to effect the removal of intruders from within the territory of the Cherokee Nation, as required by the first paragraph of article 2 of said agreement, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to employ such expert person or persons and assistants as may be necessary to properly render a complete account to the Cherokee Nation of moneys due said nation, as required in the fourth subdivision of article 2 of said agreement, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of making the compensation provided for in said agreement the sum of $8,595,736.12 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid in the manner provided for in article 2 of said agreement.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized, as soon after the approval of this act as he may deem advisable, by proclamation, to open said lands to settlement as provided in section 14 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes" (25 United States Statutes, page 1005); and also subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 2, 1890, entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; also subject to the second proviso of section 17, the whole of sections 18, 37, and 38 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes:" Provided, That sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and the east half of sections 17, 20, and 29, all in township numbered 29 north, of range numbered 2 east of the Indian meridan, the same being lands reserved by Executive order dated July 12, 1884, for use of and in connection with the Chilocco Indian industrial school, in the Indian Territory, shall not be subject to public settlement, but shall continue to be reserved for the purposes for which they were set apart in the said Executive order: Provided, however, That each settler on said lands, under and in accordance with the provisions of the homestead laws, shall, before receiving patent for his homestead, pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $1.50 per acre: Provided also, That the President may, in his said proclamation, or by Executive order, reserve such lands within the limits of said cession as in his opinion are required for public purposes, and the lands, while so reserved, shall not be subject to settlement or entry under any of the laws of the United States: And provided also, That until said lands are opened for settlement by proclamation of the President no person shall be permitted to enter upon and occupy the same, and no person violating this provision shall be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any right thereto.

SEC. 6. That the consent of the United States is hereby given to the allotment of lands in severalty within the limits of the country occupied by the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles; and upon such allotments the individuals to whom the same may be allotted shall be deemed to be in all respects citizens of the United States. And the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay for the survey of any such lands as may be allotted by any of said tribes of Indians to individual members of said tribes; and upon the allotment of the lands held by said tribes respectively the reversionary interest of the United States therein shall be relinquished and shall cease.

Mr. BERRY. I offer as an amendment to the bill what I send to the desk. The sections may be properly numbered by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following:

SEC. —. That the President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three commissioners to enter into negotiations with the Cherokee Nation, the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw Nation, the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, the Seminole Nation, and all other Indian tribes and bands now owning lands or residing upon lands within the Indian Territory, for the purpose of the extinguishment of the national or tribal title to any lands within that Territory now held by any and all of such nations or tribes, either by cession of the same or some part thereof to the United States, or by the allotment and division of the same in severalty among the Indians of such nations or tribes, respectively, as may be entitled to the same, or by such other method as may be agreed upon between the several nations and tribes aforesaid, or each of them, with the United States, with a view to such an adjustment, upon the basis of justice and equity, as may, with the consent of such nations or tribes or Indians, so far as may be necessary, be requisite and suitable to enable the ultimate creation of a State or States of the Union which shall embrace the lands within said Indian Territory.

SEC. —. That the commissioners so appointed shall each receive a salary, to be paid during such time as they may be actually employed, under direction of the President, in the duties enjoined by this act, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and shall also be paid their reasonable and proper expenses incurred in prosecution of the objects of this act upon accounts therefor to be rendered to and allowed by the Secretary of the Interior from time to time. That such commissioners shall have power to employ a secretary, a stenographer, and such interpreter or interpreters as may be found necessary to the performance of their duties, and by order to fix their compensation, which shall be paid, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from time to time, with their reasonable and necessary expenses, upon accounts to be rendered as aforesaid; and may also employ, in like manner and with the like approval, a surveyor or other assistant or agent, which they shall certify in writing to be necessary to the performance of any part of their duties.

SEC. —. That such commissioners shall, under such regulations and directions as shall be prescribed by the President, through the Secretary of the Interior, enter upon negotiations with the several nations, tribes, and bands of Indians in the Indian Territory, and shall endeavor to procure, first, such allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians belonging to each such nation, tribe, or band, respectively, as may be agreed upon as just and proper to provide for each such Indian a sufficient quantity of land for his or her needs, in such equal distribution and apportionment as may be found just and suited to the circumstances; for which purpose, after the terms of such an agreement shall have been arrived at, the said commissioners shall cause the lands of any such nation or tribe or band to be surveyed and the proper allotment to be designated; and, secondly, to procure the cession, for such price and upon such terms as shall be agreed upon, of any lands not found necessary to be so allotted or divided, to the United States; and to make proper agreements for the investment or holding by the United States of such moneys as may be paid or agreed to be paid to such nations or tribes or bands, or to any of the Indians thereof, for the extinguishment of their rights therein. But said commissioners shall, however, have power to negotiate any and all such agreements as, in view of all the circumstances affecting the subject, shall be found requisite and suitable to such an arrangement of the rights and interests and affairs of such nations, tribes, bands, or Indians, or any of them, to enable the ultimate creation of a Territory of the United States with a view to the admission of the same as a State in the Union.

SEC. —. That the commissioners shall at any time or from time to time report to the Secretary of the Interior their transactions and the progress of their negotiations, and shall at any time or from time to time, if separate agreements shall be made by them with any nation, tribe, or band, in pursuance of the authority hereby conferred, report the same to the Secretary of the Interior for submission to Congress for its consideration and ratification.

SEC. —. That for the purposes aforesaid there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available.

SEC. —. That neither the passage of this act nor the negotiations or agreements which may be had or made thereunder shall be held in any way to waive or impair any right of sovereignty which the Government of the United States has over or respecting said Indian Territory, or the people thereof, or any other right of the Government relating to said Territory, its lands, or the people thereof.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. I have no authority to accept it on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I do not know that it would be objectionable to any member of that committee. Indeed the amendment is a bill which has been reported by that committee favorably. The only question about it is whether it should be added to a bill for the opening of the Cherokee Outlet. It is not directly connected with it, though in a remote and indirect way it is connected with it. Perhaps it is the surest way of getting any legislation of the kind contemplated by the bill which is proposed as an amendment. I do not think there is any objection to the amendment on the part of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs so far as I know.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that the tendency has been for several years past to make such commissions nonpartisan in their character, or as nearly so as possible. The present Cherokee Commission, for instance, was appointed under a law which provided that no more than two of them should be members of the same political organization. I suggest that as an amendment to the Senator's amendment, and with that addition I certainly shall have no objection to it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, as I introduced the bill originally, which I have now offered as an amendment to the pending measure, it contained that provision. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that provision was stricken out by the committee. I have no kind of objection to such a provision being now inserted, and I have no doubt that any President would divide the commissioners in the way the Senator has suggested. Some members of the committee, however, thought it was not proper to have such a provision in the bill, and it was taken out by the committee, of which I think the Senator from Kansas is a member. As I have said, I have no objection whatever to the provision, but I do not think it material.

Mr. PLATT. When the bill now offered by the Senator from Arkansas as an amendment to the pending substitute was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I think a provision that the commission should be nonpartisan was stricken out on my suggestion. I thought I could afford to make the suggestion, because the commission would be undoubtedly appointed by a President of a different political party from that to which I belong.

I have always felt with regard to such commissions and with regard to appointments by the President generally that we should not insert in bills provisions of the kind referred to, and I thought when another President was coming into office I could say, and say with very great emphasis, that I was quite willing to trust him. I do not believe that President Cleveland would make a partisan commission. If he should do so I should be quite willing to assent to it. So far as I am concerned I do not wish to provide that any Republican shall necessarily go on that commission.

I think we might as well commence now to discountenance the practice which has sprung up here, whenever any little or large commission is to be appointed, of providing that there shall be upon it members of different political organizations. I am sure we can trust the President of the United States not to make a partisan commission at any time.

Mr. PERKINS. Just a word in reply. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment, particularly as explained by the Senator from Connecticut, yet I remember the fact that the practice of Congress has been as I have suggested, to make by law these commissions nonpartisan in their character so far as possible. The present Cherokee Commission, which has been an active and useful commission, and which has accomplished much work, was appointed under a statute which provided that no more than two of its members should be members of the same political organization.

This bill as it comes to us from the House of Representatives has a provision for the appointment of a commission, and the language of the bill is that "no more than two of the commissioners shall be members of the same political organization." So it has been from time to time the judgment of Congress that in providing for these commissions they should be as nearly nonpartisan as they could be constituted, not more than two members representing one political organization. Of course, if it is the sense of this body that there had better be no limitation in the matter, I do not know that I have any objection, yet I presume that Mr. Cleveland would do as other Presidents have done, try to take care of his friends.

Mr. PLATT. I am perfectly satisfied for my part to leave the appointment of a commission of this kind to President Cleveland. I believe that his desire to serve the best interests of the country would rise superior to any desire to take care of his friends.

Mr. PERKINS. The same may be said of every President.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], as it only contemplates negotiation with these Indians looking, as I understand, to extending the laws of the United States over their Territory; but I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas and to the Senator from Connecticut, in charge of the bill, is there not some danger of jeopardizing the passage of the bill ratifying this agreement by attaching to it an amendment like this? I see in the agreement found in the last paragraph of the proviso to the sixth section this language:

> It is expressly understood that this agreement ceding and relinquishing the title to the lands herein described shall not be effective for any purpose whatever until it shall in its entirety be ratified by Congress, and the amount of money herein agreed to be paid to the Cherokee Nation for such cession and relinquishment shall have been appropriated by Congress and placed in the Treasury of the United States, subject to the order of the Cherokee national council: Provided further, That nothing contained in this agreement shall have the effect to limit or impair any rights whatever the Cherokee Nation has in or to or over the lands herein ceded until it shall be so ratified by Congress.

I submit that this amendment does not appear to be germane, so far as I have been able to understand it from a hurried reading at the desk, to the question which the Senate has under consideration. I have no objection particularly to a commission of that kind being appointed for the purpose of seeing if they can negotiate with these Indians on the line suggested in the amendment.

In regard to the political complexion of the board of commissioners, I entirely agree with the Senator from Connecticut. I do not think it a matter of very much consequence, yet I believe it has been the custom of Congress to provide that the two political parties shall be represented on such commissions.

I rose, however, more especially for the purpose of calling attention to two sections of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, which, I must say, without meaning to be disrespectful to anybody, are not exactly honest. The bill as it comes from the House does not carry out the terms of the agreement at all; it simply proposes in its fourth section that—

> The United States, in consideration of the cession of said land, as specified in said agreement, will appropriate and pay to the Cherokee Nation the said sum of money, viz, $8,595,736.12, within six years after the said nation shall ratify said amendment to said agreement, and will pay to the Cherokee Nation interest on said money, or any part thereof at any time remaining unpaid, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from and after the said Cherokee Nation shall agree to and ratify said amendment and until the said sum shall be paid.

There is no appropriation of money in that bill.

Mr. PLATT. Not even for the interest.

Mr. BUTLER. Not even for the interest. I submit in common fairness and in common honesty to and fair dealing with these people that that is not right and proper.

These negotiations have been pending for years. Month after month and year after year has been exhausted in attempting to arrange with the Cherokees for the cession of their outlet to the United States Government in order that it may be thrown open for settlement. They have agreed to take the price of $1.40 an acre, which, in my judgment, is very much under its value. They have been offered a very much larger sum than that, but, I suppose, in order to settle the controversies which have arisen, they have agreed to take $1.40 an acre, which amounts to over $8,000,000. Now comes Congress and says we will not make the appropriation, but we will agree to make the appropriation to pay for these lands, taking them from the Indians, destroying their title to them simply upon an agreement to pay them the money.

I submit that is not right, that it is not in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and that it is not in accordance with the terms of common honesty and fair dealing between this Government and anybody. I trust if this bill shall go to conference that the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist that the appropriation shall now be made, and if made payable in installments in five years at 5 per cent interest, I think, perhaps, that would be fair; but the idea of undertaking to get possession of the lands of these people and making no provision for paying them in the law ratifying the agreement is, in my judgment, not honest. I find in the bill reported by the Senate committee an appropriation is made of eight million and odd dollars for the purpose of paying for this outlet, which I think is proper and right.

There is, however, a provision in the amendment submitted by the Committee on Indian Affairs which I think is objectionable, which provides that before the intruders in that country shall be ejected from the territory of the Indians they shall be paid for their improvements. I must submit that I do not know under what principle of law or equity that can be required of the Indians. In an action of ejectment by one person against another, who is a bald and naked trespasser upon his land, if the plaintiff succeed, I have never yet known of any principle of law which would require that plaintiff to compensate the intruder for improvements which he made upon the plaintiff's land, and yet that is exactly what we are asked by these Indians to do.

I understand that it will perhaps require about $250,000 to pay for improvements of the people who are confessed to be intruders, who have gone upon the lands of the Cherokees and of the Indians without even the color of title; and yet before we ratify the agreement to pay them for the land we say to them, "You must compensate these intruders who have gone upon your lands and made improvements before they can be expelled by the United States Government in pursuance of the provisions of the treaties made from time to time between the United States Government and the Indians themselves."

Mr. President, the intruders in that Territory have had the use, benefit, and enjoyment of the improvements and the lands. There is not a provision here even that they shall be required to account for rents and profits to the Cherokees; but the Cherokees, before these intruders can be expelled, must pay for improvements which the intruders have made at their own risk. I submit to the Senator from Connecticut, who I know is always fair and desires to be just and honest in dealing with these people, if there is any equity, or law, or justice in such a provision as that? At the proper time I shall move to strike out that clause.

Mr. MILLS. Out of whose pocket is the $250,000 to come.

Mr. BUTLER. It is to come out of the pockets of the Cherokee Indians.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not know how much of explanation the Senate desires me to make, either upon the question of the removal of the intruders from the home country of the Cherokees or upon the general features of the bill for the opening of the Cherokee Outlet. I think I shall say just this about it: That the question of opening this land to settlement is of very great importance. It contains, I think, over 8,000,000 acres which are to be opened for settlement. The question of what title they had to this land, or whether they had any, has been a long time in contest between the Cherokee Indians and the United States; and it has been the occasion of raids of white people upon it for settlement and their being excluded therefrom by the Army by order of the President. Senators will remember the "Couch boomers," as they were called, who settled along the upper line of this tract and finally moved in. Payne was one of the leaders. They had to be removed by authority of the Government.

Then the Indians leased the lands for cattle-grazing, and the Government ordered the leases to be canceled and drove off the cattle men. So the land lies there now practically unoccupied.

After this contention, lasting for many years, the Cherokee commission was directed to go down there and see if they could negotiate with those Indians and buy out or have them relinquish and release their interest in the land. The commission succeeded in making an agreement with them whereby they were to be paid a sum of money, which is variously estimated per acre, depending upon how many acres it is to be applied to. The whole sum of money, however, which they are to be paid is $8,595,736.12.

These negotiations were pending, I think, two years or more, and were finally concluded by an agreement which has been ratified by the Cherokee council. If this Congress adjourns on the 4th of March without the ratification of that agreement it falls to the ground. My knowledge of the situation leads me to believe that if it does there will be a rush of white people into that Outlet territory, which is 60 miles broad and 140 miles long, or thereabouts, from both sides of it, from Kansas on the north and from Oklahoma on the south, and that within a very few days, perhaps a few hours, after the 4th of March all that part of it which is susceptible to agriculture will be located upon. There is another thing that I think would be done. I believe then that the Indians from the home country of the Cherokees would be rushing over there to settle just about the same time, claiming that they had a right to occupy that land.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the Senator from Connecticut think this Government is strong enough and has force and power enough to protect that land against that kind of invasion on the part of people who will attempt to rush in there in violation of law? The other public lands of the United States are protected, it seems to me. I can not understand why we should assume that anybody is going upon these particular lands in violation of law. If they do go then they should be put out vi et armis if necessary.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I of course am deprecating and deploring any such condition of affairs as I am suggesting might occur, but I know that people are encamped and have been encamped for months all along the northern line of that Outlet and are there to-day. They have been encamped there for months by the thousand, and the state of feeling is such that those people are desperate. I do not say that they ought to be, I do not say that there is any reason in it, but there is a feeling that in some way or other that Territory ought to be opened to settlement and that the Government is standing in the way of it or the Indians are standing in the way of it, and there is no telling what desperate people will do.

The condition to the south of that Territory is very much the same. While people are coming in from the north, others will rush in from the south; and it is an open secret that the Indians, in order to protect their title, if this agreement should not be ratified and confirmed, intend to go over there in considerable numbers and occupy the land themselves. There is opportunity at least for collision there which will be unpleasant if the Government is compelled by military force to drive these people out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question for information. Is there any express stipulation in this agreement between the Cherokee Nation and the United States as to the time of the payment of the eight million and odd dollars referred to?

Mr. PLATT. Whatever stipulation there is will be found in the proviso to the sixth section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have read that.

Mr. PLATT. I will read it. This is the provision:

It is expressly understood that this agreement ceding and relinquishing the title to the lands herein described shall not be effective for any purpose whatever until it shall in its entirety be ratified by Congress and the amount of money herein agreed to be paid to the Cherokee Nation for such cession and relinquishment shall have been appropriated by Congress and placed in the Treasury of the United States, subject to the order of the Cherokee national council.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is a proviso:

That the United States may at any time pay to said Cherokee Nation the whole or any part of said sum, and thereupon terminate the obligation of the United States in respect to so much thereof as shall be so paid, and in respect to any further interest upon the same.

Mr. PLATT. That has to be read in connection with the other proviso. The proviso along towards the bottom of the ninth page, is that the cession shall not be valid until the amount has been appropriated and placed in the Treasury at the call of the Cherokee Nation.

The other proviso, according to my view, is that the United States can discharge itself of the care of the money at any time, if the Cherokee Nation does not call for it, by paying it over in advance of their desire to have it.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is the trouble I have about this agreement. I have read the report of the committee, which is voluminous and very interesting, and which gives a very clear statement of the whole matter. It seems to me the Government ought not now to undertake to pay this money. If it is to agree to pay the money at the ratification of this agreement, I certainly shall not vote for the bill; but, if the money can be placed to the credit of the Cherokee Nation at a reasonable rate of interest and the money be paid out of the fund which undoubtedly will very soon be acquired by the sale of the land, then I think it would be plain sailing, and we should have no difficulty in proceeding to the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. HIGGINS. I should like to ask the Senator if he objects to the present payment of the money?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Connecticut by making a statement at this time.

Mr. PLATT. I will come to that. I should like to make, as I commenced to do, a short statement about this matter.

I was saying that if the agreement was not ratified by the 4th of March it falls. Then we shall be practically in the condition that whatever change we make in the agreement will have to be a change to which the Indians will assent. If we change the terms or times of payment from immediate payment it would have to be satisfactory to the Indians.

The House of Representatives does not propose to pay anything down, but proposes to agree to pay the whole sum within six years, not specifying any time within the six years at which separate installments shall be paid, but providing that the United States shall pay the whole within six years, not appropriating anything for present payment and not appropriating anything for the interest which it provides shall be paid on the whole sum until paid. I am very sure that will not be satisfactory to the Indians.

There are a great many other matters in the bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, which seem to me quite objectionable. That bill changes nearly all our land laws, provides a new method of taking up the lands, and a new method with regard to the organization of counties and the establishment and location of county seats; it undertakes to repeal some railroad charters, for whose repeal I do not know any reason, and in various matters and particulars relating to the opening of the lands it seems to me to be objectionable.

I think that bill is objectionable also in the matter of not providing any payment whatever to the Indians and making them wait six years, the money to be paid as it may be realized by the Government. It seems to me that having made a contract with these Indians, in which the stipulation was that the money should be paid into the Treasury to their credit, where they could call at any time for the whole or any portion of it, they at least ought to be consulted as to any different arrangement about the payment.

I am inclined to believe that if the sum of $500,000 down was paid them or some sum—I will not say that sum—if an appropriation was made for its payment and for the payment of the interest, it might not be entirely objectionable to the Indians to make some stipulations about the time when the balance of the money should be paid to them.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the Senator think, however, that the entire amount ought to be appropriated now?

Mr. PLATT. I think it ought to be appropriated and placed in the Treasury, and the time fixed when it should be paid.

Mr. FRYE. So much a year.

Mr. PLATT. So, not being able to arrange these things immediately, and the Senate bill providing an appropriation for the whole amount, I have moved to-day to substitute the Senate bill for the bill as it came from the House. I do not believe in legislation by conference committees, and yet I think this is one of those cases where it will be impossible to reconcile the substantial differences of opinion which have arisen regarding large matters and small matters with reference to the proposed payment, with reference to the intruder question, and with reference to the manner of opening and settling up that tract, unless something is left to the discretion of a conference committee. I think the bill as we reported it in the Senate is sufficient for the opening up of the tract, and it is sufficient for the appropriation of the money.

There is one other question to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] alluded. The intruder question is a vexed question also. That has been a matter of contention between the Cherokee government and the Government of the United States nearly as long as has been the question of their title. There are some 6,000 people, more or less, within the home territory of the Cherokee Nation, who, they say, are intruders. There are a great many white people there, some 20,000, but it is said that there are 6,000 people there claiming to have more or less of Cherokee blood, who are intruders and have no business there; that wherever they have located on the land they are simply naked trespassers. The Cherokees claim that by treaties and decisions of our Supreme Court the entire right to say who shall be a citizen of the Cherokee Nation belongs to the Cherokee National Council, and that these persons are there in defiance of the decision of the Cherokee National Council. The Cherokees claim that by treaty we are bound to remove those intruders. There seems to be a good deal of ground for their claim.

The Supreme Court of the United States in a recently decided case practically says that the whole question of who shall be citizens of the Cherokee Nation is to be decided by the Cherokee national council. There is no question but that by our treaties time after time we have agreed to remove intruders, and the Government has been repeatedly called upon to remove them, but they have not been removed. The difficulty about it is that the Government has undertaken to exercise some little discretion when called upon to remove an intruder as to whether that person really ought to be removed or not.

The Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior, when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] was Secretary of the Interior, decided that at least before exercising force to remove a person whom the Cherokee Nation called an intruder, the Government had the right to inquire into the circumstances of the case, and see whether, in the opinion of the Government, that person ought to have been admitted as a citizen; and if he ought, in the opinion of the Government, to have been admitted as a citizen, the Government would not exercise the discretion which they claim existed on the part of the Government as to whether they would remove such a person or not. I do not know that I state the matter in exact legal phase, but I think I state the common-sense, practical result of the contention which has been going on.

So upon the decision of the Kesterson case, as it is called, by the Secretary of the Interior in the last Administration, that was the position which the Government took. While admitting that the national council could determine the question of citizenship, while admitting the obligation under the treaty to remove intruders, yet it reserved to itself the right in any particular instance, when called upon to remove an intruder, to say whether it would remove that particular person or not; that it would look into all of the circumstances and see whether the person ought really to be removed; whether, in the opinion of the Government, he ought to have been rejected by the national council. That is about the proposition, is it not?

Mr. HIGGINS. That is right.

Mr. PLATT. That being the contention between the Cherokee Nation and the Government, the Cherokee Nation claiming that the Government had no discretion whatever and must remove intruders whenever called upon by the chief of the Cherokee Nation, there was put into this agreement—and the Cherokees say that they would never have negotiated the agreement if it had not been put in—a provision that the United States should, on the demand of the principal chief, remove all intruders. That, I suppose, was to divest the Government of any discretion whatever as to whether they would remove a person who was called an intruder, leaving the decision of the whole question as to whether or not he was an intruder to the national council, and to remove whoever the national council said was an intruder and should be removed.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] says that is all right; the Cherokee government says that is all right; that those people are there without rights, they are naked intruders, they are occupying lands which belong to the Cherokees to occupy, and that no matter if they have homes and houses and improvements, they have no right there, and the Government is bound by treaty to remove them and the Government should do it.

On the other hand, the committee looked at it in this way: Here are probably 5,000 persons——

Mr. HIGGINS. Seven thousand five hundred.

Mr. PLATT. The number is perhaps not agreed on, but I take the minimum. There are 5,000 people, I think, men, women, and children, who are now in fact occupying lands and homes who the Cherokee government claims are intruders. Some of them have been there a great many years; they have houses; they have cultivated the lands; they have farms and other improvements; some of them are in trade, and have stores. This agreement says whenever the principal chief demands that these people shall be removed, the Government shall remove them, and the improvements shall be forfeited. That looked to us like a very harsh thing for the Government to do. Where is the Government going to take these 5,000 people when the cavalry goes down there and says: "You must leave your homes; you must go away from this house and these improvements; you must get out of this Cherokee country, and we are going to put you out." Is the Government going to put 5,000 of them down in Arkansas? Is it going to take them to Kansas and put them there? Is it going to put 5,000 people, homeless and paupers, over in Oklahoma?

When Senators come to look at the agreement which has been made, they will see that it is a pretty harsh thing to do, and something the like of which was never done in a civilized nation. We have had squatters on our public lands from time immemorial; they have gone on lands which did not belong to them, as they did on the Des Moines River lands. They went on some land which the Supreme Court of the United States said belonged to somebody else, but we never could have gone there with the Army and moved them off.

An ejectment in any case, even as the result of lawful process, is very hard and harsh and almost uncivilized when a person has been a long time in the occupation of property, claiming it as a matter of right. It is notorious that a good many, if not all, of these intruders do claim as a matter of right. They say that they are just as much Cherokees as many others recognized by the Cherokee Nation; they say they can prove it; but in some way their proof has not been satisfactory to the Cherokee Nation. They have been going to the Indian Office and they have been offering to make proof there. They have often satisfied the Indian Office, I think, in individual instances that they ought to have been admitted to citizenship amongst the Cherokees. Those who first went there went on the invitation of the Cherokee Nation from North Carolina and that section of the country which they first inhabited.

Mr. FELTON. Were they Indians?

Mr. PLATT. They claim to be able to trace their ancestry back to the rolls of the Cherokee Nation, but the Cherokee council says: "You must trace your ancestry back to certain rolls which we enumerate and which we recognize." They say: "We can not do that, but there are other rolls, and our ancestors are on those rolls; we have as much Cherokee blood in us as you have." They say they were invited to go there. Under the circumstances—I put it very lightly and in the most condensed way for the purpose of letting the Senate understand what is the question with which we have to deal—we thought it was a tremendously harsh thing for this Commission to have agreed to. Then we set about to see if there was not some way in which the removal could be made without being quite so harsh and without really violating what seems to me to be the sentiment of humanity. We inquired as to the value of these improvements, and the Cherokees and the intruders themselves did not differ very much. The Cherokees said $250,000, and the intruders said $350,000.

The question then came up, who is going to have these improvements if the intruders are removed? The Cherokee Nation is going to have them, and the Cherokee Nation is going to have the disposal of them. They can place people whom they do acknowledge as citizens in possession of these improvements. Then it occurred to the committee that, after all, there could be no very great hardship and injustice under the circumstances if, upon the removal of these intruders, the Cherokees should be called upon to pay for the improvements, as the improvements would belong to the nation and they would let in Cherokee citizens whom they did acknowledge, and thus they would get back what they paid for the improvements. I think that is the only fair way of disposing of this question.

I do not know but that I am too tender-hearted, but really my whole heart and my mind revolt at the idea of sending an army down there, a company or a troop of cavalry, and taking those people out of their homes, their children away from their schools and their firesides, and deporting them all over into another State, on the demand of the principal chief, for, if the agreement stands without amendment, that is all there is to it, and this Government will have bound itself on the demand of the principal chief to do it.

I discovered another matter, which I confess gave me some trouble. I will not say from whom I derived this information, but I found certain parties who were desirous that this agreement should be ratified with a clause in it that on the demand of the principal chief the Government should remove these intruders, because they expected that after all the Government would not remove them without going through the same old method of determining whether it ought to remove them or not; in other words, that the adoption of the agreement compelling the Government to remove such intruders on the demand of the principal chief would not make any difference in the relations of the Government to the Cherokee Nation. I said in reply that I could scarcely believe that. I can scarcely believe that if we go ahead and ratify this agreement the matter will stand just as it did before. If that is the purpose of the authorities here or of the persons who negotiated the agreement or of the persons who want it accepted, I can not be made a party to any such thing.

If that is agreed to the Cherokees will understand that they have established new relations with the Government, and that the Government has now, by consenting to this agreement, abandoned its claims that it has a right to determine whether it will remove an intruder when the principal chief or the nation requires him to be removed. The Cherokees will have a good right to say that the situation has been changed; they will have a right to understand when the principal chief demands that one or a thousand intruders shall be removed that the Government has to exercise its powers to remove them.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut if that will change the legal obligation in the slightest? Is the Government not now under obligation by its treaty, at least, to remove any persons whom the nation designates as intruders? I ask if it has not been settled that it is the right of the Cherokee Nation and not of the United States Government to determine who are intruders?

Mr. PLATT. That is a pretty large question. I had stated that the claim set up on the part of the Indians is that the Government now has nothing in the world to do with the matter except to remove intruders.

Mr. TELLER. According to my recollection, that question was determined by the Supreme Court of the United States some years ago.

Mr. PLATT. The Supreme Court certainly said that the National Cherokee Council have the right to determine who shall be citizens; but the Attorney-General, as I have stated, and I think the Senator himself must have heard me——

Mr. TELLER. No, I did not.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], when Secretary of the Interior, as I understood, upon a careful examination of the whole subject and the legal questions involved, came to the conclusion that there was a discretion left in the Government as to whether, when called upon in a particular case to remove an intruder, it would do it or would not; that it had a discretion to determine whether in a particular case a man ought to be removed. I understand that to be the condition up to the time of the making of this agreement. It is to avoid that, it is to foreclose the United States and prevent it from setting up any such claim as that, that this agreement was made.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the law to be as the Senator states, but I have no doubt that the Department have the discretion to say that they will not proceed to the execution of that provision of the treaty at this time. That has been several times declared by the executive department, on the advice of the Interior Department, not upon the theory that the Government of the United States had the right to determine who were intruders, but that the Government of the United States might take its own time to execute the provisions of its treaties.

Mr. PLATT. Secretary Vilas on August 21, 1888, said in the Kesterson case:

> Having gone there in apparent good faith upon invitation of the nation, made valuable improvements while suffered or permitted to remain there, the Department will not cause nor suffer his removal to be made in such summary and sudden manner as to work great harm and loss to his property and unnecessary inconvenience and hardship personally to himself and family. He is entitled to the protection of the Government of the United States in a proper way as a citizen, as he is not admitted to the Cherokees nor under their jurisdiction; and this protection is peculiarly necessary in such a case.

The Attorney-General has said:

> That it is quite plain that in executing such treaties the United States are not bound to regard simply the Cherokee law and its construction by the counsel of the nation, but that any department required to remove alleged intruders must determine for itself, under the general law of the land, the existence and extent of the exigency upon which such requisition is founded.

Evidently when the Cherokees negotiated this agreement they intended to cut off from the United States the exercise of any discretion about when they would remove an intruder, but that it should be done, and done in good faith, and done at once upon the demand of the principal chief. That is the way the Cherokees understand it. If we were to ratify the agreement in that way and go on as we have before and wait and wait and inquire and inquire, they would have good reason to charge us, I think, with not acting in good faith.

I do not know but that I have said all I desire to say upon the intruder question and upon this whole subject.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senate itself to the terms of the treaty of 1835, by article 6 of which it is provided that the Cherokees—> shall be protected against interruptions and intrusions from citizens of the United States who may attempt to settle in the country without their consent; and all such persons shall be removed from the same by order of the President of the United States. But this is not intended to prevent the residence among them of useful farmers, mechanics, and teachers for the instruction of Indians according to treaty stipulations.

In article 26 of the treaty of 1866 it is provided that the Cherokees—> shall also be protected against interruptions or intrusions from all unauthorized citizens of the United States who may attempt to settle on their lands or reside in their territory.

In article 27 of the same treaty it is stipulated—> * * * and all persons not in the military service of the United States, not citizens of the Cherokee Nation, are to be prohibited from coming into the Cherokee Nation, or remaining in the same, except as herein otherwise provided; and it is the duty of the United States Indian agent for the Cherokees to have such persons not lawfully residing or sojourning therein removed from the nation, as they now are or hereafter may be required by the Indian intercourse laws of the United States. (14 Stat. L., p. 803.)

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the express stipulations of those two treaties about which, to my mind, there can be no possible doubt as to the duty of the United States Government in regard to the intruder question.

Mr. PLATT. I have not set up the claim that the United States Government is not bound by those treaties to remove intruders, but, admitting it, when there has come to be a body of five or six thousand people there who have become attached to the soil, who have homes there, and who can not be removed without absolute cruelty, I think I would question whether the United States under the circumstances ought to be held to carry out the treaty in a way which would shock the sentiment of civilized nations.

I can not believe, Mr. President, that such removal could take place if the intruders should wait for actual forcible removal by the United States without awakening all over the world a feeling that the United States had proceeded in a cruel and harsh way to carry out a technical obligation imposed upon it many years ago by a treaty and under entirely different circumstances from those which now exist. I believe we should be condemned more than Russia is now condemned for the expulsion of the Jews. I can not think of anything which has occurred in history among civilized people which would equal this in harshness.

Therefore it did seem to the committee that there was nothing unjust in asking the Indians, if they insisted upon the removal of the intruders, that they should, when they are going to receive nearly $9,000,000, pay $250,000 of it to compensate these people for improvements, especially when the Indians will get it all back again from persons to whom they will sell the improvements.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not know that we are bound by any action of an executive officer in regard to this matter. The terms of the treaty from which I have just read are very explicit, it seems to me. I hold that under the provisions of that treaty it is the solemn duty of the Government of the United States to remove the intruders from the territory belonging to the Indians. Whether they went there rightfully or whether they went there wrongfully, whether they are trespassers, I submit to the Senator from Connecticut, the only judge of that question must be the Cherokee Indians themselves, by the very terms of the treaty between themselves and the Government of the United States, and upon it being made to appear by the lawful authorities of the Cherokee Nation that these people are intruders it is the duty of the Government then and there to remove them.

The Cherokee Indians are not savages. We hear the periodical story—I have heard it at every session of Congress since I have been here—of the violence and outlawry within the Indian Territory, where, as was said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other day, every man and woman goes to sleep with their doors barred to protect them against outlaws who have gone there for the purpose of doing them bodily harm or some other violence. This is the same story, as I have just stated, coming, as we all understand, from what quarter? Coming from white men who are anxious to secure the lands of the Indians—that is the English of it—rightfully or wrongfully.

I remember when the bill came over from the House to admit Oklahoma as a Territory there was a provision including this very Outlet in the Territory of Oklahoma, and gentlemen from another branch of the Government came to the committee of this body and demanded that this land should be thrown open to settlement and included within the territorial limits of Oklahoma. Believing that great injustice would thereby be done to these people, I resisted that, and procured the adoption of an amendment which provided for a commission to treat with the Cherokee Indians.

I was told then, as we all were told, if this land was not put into Oklahoma Territory, that the thousands camping all around it would rush in and settle upon it violently if need be, and that therefore we must legislate under the threat—for that is what it was, as it is to-day—that if Congress did not do an injustice in that way, those people would take the law in their own hands and rush in upon this Territory, dedicated for the benefit of the Indians; and we are told to-day by the Senator from Connecticut that if this agreement shall not be ratified, the thousands who are encamped along the border, north and south, will rush into this Outlet and take possession, that we who are charged with the duty of doing justice to these people, shall legislate under the threat of a mob; that if we do not legislate according to their peculiar notions they will go in nolens volens and take the land from the Government of the United States; that the Government itself has not power enough and force enough to protect the public domain or protect the lands of the Indians from invasion by a mob!

That is the attitude, Mr. President, in which we find ourselves. Now, as then, I propose, for one, as far as I may be able to do so, to defy the threats of that mob and to throw around these people the protection of the Government if it takes every soldier in it to enforce the treaty stipulations between these poor people and the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Connecticut tells us that perhaps he is too tender-hearted, and that he can not tolerate even the suggestion that these poor people, five or six thousand of them, shall be taken up and thrown out upon the cold and heartless world without a home and without means for their support; that it would shock the civilized world to enforce the treaty stipulations between the Government of the United States and these feeble, almost helpless, people.

It is a pity that some of the tears being shed for the intruders had not been shed for the poor Indian himself. We all know that soldiers of the Government, and all of them if necessary, have been employed to transport these people from their homes, and they have been located hundreds of miles away from their homes without asking them, "by your leave." But when the white man goes into his territory and settles upon it in violation of the treaties with the Government, we are called upon to shed tears for the lawless intruder who has gone in and taken from these people the land which the Government of the United States over and over again decided was theirs.

I stated awhile ago that the Cherokee Indians are not savages. I venture to say that in point of intelligence, in obedience to law, in education, in all that goes to make a civilized people, they will bear a favorable comparison with many if not all the States of the Union; and if they had been heretofore dealt by fairly, as I insist, the Government of the United States would have left to their council the question as to who were intruders, and when that question was decided would have enforced the treaty stipulation with them.

I have great respect, as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] knows, for his sense of fairness and justice, as I have for that of my friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], in the exercise of their executive duties, but I must say I think in the one act of depriving these Cherokee Indians of the revenues derived from the lease of their lands for grazing cattle, by which they were deprived of from two to three thousand dollars annually realized from that identical land, an act of injustice was done them. They appropriated those revenues very largely to educational purposes, but they were required under the strong arm of the Government to revoke the contracts for pasturage and give up the enormous revenue which they were using for their own support and for the benefit of their own people.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he understands that that was done by my act?

Mr. BUTLER. No, I do not.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator's reference to me seemed to indicate that he supposed it had been done by my order.

Mr. BUTLER. Not that particular thing. I was coming to one of the acts of the honorable Senator in regard to the intruder question, in reply to what was said by the Senator from Connecticut. It is not a matter of the slightest consequence by whose order it was done.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit an inquiry, I should like to ask him if any executive order ever did in fact recognize the rights of the Cherokees to lease any portion of these lands.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think it did, and in that I think the Department made a great mistake. I have insisted, and insist now, that the title of the Cherokees to that Outlet is just as good as the title of the United States Government to the Capitol in which we sit. I know it was questioned, but the contention was never sustained by the courts, and their title is as good, I repeat, as the title of the Government of the United States to the Capitol in which we sit. I believe they had a right to lease it for that or any other purpose and to derive such revenue as they could, and, I repeat, I believe it was an act of injustice to these people that they were not permitted to go on and continue those leases.

So I say in regard to the intruder question, differing as I do with gentlemen in charge of the Interior Department, the Government had discretion and should have exercised it when the fact was patent and clear that those people were intruders. That the Government had any discretion or should hesitate one moment to enforce the demands of the Cherokee people, I think was another act of injustice.

Mr. VILAS. Probably the Senator from South Carolina will permit me to ask him a question there.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to put this question to the Senator from South Carolina: Suppose one of the members of the band of Eastern Cherokees from North Carolina had gone to the Cherokee country under the general statute of invitation passed by the Cherokees, there had claimed his kinship and had been allowed to settle upon lands, marry, bring up his family, reside there twenty years and make many valuable improvements, if at the end of that time, quite in defiance of all their invitations and precedents, the Cherokees should suddenly decide that he was an intruder, would the Senator from South Carolina as an executive officer of the United States charged with the duty of executing the treaty for the United States, turn that man and his family naked across the line and leave the labors of his twenty years to perish behind him or be seized by those who had not earned them?

Mr. BUTLER. If I were an executive officer of the Government of the United States, and the national council or whatever authority is charged with that duty should come and satisfy me that the man was an intruder, about which there was no doubt, they settling the question, in my construction of the treaty at least I should most certainly eject him from that territory, whether he went out naked or otherwise. He came in, he settled on the land, he had the usufruct, the rents and profits for twenty years, and he could not have been in such a deplorable condition that at the end of that time he could not at least have had transportation across the line to some other country. I should have not hesitated one moment, if the proper authority of the Cherokee Nation had demanded in pursuance of the provisions of the treaties of 1835 and 1866, the expulsion of this man—I should have ejected him.

Mr. VILAS. I should like also to ask the Senator from South Carolina if after he had determined the right of the Cherokees to require the ejection of the intruder and the duty of the United States to eject him, he would not then have said that it was the duty of the United States to proceed under all those circumstances temperately, considerately, giving permission to the intruder to dispose of his goods and property before he was thus driven across the line?

Mr. BUTLER. I should, sir, most assuredly.

Mr. VILAS. Would six months be too much time to allow in such a case, I ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. That would depend very much upon circumstances.

Mr. VILAS. I have stated a case. In the case which I stated would six months be too much time to allow?

Mr. BUTLER. That would depend very much upon circumstances. I do not know that six months would be too long.

Mr. VILAS. I am very glad to have the approbation of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina of the decision in the Kesterson case. That is precisely what I determined as Secretary of the Interior in that case.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator from Wisconsin ought to be congratulated upon doing it; and I shall take occasion to congratulate him in doing so wise and just and humane a thing. But that, I believe, is about the only instance. I do not recall any other. Perhaps the Senator may know of other cases where an intruder has been put out by the Government of the United States even after the expiration of six months. According to the statement of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and the statement made here the other day by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], there are over a hundred thousand white men within the limits of the Indian Territory. Can it be claimed that the Government has done its duty to these people and that they are now to be mulcted in the sum of $250,000 to pay for the neglect or omission, or whatever you choose to call it, of the Government of the United States?

If, as the Senator from Connecticut so pathetically stated awhile ago, it would be a hardship to put these people out without payment for their homes, why should not the Government put its hand in its own pocket and pay the money and protect us from the anathema and execration of the civilized world for cruelty to these people? Why take the land of the Cherokees and with a "stand and deliver" style say, "You must pay $250,000 of this money, which is yours, not ours, to compensate men who we must assume have come in without even the color of title"?

That is a novel principle of law, Mr. President, one that I have never heard of before in a civilized government. I predict that if the amendment is adopted in the bill ratifying this treaty the Cherokees will and ought to reject it. That is my deliberate judgment, notwithstanding the army of men who have been camping for months around the border north and south ready to rush in and take possession of this land. We shall have descended to a point where I trust the Government will never find itself when we undertake to say to these people, "We have made a solemn treaty with you, and we have not the power to enforce it." We shall have descended to a point of humiliation in which I trust this Government will never be found.

As I stated awhile ago, this is the periodical acclaim, if I may use the expression, of the violence within the Indian Territory, the lawlessness, the insecurity of life and property there. We hear it at every session of Congress, particularly when we are trying to get some of the land belonging to the Indians; and the demands of civilization are so urgent, so exigent that we yield to the threats and stories about the condition of things there and coerce these people into giving up their lands, permitting the laws of the United States to be extended over them, throwing them into a territorial condition, abolishing the tribal relation, giving up the tenure of land in common and taking it in severalty.

I think, Mr. President, the time will come (I have never hesitated to express that opinion) when these people will have to assume the duties of citizenship under the Government of the United States. I think that they themselves will ask it in due course of time, and that these independent dependencies, as they have been called, the imperium in imperio which exists in some parts of this country will have to be abandoned. But I submit that this Government can not afford to take steps which will do violence to the treaties and to justice and humanity.

I trust at the proper time the Senate will reject the amendment of the committee and that we shall in good faith, in strict accordance with the terms of the agreement made between the three commissioners and the Indians, appropriate this money, more than $8,000,000, as promptly as we would appropriate money to pay any other debt of the Government; not dally and trifle with these people by saying that we will agree to appropriate in six years money to pay them for their property.

According to the report in another branch of Congress the Government will be reimbursed every dollar of this money by the sale of the land. They pay only $1.40 an acre and they will sell some of it perhaps as high as $2.50, and will make money by the transaction out of the Indians. Yet we are here paltering and hesitating about coming squarely up to the demands of the Indians and saying "we will appropriate the money to pay you for your property and you can do as you please with it." That would be the honorable, honest course to pursue, in my opinion, and I trust that before we get through with the bill we shall ratify the agreement as it comes to us from the commissioners, in spirit and in letter, and turn the money over to the Cherokees to do as they please with it. They are just as able to manage their own affairs as we are, and a great deal more able than many people in this country.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, at the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to the Senate bill which has been submitted as an amendment by the Senator from Connecticut to the House bill. In the first section, in the twentieth and twenty-first lines, I shall move to strike out the provision that before these intruders shall be ejected the amount of their improvements shall be paid to them by the Cherokee Nation, and substitute for that that the improvements shall be paid for by the United States. I shall further propose to amend the bill by providing that an additional price shall be added to the amount to be paid by the proposed settlers on these lands after they are opened to settlement for the land they take, as homestead land thereunder, and thus have the new settlers, when they pay the Government for the land, pay enough to raise the sum of $250,000 or $350,000, as it is variously estimated, which will be sufficient to pay the intruders or alleged intruders for their improvements.

The number of the intruders is variously estimated. I have heard it put as low as 1,500. It has been put as high as 1,500 families, including from 5,000 to 7,500 souls. But whether the number be 1,500 or 7,500, take either extreme and it presents a very serious as it presents a very interesting question to the United States and to Congress in passing upon this agreement.

I am disposed to agree with the Senator from South Carolina in the opinion that the Cherokee Nation will not ratify the agreement if the amendment stands as it is without some such modification as I have suggested.

I have been informed that the representatives of the intruders will be willing to go if they are paid for their improvements. If that is the case, the amendment I shall propose will relieve the Government from a most severe and invidious and cruel task. By the raising of this sum of money they will be satisfied and the problem will be solved; the agreement will be adopted and ratified by both parties. I submit that it is perfectly just and fair that the settlers, who get the land by the bounty of the Government, shall pay a few cents more an acre—it will not exceed 10 cents an acre more for the land that they thus get—and raise the money by which the intruders can be satisfied.

The interesting statement of the Senator from Connecticut did not give the entire history of the intruder question. It arose from an invitation given by the Cherokee Nation, I think about 1869, to their brethren in North Carolina and to others in the United States to come to the Indian Territory, and that they would be admitted to Cherokee rights in case they could prove them.

At the time that invitation was extended the council of the nation further created a court or tribunal with authority to pass upon the admission to Cherokee rights of persons thus coming. But it brought a very much larger number of people than the Cherokees had anticipated, so much larger that the Cherokees became alarmed, and at the end of one year, I think, they repealed the statute and thus drew back the jurisdiction over the question to their council. But it did not stop the crowd of people who were headed toward the Cherokee country. They continued to come.

Doubtless many of them were of Cherokee blood; doubtless many of them could prove their pedigree up to the rolls of the Government from which various moneys at one time or another had been paid by the United States to the Eastern Band of Cherokees. Possibly under any fair decision of their rights by a fair tribunal they would have been admitted. But it was claimed by the Cherokee Nation, and on a case authorized by an act of Congress to be made for that purpose, which was carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in 1876 decided by that tribunal, that the Cherokee Council had the jurisdiction and the right to determine who were and who were not Cherokees.

I submit it is not a question any longer as to whether they acted fairly or unfairly. They had jurisdiction. They were the tribunal of ultimate appeal. They have refused to admit these people and they had no right there. They are subject to ejectment. It seems to me that the Government of the United States, under its treaty stipulations and obligations, was bound to have ejected them, but it did not choose to do so. The Government made a very fine distinction—one that I confess I can not see the validity of—that the Cherokee Nation had the jurisdiction and the right to say who should be intruders, and admitting that the United States was bound to eject intruders, yet the Cherokee Nation had the right to determine who were citizens, and the United States had the right to determine who was or who was not an intruder.

Mr. PLATT. Whom they would remove.

Mr. HIGGINS. Whom they would remove as intruders. Under that policy the Government abandoned its obligation and duty and these people went on and occupied the land. Of course it is known on all hands that the title to the land in this Territory is held by the nation in common. It is an example of that kind of tenure which is advocated by so many people now and then, and it is an example of the difficulties which arise out of it, for it has brought this question to us here to settle now.

There is a strong equity on the side of the intruders. They doubtless have been of Cherokee blood. They came there under invitation. They settled on those lands expecting that the council of the nation in time would confirm their title and give them their right. But the council chose not to do it. The United States chose then to step in, so to speak, and not perform its duty. Thus you have here a case of from 1,500 to 5,000 or 7,500 people living upon lands for twenty years whom you propose abruptly and harshly, as harshly as any person was ever tomahawked, to expel from that country.

Where shall we take them? Where shall we put them? On what community shall they be dumped? By what power shall they be dumped if they stand there and undertake to refuse to go? It would be a harsh proceeding and I think with the Senator from Connecticut it is one against which the conscience of the good people of the United States would revolt. But it seems to me that the question would be largely met and solved by the very easy and simple solution which I have proposed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I may show my ignorance by the question, but let me ask what is there to prevent a provision of law by which, after the United States regain possession of this land, these so-called intruders shall be permitted to select the lands which they occupy and thus get the advantage of their own improvements?

Mr. HIGGINS. I will state to the Senator the United States does not get the land from which the intruders are to be expelled. They occupy land within the admitted Cherokee country.

Mr. FRYE. Ah, I see.

Mr. HIGGINS. But the land that we are to get under this agreement is the Cherokee Outlet, as to which it was always claimed on the part of the United States that the Cherokees merely had a right of way. The Cherokees claimed they had a fee. The solution of the difference is finally found in this proposed act, where, whatever their title may be, the United States undertakes to buy them out. While it was not good enough for them to settle on, it was good enough to keep any citizen of the United States from settling on until their title, whatever it might be, was extinguished.

Now, the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas meets my approval. I think the time has come when the United States, with all gravity and seriousness, should undertake to end the tribal relation and ownership of land in common of the Cherokee Nation and all the tribes occupying the Indian Territory and add it with Oklahoma and constitute it another State in the Union. The reason for the creation of the Indian Territory has almost, if not absolutely, passed away.

I went to the Indian Territory since the last session of Congress on a committee authorized by the Senate, and I looked almost in vain for an Indian. I asked men with whom I was thrown in contact to show me an Indian. Everybody was white. While these people claiming Cherokee rights are of Cherokee blood they are not the red Indian; they are not the blanket Indian. The fact is they are white people, and it is simply amusing and grotesque for them any longer to be posing as wards of the nation. Indeed, as the Senator from South Carolina truly said, civilization has gone so far there that those who are of full blood are civilized people. They are occupying their own land in severalty. They live upon agriculture and not upon the chase.

Indeed, I was surprised to find that they had almost abandoned the practice of hunting or shooting; that when they no longer had to live by the chase they no longer cared to indulge in it. That is one way of testing how far they had got from the habit of the Indian, the condition of these people when the United States felt that it was necessary to have regard for their tribal condition, their habits of life, their savage condition, and place them on that land after they were expelled from their old home east of the Mississippi.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think the fact that they do not like to hunt and fish is an evidence of civilization. I think the highest civilization is shown by a desire to hunt and fish.

Mr. HIGGINS. I agree with the Senator entirely on that point, when you come to the abstract question, and yet I think nevertheless that my proposition is true. So the only thing that to-day fairly stands as an obstruction to an act of Congress putting an end to the condition of things created by treaty in that country is whatever rights belong to the Cherokee Nation under the treaty. Now that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas proposes to respect. That amendment provides for a commission to go to the Territory and see whether the various tribes of Indians will consent and upon what terms they will consent to an abandonment of their possession under the treaties, give up their title in common to the land, and consent to its being given out in severalty to the present owners thereof, and to their being incorporated in a State of the Union under the ordinary polity.

The discussion that arose early in the session on the resolution of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is not now in his seat, and which was taken part in by him and the Senators from Arkansas and others as to the condition of lawlessness and crime in the Indian Territory, will be fully met and can only be fully met by such a disposition as is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PERKINS. By statehood.

Mr. HIGGINS. By statehood. That will dispose of it completely. The present condition is an anomaly. It is provocative of crime. It does not tend to good government. It creates an anomalous condition which presents such a question as that in regard to these intruders, otherwise ever unknown to the people of the United States. It seems to me that the time has fully come when we should take the tentative steps towards the full and final disposition of this question.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to talk a few minutes upon the bill. I observe it is now after 5 o'clock, and I will yield for an adjournment.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Kansas will yield for a moment, I will state that I should very much like to have a full Senate when this matter is discussed, and it is getting late.

Mr. FRYE. Had we not better have an executive session?

Mr. PLATT. With the permission of the Senator from Kansas and the Senate, I will after a moment or two move an executive session.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to get this matter before the attention of the Senate, except when it is occupied by the antioption bill, because there is very great need that something should be done as speedily as possible. In so far as I may, in such intervals as shall not be occupied by the antioption bill between now and the time of its passage, I shall ask the Senate to go right along with this question.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator mean that he proposes to ask that the morning hour shall be given to it? It seems to me that the Calendar is by this time entitled to the morning hour.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think I have any right to interfere with the consideration of the Calendar. I shall not ask the Senate to take up the bill in the morning hour.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, one word before the motion is made to go into executive session. There is no objection, I understand, from any quarter to the amendment I have offered. If that was adopted it would then leave the bill open for any amendment the Senator from South Carolina may desire to offer in reference to the intruder question. I should like to have my amendment adopted now.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to a vote being taken on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment proposed by me.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield so that a vote may be taken on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to the substitute moved by the Senator from Connecticut for the House bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the report of the Senate committee on the substitute now under consideration be reprinted.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 24, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate January 23, 1893.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Frank C. Partridge, of Vermont, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Venezuela, vice William L. Scruggs, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 23, 1893.

CONSULS.

Adolph G. Studer, of Iowa, now consul of the United States at Barmen, to be consul at Singapore.

John J. Piatt, of Ohio, at present consul at Cork, to be consul of the United States at Dublin.

Rounsevelle Wildman, of Idaho, now consul of the United States at Singapore, to be consul at Barmen.

POSTMASTERS.

Mrs. Bertha Kleven, to be postmaster at Culbertson, in the county of Hitchcock and State of Nebraska.

Jacob M. Harman, to be postmaster at Shelton, in the county of Buffalo and State of Nebraska.

Grovenor D. McCubrey, to be postmaster at Barnesville, in the county of Clay and State of Minnesota.

Michael Huiras, to be postmaster at Springfield, in the county of Brown and State of Minnesota.

Leroy L. Brinkley, to be postmaster at Edenton, in the county of Chowan and State of North Carolina.

Jonathan B. Stovall, junior, to be postmaster at South Boston, in the county of Halifax and State of Virginia.

Joseph M. Tomlinson, to be postmaster at Alexandria, in the county of Madison and State of Indiana.

William Stanley, to be postmaster at Plainfield, in the county of Hendricks and State of Indiana.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[LEGISLATIVE DAY January 21, 1893].

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock a. m. Monday, January 23, 1893.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9757.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL QUARANTINE BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9757, and there is an amendment, offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER], pending.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Substitute for the word "vessels," in the thirty-seventh line, on page 16, and all other words to and including the words "and crew," in line 44 of the same page, the following:

"By persons, shippers, and common or other carriers of persons or goods either at the port or place of departure or shipment for the United States, of any persons or goods, or on the journey, voyage, or transport to the United States of any persons or goods, or at any port or place at or from which, in the opinion of the President, contagious or infectious diseases exist, or there is danger that infected goods or persons are likely to enter the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such persons or goods, and any medium of transport thereof."

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is intended——

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I just came in a moment ago, and did not catch the reading of the amendment. I would like to have the amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] is recognized.

Mr. WISE. Let it be stated what portion of the bill is proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the word "vessels," in the thirty-seventh line, on page 16 and all other words to and including the words "and crew," in line 44 of the same page, the following:

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee. The amendment is simply a change of the phraseology of the bill now before the House, in order that it may provide for regulations governing as well immigration and importing goods across land boundaries as over the seaboard boundary; in other words, to make the bill apply to and be efficacious in regard to the boundaries of the United States between the United States and Canada and Mexico as well as to those across which immigration must be by vessels already provided for. The committee, as I understand it, accepts the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," in line 35, of section 3, insert the following:

"Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize or empower the Secretary of the Treasury, by any such rules and regulations, to prohibit, or the President to restrain or prevent, the passage from one State to another State of the United States of persons not emigrants and not engaged in commerce."

The question being taken, a division was demanded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Can the amendment be reported by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. A division is being had.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 41.

Mr. MALLORY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. MALLORY and Mr. RAYNER.

Mr. ATKINSON. May I ask that the amendment be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent. In the absence of objection the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me——

The CHAIRMAN. A division is being had and debate is not in order.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I would like to submit a few remarks on this amendment. I ask unanimous consent to discuss it for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] asks unanimous consent to speak upon this amendment for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MALLORY. I have no objection provided I have an opportunity to say something on the subject.

A MEMBER. He is on your side.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the regular order. I guess everybody understands the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded, and consent has not been given.

Pending the division

Mr. MALLORY said: Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 18, the noes 41; and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment again.

Mr. BURROWS. Why, Mr. Chairman, that can not be done after the amendment has once been voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I was certainly misled. I was given to understand that if I withdrew the point of no quorum——

Mr. BURROWS. Regular order.

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I was given to understand that if I withdrew the point of no quorum I would be allowed to offer the same amendment a second time, with ten minutes for debate upon it, with the understanding that I would not again raise the point of no quorum. My object in raising the point was to give time for gentlemen who are not present to arrive at the House.

Mr. BURROWS. That agreement was made without being submitted to the committee.

Mr. MALLORY. When I withdrew the point of no quorum, I had no idea the Chairman was going to announce the result.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the only thing in order.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] may be permitted to again offer this amendment, and that ten minutes' discussion on each side be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I will not enter any objection to that, if this business of making private arrangements shall cease. It is about time that the Committee of the Whole considered this bill, instead of having arrangements made by a few gentlemen, by which amendments are put into the bill which the committee does not approve, and in that way sending it back to the House and passing it in the hope that a conference committee may make a decent bill out of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman to object. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MALLORY. Now I offer the amendment again, and I ask the Chairman that it may be again read.

The amendment offered by Mr. MALLORY was again read.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as a number of gentlemen have asked me to explain the purport and intent of this amendment, I will devote two or three minutes to doing so. It seems to me that it is very patent on its face what is intended by it. Under the bill as it now stands, in the event of an epidemic breaking out in the city of New York, for illustration, people from Jersey City, across the river, engaged in business in the city of New York, but not necessarily engaged in commerce, desiring to return home in the evening, as is their custom, can be prevented by a Federal official from doing so. They may not be connected with commerce in any way.

If that is so, then I think, Mr. Chairman, that the provision transcends the power of the House. I go as far as any gentleman on the floor of this House can go in believing that the United States Government has the power to control maritime quarantine, and I will go as far as any one in indorsing its powers to regulate interstate commerce; but I fail to see how under any circumstances, how under any interpretation that can be put upon that clause of the Constitution relating to interstate commerce, it can be said that the Federal Government has the power to put its hand upon the shoulder of an individual not engaged in commerce, and prevent him from exercising his freedom of movement. It is to bring this bill within what I believe the limit of the Constitution, that the amendment is offered. It is not to hamper any one.

I am as anxious to see maritime quarantine established as any gentleman on this floor, but in this emergency, that is urged on perhaps by an apprehension that is legitimate, I must protest against our doing a thing which I do not think the cool judgment of the people of this country or of the members of this House will favor. It is true, sir, that there is in existence the act of 1890, which authorizes the same thing; but that act of 1890 is unconstitutional if there is an unconstitutional statute on our books, and I propose, if this amendment passes, to offer an additional amendment to this bill whereby the act of 1890 will be repealed. I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Before the gentleman from Florida takes his seat will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly; I yield for a question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Suppose a class of persons or a number of people not engaged in commerce and not immigrants in the city of New York are about to cross to New Jersey and it is known that they are infected with the cholera, shall the law not be permitted to stop them?

Mr. MALLORY. The State of New York or the State of New Jersey has all the power necessary to stop them; and if it had not the power the Constitution does not give it to the United States. It is a matter belonging exclusively to the State.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then the gentleman would leave the State of New Jersey entirely at the mercy of infection from New York?

Mr. MALLORY. No; I would leave it at the mercy of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on page 15 this bill provides regulations for preventing the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia.

Now, it is very clear that this provision of the bill applies as well to persons as to commerce, and I submit that under the constitutional provision empowering Congress to regulate commerce between the States, Congress has not the power to prevent one citizen of the United States from passing over State lines, or in any way circumscribing his locomotion. In my judgment that would be entirely unconstitutional. I know of no power in this House to provide for such a regulation.

Then, again, Mr. Chairman, it is unquestionably true that neither cholera nor yellow fever has ever originated in the United States. They have always been imported. Now, in the city in which I reside we have had yellow fever two or three times. It has occurred two or three times in Baltimore, more than once in Philadelphia; and everyone who has had any experience in respect to that disease knows that the best way to arrest it is to disperse the population. When it occurred in the city of Memphis four-fifths of the population of that city took refuge in the mountainous countries of East Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, and North Alabama and other sections of the Union; and even if any of those persons took the yellow fever with them on leaving the city it was found that the community in which they sought refuge was entirely exempt from it.

Take the district represented by my friend from Virginia [Mr. BUCHANAN]. A great many of our people went into that district. There never was a case of yellow fever originating there. No one ever took the yellow fever who was a resident of that part of the country. Therefore I claim and believe, and it is the opinion of all persons who have given the matter any consideration, that the best way to arrest the progress of a yellow fever epidemic is for the population to scatter and get out of the way into the hilly and mountainous countries; and experience has also shown that even when persons have taken yellow fever with them into such country districts, it will not be communicated to the resident population.

Therefore I hold that there is no necessity for this provision of the bill restricting the locomotion of the citizen. He has a right to pass from one State to another at will; and it is in no sense a regulation of commerce to enact a law restricting and confining him to a certain locality.

I agree with my colleague on the committee [Mr. MALLORY] that we ought to have maritime quarantine on the high seas. In every part of the United States, on the high seas, and in all our relations with foreign countries, the Federal Government is sovereign, and it ought to provide adequate quarantine regulations to absolutely exclude contagious diseases from our shores. That can be effectually accomplished within the scope of the powers that Congress has under the Constitution, and without the necessity of going outside of them. I see no necessity, therefore, for providing in this bill for the restriction of the locomotion of the people. I do not believe that Congress has power to interfere with their right of egress from an infected district. It is in no sense a regulation of commerce.

What, Mr. Chairman, is it competent for Congress in the event yellow fever should break out in Baltimore, New Orleans, Savannah, Charleston, Memphis, or any other city of the Union, to hem in the population and confine them in the stricken city to die like sheep with the rot? The exercise of such power, in my judgment, would be unwarranted. It is a violation in my judgment of the Constitution and an unwarranted restriction of the liberty of the citizen. The amendment, I think, should be adopted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not necessary. There are ten minutes allowed in opposition to the amendment, and the gentleman from Maine will be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I have only a word to say, and that is, that notwithstanding the great respect which I have for the legal attainments of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON], and for the time which he has given to a study of the Constitution, I do not believe that an individual has the right to go from one State to another or from one place to another and carry a nuisance with him, or carry, what is worse than a nuisance, an infection. The theory of the gentleman is that while the Government has the constitutional power to prevent infection entering into our country from abroad, it has no power to prevent that infection from spreading in the country after it has once entered it.

The gentleman says that the yellow fever got to Memphis. How did it get to Memphis? Where did it come from? Did it come from Cuba through the air and turn a somersault over Louisiana and strike Memphis, or did it first enter Louisiana and then cross the State line, and get to Memphis in that way? Why the very precautions that you are now trying to make in this bill to prevent the cholera from spreading in this country require that the Government should have power not only to prevent the cholera from entering the country, but, if it shall enter, then that the Government shall also have the power to prevent it from spreading in the country.

They who live in the interior have quite as much right to be protected as they who live upon the seacoast; and if we who live upon the coast shall be so unfortunate, notwithstanding all precautions which may be taken, as to have the cholera get once into our villages and into our cities, why should not the interior have the same right to be protected by national quarantine from catching the cholera from us, that we have to be protected from catching it from Europe or otherwheres? The meaning of the gentleman's amendment, if it has any meaning at all, is that we shall provide all means necessary to keep the cholera, and other infectious diseases, away from our shores, but if they should once succeed in landing, then we should vote them the freedom of the country. I do not think the amendment will prevail even in this House.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the Committee of the Whole would have reported to the House at the proper time the bill as reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce without amendment. In the first place that bill is almost identical with the bill which passed the Senate a week or ten days ago, after a great deal of discussion, after Senators had yielded individual points and had agreed almost unanimously upon their bill, which, in my opinion, if enacted into a law, would in all probability prevent the cholera from getting into this country in the coming spring or summer.

It is remarkable that the opposition to the bill now before the Committee of the Whole generally comes from Louisiana, from Florida, or New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. The opposition to what proposition?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. To the general proposition. The amendment of the gentleman from New York I will refer to in a moment when I get to that point.

Now, the city of New Orleans has had great experience and sad experience with infectious diseases. So has Florida in some of its cities, Pensacola especially; and so, but in a less degree, has the city of New York. Even to-day, with all the power of the health board of that city and the vigilance of health officers, headed by so celebrated and distinguished a man as Dr. Jenkins, they have not been able to prevent typhus fever from getting in and spreading to some extent, but we hope it may be suppressed entirely.

Now, if we enact the proposed law we certainly do one thing. We put it in the hands of the Marine Hospital Service, thus placing it under national jurisdiction; and in accordance with the very wording of the bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce we do not absolutely take away the power of a State board or of a municipal board of health. This bill was well considered in the Senate, and well considered in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and every line of it shows that the National Board of Health can not wipe out a State board of health or a municipal board of health.

On the contrary, the idea is that as far as consistent with the provisions of this bill the National Board of Health would work in harmony with the municipal and State boards, or rather they with the National Board. Can there be any wrong to the people of this country, in endeavoring to prevent the coming of this disease, that the national power should take effect at the entrance to our bays? Is there any reason why we should not have an examination made by our consuls in infected ports abroad, and then at the entrance to our bays and ports that the National Government shall take control, and then be followed by a similar power in a State board or in a municipal board?

Now, with reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], it seems to me that it is unnecessary to adopt it. The power to do what the amendment proposes is sufficient now in the municipal boards of health, wherever those boards are in existence or may be instituted. I am sure in any of those cities in this country where there are boards of health the officers are good men and their business is well attended to. I know that is true in the city of Philadelphia and also in the city of New York. I think we are under great obligations to Dr. Jenkins, although in some respects he differed last summer and fall with the Superintendent of the Marine Hospital Service; but the great point is to pass a bill, and to have it enacted into law and signed by the President, and as I said before, I had hoped that this bill, which is so nearly like the Senate bill, when reported by the Committee of the Whole, would be passed by the House.

As regards the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], I do not know what the object of it is. I do not understand its purport exactly; but I want to say here that if it is to protect any political power, if it is to keep in office any persons under State or municipal power, I would be willing to vote for a sufficient amount of money to pay the salaries of those city or State officials, so anxious am I that Congress shall do its full duty now in almost the closing days of the Fifty-second Congress. This is too important a matter to fail for the sake of money merely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time in opposition to the amendment is exhausted. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for that amendment.

Mr. RAYNER. I submit that it is out of order. The bill is an amendment itself.

The Clerk read as follows:

No power shall be conferred by this act upon State or municipal officers or employés which may conflict with any power conferred upon the employés or officers of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted by the committee a moment ago the Chair decides that the amendment is not in order at this time.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. MALLORY, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MALLORY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment on the table which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "foreign countries," in line 7, on page 15, down to and including the words "from another," in line 27, on page 16.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the United States Government passing a quarantine law which will keep out cholera or any other contagious or infectious disease from foreign countries; but I desire, for my part, that the powers of the United States Government shall stop at the port of entry and the boundary lines of the United States. Too much power has already been snatched from the States by Federal legislation, and the object and purpose of this amendment is to strike out all that portion of this section which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations for the government of the State or municipal authorities in the enforcement of these laws; and also for the purpose of striking out the power given to the President to put these laws in execution against one State, one Territory, or district in favor of any other Territories, States, or district.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the power of the United States should stop at the boundary line. To illustrate: It sometimes happens that yellow fever appears in the city of New Orleans. Suppose the physicians of New Orleans, as well as the commercial part of the community, desire that it shall not be spread abroad over the land that New Orleans is infected with an epidemic of yellow fever, and they strain every point to classify the cases as sporadic cases. Now, if that state of affairs should exist and yellow fever be communicated to Houston, Tex., where the conditions favorable to yellow fever sometimes exist as well as they do sometimes in New Orleans, then an epidemic is as likely to break out from a sporadic case transported to Houston as would be in case of an epidemic in New Orleans.

In this condition of affairs the President of the United States, taking the opinions of the physicians of New Orleans would not probably be willing to declare a quarantine of Texas against New Orleans; and if the conditions were reversed, he would not probably declare a quarantine of Louisiana against Texas. In this condition of affairs, the yellow fever might spread from one State to another and the latter be powerless to protect itself, since by the first section of this act no State or municipal authorities can make any regulations inconsistent with it or against regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury under its provisions. This is a specific provision in the very first section of the act. I am opposed to any power being vested in the President of the United States which will enable him to injure one State for the purpose of seeking to benefit another, not that the President will of necessity exercise it, but because he might exercise the power wrongfully.

The local authorities can control these things better. They are familiar with the situation. They are on the ground and can protect themselves better than any officer of the Federal Government, and I ask that this be stricken out, leaving the States to control their own local affairs, and leave to every citizen in every one of the States the privileges of citizens of every other State, as the Constitution guarantees. I should vote for this bill with all that part stricken out which deprives the States of the rights vested in them by the Constitution and genius of our Government; but with those clauses in the bill, I will never vote for it. Local self-government at every point is essential to the existence of free government, and by my vote and voice shall ever be sustained with jealous care. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the State quarantine officials at the port of New Orleans, or the State board of health of the State of Louisiana, or the physicians of the city of New Orleans, or the community of New Orleans, have ever at any time been justly amenable to the charge hurled against them just now by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I did not make any charge against the city of New Orleans. I did not say that the citizens of New Orleans, or the city of New Orleans, or the physicians of New Orleans, or anybody had ever done anything of the kind. It was a hypothetical case, and I simply suggested that it was liable to be done, not only in Louisiana, but elsewhere. Houston might do it against New Orleans as well as New Orleans against Houston. I made no charge. I merely presented a condition which might arise.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I misunderstood, and I think the House generally misunderstood, the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. I rose to repel his charge as I understood it, but now, since he has disclaimed any criticism such as I thought he had passed, and has made an apology to the community of New Orleans, I have nothing further to say. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ANTONY, and the Chairman declared that the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. ANTONY. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 84.

Mr. ANTONY. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANTONY] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The tellers took their places.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry; can I reserve the right to have a vote on this amendment in the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not come into the House at all if it is rejected in the committee.

Mr. ANTONY. I withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 35, on page 16, after the word "purpose," insert the following:
"And all quarantine regulations existing or that may hereafter be adopted by authority of State laws or municipal ordinances at any port or place where the Federal Government has established or may establish quarantine regulations, shall be inoperative and of no effect so far as the same may interfere with or be in conflict with the provisions of this act or the rules or regulations prescribed thereunder."

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I think that this bill ought to be made as nearly a national quarantine bill as we can make it. I entertain the conviction that the defense of the people of the United States against contagious and infectious diseases, plagues, and pestilences is not only a privilege conferred but a duty imposed upon the Federal Government as imperative in its mandate, as binding in its obligation, and constitutional in its requirements as the duty of defending our territory from the invasion of foreign armies and the protection of our people from slaughter and pillage.

A frontier exposed to the invasion of alien pestilence is as much a menace to the lives of our people and the welfare of our commerce and our industries as the invasion of an alien army or an alien navy. My conception of a national quarantine service is one which authorizes the Government of the United States at all times and all places to be paramount and supreme in its authority, which authorizes the Federal Government to supersede all local regulations wherever and whenever they are inadequate and unsafe; an authority in whose presence every regulation of the inferior jurisdiction shall fall instantly when it fails to coincide with or is in conflict with the Federal regulations; in short, a Federal authority which can keep the eye of the Marine Hospital Service of the United States upon every foreign port, upon every ship when it clears at the point of embarkation as well as when it arrives at our domestic ports, and when danger is descried, either near or remote, on land or sea, can lay the hand of the Federal power and execute sentence of death upon it before its infectious virus plants itself in the homes of our people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been requested to have read a portion of one of the rules of the House. The Clerk will read paragraph 7 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the latter portion of this paragraph to which the attention of the Chair was called and which he was requested to have read. The Chair trusts that members will observe the rule.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BROSIUS, and the Chairman declared that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask for a division.

At the request of Mr. BROSIUS the amendment was again read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "purpose," line 35 of section 3, insert the following:
"No power shall be conferred by this act upon State or municipal officers or employés which may conflict with any power conferred upon the officers or employés of the United States."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt, indeed every one admits, that we are threatened with an invasion of the cholera. The destructive and alarming effects should it gain a foothold can scarcely be calculated or realized. It behooves us, as the representatives of a people who are threatened with danger, to do that which we feel will most effectually prevent its invasion of our country.

I claim we have the power, under the Constitution, conferred upon the Federal Government, to regulate and protect commerce, to promote general and domestic tranquility, and provide for the common defense, which certainly confers upon Congress the power to prevent the invasion of a pestilence which probably would destroy more lives than was ever destroyed by any war in which we have been engaged; in order to cope with an enemy which threatens to enter our borders, not only through New York, but every port upon the Atlantic and Pacific coast and over our northern and southern frontiers. Only yesterday I saw an account of several Polish immigrants who had arrived in Wisconsin by railroad from the East through Canada who were suffering from cholera. Now, in order to cope with the situation, the General Government should have full control, that uniformity and energetic action should prevail in the treatment of this pestilence that threatens to spread over our land.

We all feel proud of the city of New York, the great gateway of our country, but we must remember that New York constitutes but a small part of our country. Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, St. Louis, New Orleans, San Francisco, and the great city of the Lakes, and other cities too numerous to mention, and the people scattered over our country who own the broad acres of our land, are all equally interested.

I was surprised at the position assumed by the distinguished gentleman from New York in his argument against the General Government assuming complete control of this matter, questioning the constitutional power of the Government to protect its citizens against the invasion of a pestilence that may desolate our land. His argument on the subject reminded me of the wailing of some ward politician, who was fearful of losing some local patronage.

It will be remembered by some members of this House that about thirty years ago a portion of the people of the city of New York assumed that the General Government did not possess the power to do certain things. Abraham Lincoln ordered 30,000 troops to be concentrated in the city of New York and vicinity. The action of President Lincoln had about as quieting an effect upon the parties who claimed that the General Government was assuming too much power as did the remarks of Andrew Jackson when certain parties assumed the same position with reference to the General Government.

If any one has any doubts as to the right of the General Government under the Constitution to prevent the invasion of a pestilence that may desolate our land, we will assume the right to act to prevent such a calamity under the law of self-preservation.

I think we should be very careful in our legislation upon the subject of quarantine in a way to interfere with immigration. The subject is the most important of any question we have had before Congress during this session.

The large immigration to our country since its organization has materially added to our population and prosperity.

Had our population been confined to the natural increase, we probably would not have over one-third of our present population. Our wealth would be limited in proportion.

The vast migration that has made it possible for us to level the mountains and fill the valleys, creating many iron highways from the Atlantic to the Pacific, encouraging people to make homes in regions which were formerly considered uninhabitable by reason of their great distance from markets—these great thoroughfares crossing our continent in various latitudes hold out inducements and encouragement to people of distant nations, from the frozen regions of the north to the equator, to make themselves homes within our borders.

The golden fields of grain which border the railroads crossing the continent satisfy the passing stranger that it is a desirable land; the extensive herds of cattle and sheep that cover the surrouunding mountains and plains in such numbers that they can scarcely be counted, testify to the fact that we are a great nation—made so, to a great extent, by the efforts and enterprise of the immigrants from foreign lands.

The great industries and enterprises of our country that command the admiration of the people of the civilized world could not have been accomplished without the constant additions that have been made to our population by immigration from foreign countries.

In consideration of the great benefits we have derived from immigration to our shores it behooves us to be careful in legislating on the subject. Persons who at one time were poor and humble immigrants have occupied some of the most exalted positions in our Government, serving with distinguished ability in the field and in the councils of the nation.

Having great confidence in the good judgment of Mr. Cleveland, and in any men that he will be likely to appoint as his advisers, is my reason for investing them with extraordinary power to prevent the cholera from entering our country.

Should the terrible scourge gain a footing within our borders, no one can calculate the loss that we shall sustain in the loss of many valuable lives and the destruction of enterprises the success of which will materially advance the prosperity of the country.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 36, page 16, strike out the words "authorized by" and insert the words "not inconsistent with;" and in line 37, after the word "and," insert the words "in his opinion."

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of making it clear that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to carry out the regulations which he wishes to have enforced respecting the control of immigrants before leaving foreign ports. When the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STUMP] earlier in this discussion offered his amendment to the bill the question was asked by my colleague from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] whether the amendment then offered would have the effect of taking from the States the power of arranging for quarantine, and it was understood that the adoption of that amendment would give the Federal authorities power to control quarantine and would take it from the States.

Now, in my opinion an error was made in impressing upon the committee that view of the question. The idea of the bill which had been reported from the other committee was that the Federal Government should take upon itself the control of the quarantine upon the other side of the ocean, and that when the immigrants arrived in this country the local authorities should have power to control their quarantine irrespective of anything that might have been done before the immigrant left the foreign shore.

My object in offering this amendment is to make it perfectly clear that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to make such rules and regulations as are not inconsistent with the laws of the United States and are, in his opinion, necessary to be observed in foreign ports. I have no idea of restricting the powers of the State authorities or even of the municipal authorities. I simply desire to make it easier for the National Government to enforce such regulations as it may think proper to require to be observed on the other side before the immigrant is allowed to land in this country and practically turned over to the local authorities.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the third section as amended.

There seems to be an attempt here to put this bill through under whip and spur, with a strong backing from the other side of the House. There appears to be some mystery about this proposed legislation. Neither the majority nor the minority report accompanying this bill have been allowed to be read upon this floor, although the gentleman in charge of the bill promised to have them read in his time. When general debate was closed the gentleman [Mr. RAYNER] told me that he would give me eight minutes of his own time to discuss the measure, but he cut me off by immediately moving to limit debate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is more in this bill than has been made apparent. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] read or told us what he said was all there was of legislation in regard to national quarantine, but he left out the important act of June 2, 1879. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] printed that act with his remarks in the RECORD this morning. This act was limited to four years. To show what it was, I want to read a letter received by me from a member of the National Board of Health. It will give you the inside of this bill and may show you the "nigger in the fence."

NEW YORK CITY, January 20, 1893.

SIR: I have just read in the evening paper that you propose to oppose the proposed quarantine bill when it comes up in the House.

In this course, permit me to say, I think you are right. If you have time to inquire as to the promoters and advocates of the measure you will, I think, find them chiefly among the surgeons and clerks of the Marine Hospital Service. In season and out of season for the past ten years they have been busy exerting their influence to extend the powers of the Treasury Department in so far as it relates to that branch of the service, resorting to any and all methods to accomplish their purpose.

It was through the grossest misrepresentations on the part of the officers and employés of that service alone that the act of June 2, 1879, which expired by limitation June 2, 1883, was not reënacted. If you will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for 1878 and up to June 2, 1879, when the act referred to was passed, you will find that every phase of the quarantine question and the methods of dealing with epidemic diseases were discussed, and the power now sought to be given to the Marine Hospital Service was denied. The act of June 2 extended the powers of the National Board of Health and provided that it should coöperate with State and local boards of health in carrying out their rules and regulations to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases.

Within a month after the passage of that act the Board was called upon to deal with the memorable epidemic of yellow fever which broke out in Memphis, Tenn., July 9, 1879. It formulated rules which were adopted by State and local boards throughout the country, and the signal success which attended the coöperation of the National Board with the State and local boards is a matter of history. Commerce and traffic were regulated, not suspended, and the epidemic was almost entirely confined to Memphis. The Board was called upon to deal with other epidemics of yellow fever and also with the great smallpox epidemic on our northern border in 1882, and with equal success. In the last the Board coöperated with the State and local boards of New York, employing inspectors to aid the State authorities in carrying out their rules. No collisions or conflicts of authority occurred, and the disease was stamped out.

As the time for the law to expire approached the officers and employés of the Marine Hospital Service began their hostile work, and by fair means and foul succeeded in preventing the reënactment of the law.

All agree that we should have a good sanitary service to guard against the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases from abroad. All agree that in great emergencies the State authorities alone are and have been unequal to the task.

In 1878 the head of the Marine Hospital Service tried to convince Congress that his service alone could do the work, but failed. The decision was that a board (see act March 2, 1879) composed of experts from different States, seven in number, could best administer this service to the country.

The members of the Board to-day are just as much interested as ever in seeing the country provided with the best and most efficient means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, but lest they should be charged with seeking their own advantage have said nothing during the progress of this discussion except as one of its members has been called upon by the joint committee for his personal views. I do not know that the committee were even aware that he was a member. Personally I should not continue in the Government service even if the Board were re clothed with the power granted in the act of June 2, 1879, but I wish to say that in my opinion, after a careful study of the questions involved for more than ten years, you could do no greater service in a sanitary point of view than by securing the passage of the act of June 2, 1879, in the very words, as a substitute for the bill now under consideration.

I doubt if a single member of the present board would remain, but I am sure that the theory of a board as now organized is the surest means of securing successful coöperation. I trust you will secure the coöperation of your ablest colleagues, and that you may be able to pass the substitute suggested.

I have written hastily and on the impulse of the moment, without consultation, my own personal views. I do not speak for anyone else or wish to be considered as speaking officially. I only direct your attention to the public records in, as I believe to be, the best interests of the country. I do not care to have my name known or appear in the matter.

The points I give will enable you and your colleagues to understand the matter fully if you have opportunity to look them up.

Hon. AMOS CUMMINGS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

During the reading of the foregoing letter, the time of Mr. CUMMINGS having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, with this light thrown full upon this bill, I withdraw my motion to strike out the third section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port, and otherwise make publicly known, the rules and regulations made by him, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports for securing the best sanitary condition of such vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crew, before their departure for any port in the United States, and in the course of the voyage; and all such other rules and regulations as shall be observed in the inspection of the same on the arrival thereof at any quarantine station at the port of destination, and for the disinfection and isolation of the same, and the treatment of cargo and persons on board, so as to prevent the introduction of cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious diseases; and it shall not be lawful for any vessel to enter said port to discharge its cargo, or land its passengers, except upon the certificate of the health officer at such quarantine station certifying that said rules and regulations have in all respects been observed and complied with, as well on his part as on the part of the said vessel and its master, in respect to the same and to its cargo, passengers, and crew; and the master of every such vessel shall produce and deliver to the collector of customs at said port of entry, together with the other papers of the vessel, the said bills of health required to be obtained at the port of departure and the certificate herein required to be obtained from the health officer at the port of entry; and that the bills of health herein prescribed shall be considered as part of the ship's papers, and when duly certified to by the proper consular or other officer of the United States, over his official signature and seal, shall be accepted as evidence of the statements therein contained in any court of the United States.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I simply desire that the House may have all the light possible on this subject, and I wish to call the attention of the committee to an extract from a speech delivered by Dr. Holt in New Orleans, who, I believe, is regarded as one of the most distinguished and competent experts on this question in the country. It bears upon the point made and the statement so strongly presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. Dr. Holt, in a speech delivered in the city of New Orleans a few days ago, used these words:

The attempt now being made through the Harris bill in the Senate is merely a transferrence of all the leading features together with the mixed responsibility of the former National Board of Health, confiding this multiple and enormous trust to one man, the Surgeon-General of the United States Marine Hospital Service.

As a result of its enactment, if successful, we will have the detailing of strangers to render the hypothetical aid in coöperating with State and local authorities with such scenes of discord and excitement as we witnessed here during the régime of the National Board of Health, and as we remember, in Florida, during the yellow fever of 1888, between the State and United States Marine Hospital service officials, and in New York last fall in the interchange of such compliments and rejoinders as "He has lied" between the State quarantine officers and the agent of the United States Marine Hospital.

I am against the mongrel institution.

The informal amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 6 insert:

"Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the establishment or maintenance of any quarantine station at any locality where properly constituted local authority, having jurisdiction in the matter, shall officially determine such action or proposed action to be dangerous to the lives or safety of the people of such locality."

Mr. COVERT. The history of the world has demonstrated the fact that in times of great excitement, arising from the presence or expected presence of infectious diseases, very often "judgment has flown to brutish beasts and men have lost their reason."

I submit that the very genius of quarantine is isolation, perfect and entire isolation. Constituted authority in seasons of excitement does not always recognize this. Only a few years ago, during the prevalence of excitement over the presence or approach of disease, the Government established a quarantine station on Staten Island in the midst of a thickly populated community. What was the result? An outraged people under the cover of darkness razed the buildings to the ground. If ever men were justified in an action of this character it seems to me this action on the part of this people had as its justification the defense of home and family against the imminent danger of deadly disease.

Only last summer a citizen of the State of New York, the governor of the State, made a private purchase of Fire Island, located within the jurisdiction of Suffolk County, in my district, a popular summer resort, paid a heavy price for it, and an effort is now being made, through the action of the New York Legislature, to make over this purchase to the people of the State of New York and to constitute Fire Island for all time to come a quarantine station.

Against this, Mr. Chairman, voicing the sentiment of the people I represent, giving expression as it seems to me to the instincts of common humanity, I protest, I earnestly protest, against the establishment of this quarantine station in the midst of a populous locality which renders the people subject to the dangers of infection.

Mr. RAYNER. Has the Government of the United States the right to take charge of Fire Island without the consent of the Legislature of the State of New York?

Mr. COVERT. I say to the gentleman from Maryland that as I construe the terms of this bill the Government of the United States has the right to designate any quarantine station located in a State and establish it as the site of the Federal quarantine station.

Mr. RAYNER. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that there is a constitutional provision on that point that the Government of the United States has no right to take possession of any part of the territory of any State for the erection of forts, docks, arsenals, quarantine stations, or anything else without the consent of the State. That is Article VIII of the Constitution; unless it can be done by the process of condemnation.

Mr. COVERT. The very fact, Mr. Chairman, that there are differences of construction between my friend from Maryland and myself, raises the suspicion that there will be danger of the construction to be given to this bill and its terms by others. And if it be true, as my friend asserts, that there can be no longer doubt as to the proper construction of this measure, certainly there can be no danger in the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, a word in reply.

It seems to me, sir, and I ask the attention of the House for a moment, that every effort is being made to deprive the bill before the House of every feature and semblance of a Federal quarantine measure.

Let us examine the matter calmly for a moment, and look at the bill in its details and what may be effected by it. If the government of Germany or Hungary or France or any other government on the face of the earth should commit an outrage upon a citizen of the United States anywhere, a million swords would leap from their scabbards, our war ships would plow the seas with their guns shotted to the muzzle, if necessary, to avenge the wrong.

But when Germany or Hungary or Italy or France or any other nation sends hither in the reeking rags of the immigrant steerage a dangerous pestilence or plague, with death and desolation upon its wings, the Government of the United States is to sit down and hang its head in shame and humiliating helplessness and say to inferior jurisdictions of State or city, "By your leave New York city, by your gracious and condescending permission Tammany Hall," the great Government of the United States will lend a hand in the protection of its own people from this invading and destroying pestilence.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that the Federal Government has long enough occupied this attitude of humiliating subordination to inferior jurisdictions, and this House ought not to suffer it to continue any longer in that situation; and if it does, it is not at all unlikely that within the compass of a year this nation may repent in sackcloth and ashes its pusillanimous course of inaction.

I am therefore opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT].

Mr. COCKRAN. May I ask to have that amendment read? I thought I understood it before the last speech; but now I ask to have it read. [Laughter.]

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BACON. I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me that this amendment is altogether too broad, and that it thrusts into this House a controversy which was settled within the State of New York last summer to the satisfaction of the majority of its citizens.

When the cholera was brought into the port of New York last summer and threatened the whole country, we found ourselves unprovided with any sufficient quarantine ground. The governor of the State of New York patriotically stepped in and purchased Fire Island, and provided it as a quarantine station. This island is off the south shore of Long Island, and is a strip of sand upon which nobody lives, so far as I know, except the light-house keeper and the people who were in an old hotel there. Whether that was a proper thing to do or not, was a question which was widely discussed in the State of New York. The local authorities of Suffolk County, and of that neighborhood, undertook to prevent the use of that island for quarantine purposes; through the rest of the State the action of the governor received universal and hearty praise and approval. The power of the State was invoked to settle that question, and did settle it.

It seems to me that this amendment reopens it in this House and reopens it improperly. I am opposed to any interference of the sort, and I am opposed to making this bill seem to authorize the Government of the United States to interfere and interrupt the course of a procedure upon the part of the State authorities, which has met with public approbation there, and which has excited no animosity anywhere except among a few people who reside upon the shore of Long Island, separated from Fire Island by about 10 miles of open water. Fire Island, the use of which is referred to for the purpose of illustration by my colleague [Mr. COVERT], and is in fact the occasion for the introduction of this amendment, is a strip of sand separated from Long Island by the Great South Bay, there being many miles of water between it and any human habitation, and is as isolated as any place fit for a quarantine station could well be. The effect of the amendment, as it seems to me, is to give the authorities of a single county in any State power to nullify the action of the Government of the United States and of the State of New York, in making the best possible selection of a quarantine station. I am opposed to the amendment, and I trust it will not prevail.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply to my colleague [Mr. BACON]. It is true, as has been intimated by my colleague, that when the local authorities, having the power to deal with the question of the public health in the locality for which they had been chosen to office, took action expressing their disapproval of this danger of contagion being brought to their midst, the armed force of the State was called into requisition by the chief executive, quite unnecessarily, as was thought by a good many well-thinking people of the State of New York.

Now, I have yet to hear one word in reply to the suggestion I made a little while ago, that there is no reason under God's eternal, over-bending heaven why, if quarantine is established anywhere, it should not be established where there would be no danger of contagion, no danger of the spread of disease among the people of the locality where these pesthouses are sought to be established. The statement of my colleague [Mr. BACON] that Fire Island is completely isolated is not correct. Fire Island was in communication with the main land every day last summer.

Mr. BACON. By ferry.

Mr. COVERT. Yes; there was possible danger of the spread of disease then. There will be possible danger of the spread of contagion if this plan is carried out, and if the Legislature of the State of New York shall take the property that Governor Flower has purchased.

Mr. BACON. Will my colleague yield for a question now?

Mr. COVERT. Not now; my time is much too limited. Mr. Chairman, I submit again that quarantine does not consist in moving the danger line from one point to another simply for the sake of removal. Let the isolation of quarantine be perfect and complete. It can be made so, as we are told by scientists. Our own common sense tells us that it may. In the face of this admitted fact, why should this Congress needlessly endanger the lives and safety of entire communities by giving permission to the Federal authorities or to the authorities of any State or municipality to establish a quarantine station in the midst of a locality teeming with people, subject to all the dangers of infection?

The formal amendment was withdrawn.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COVERT, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. COVERT), there were—ayes 28, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw any imputation made intentionally or unintentionally by me upon the course of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. He tells me that he did promise me eight minutes of his time, but in the prevalent excitement he overlooked it when he moved that all debate be closed. I believe what he says, and exonerate him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say further that this bill, in my opinion, overrides all State laws. I was justified in objecting to its consideration. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] did refer to me rather unctuously in his speech on Saturday—not only once, but twice or thrice—as being the gentleman who had interposed factious objection to the consideration of the bill. The rules bore me out in my action. Now, sir, I want to serve notice on this House that hereafter, whenever it is proposed to consider a bill which overrides State rights it will get no quarter from me. [Applause on the Democratic side, and derisive jeers on the Republican side.]

I intend hereafter, sir, to use every parliamentary means under the rules of the House to defeat such bills. The lines of State rights have been almost obliterated, in my opinion, by legislation on this floor. It is time that State right lines were reëstablished, and I intend to give my little quota of effort toward reestablishing them. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after section 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

That when in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury it shall be necessary to an effective quarantine service to provide buildings and appliances for the disinfection of vessels, their passengers and cargoes, at such ports or places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations under State or municipal authority, or having such they are, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, insufficient for adequate protection, he is hereby authorized to provide such buildings and appliances, and when necessary to acquire a site or to enlarge one already acquired for quarantine purposes, he is hereby authorized and empowered to select and acquire title to the same, in accordance with existing laws governing the selection and purchase of sites for federal buildings and the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department thereunder; and that when, in his judgment, it will be advantageous to the Government, he is authorized to effect, when practicable, an arrangement with the authorities of any State having a local quarantine station established, by which the title and control of said station shall be acquired by the United States.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the attention of the House to the fact that there seems to be in the bill before us no express authority to purchase any ground for the purpose of erecting buildings, hospitals, or any other appliances necessary to an effective quarantine service. I have studied the bill with some care to see whether I could discover any authority conferred by implication for that purpose and I have failed to discover any; and it therefore results that the passage of this bill in its present shape confers upon the Federal Government no power or authority to acquire title to one foot of ground or to erect any buildings for hospital purposes or for disinfecting purposes at any place.

Now, an effective quarantine plant involves, as everybody knows, buildings for the purposes of hospitals, for nursing infected patients, and for disinfecting cargoes, merchandise, and passengers; and while the bill refers to regulations, and makes provision for regulations, it seems to provide none of those material subjects to which the regulations refer.

I propose in the amendment to make another provision—for transferring from time to time, as need requires, the local quarantine plants to Federal ownership and Federal control, thus conforming in an easy and regular way to that progressive feeling that is developing in the United States very rapidly, that the Federal Government and not the State government should exercise exclusive control over the important subject of our quarantine service.

These two provisions meet this requirement of the situation; and without them, as I have observed, the Federal Government has no authority to buy one foot of ground or to erect one building to carry out the purposes of Federal quarantine.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. BROSIUS, and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BROSIUS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 6, insert the following:

That for the security of the people of the United States against the introduction of the Asiatic cholera, pending the establishment of the Federal system of quarantine provided for in this act, all immigration from European and Asiatic countries shall be suspended for the term of one year from the passage of this act. And during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any immigrant from said countries or any of them to enter the United States from any foreign port or place.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to trespass upon the patience of the House by any remarks in support of this amendment. If the members of the House are not sufficiently sensible of the importance of this provision under existing circumstances, and, in view of the approaching World's Fair, which can not possibly be a success if the people of the United States are in the state of terror and disquietude which will necessarily exist if pestilence or plague should visit our shores during its continuancy, then no argument that I can make would demonstrate that proposition. I desire to have the sense of the House on the amendment.

At the request of Mr. COCKRAN the amendment was again read.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is that a substitute for section 7?

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered as an amendment to the section.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 79; so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add after section 7: "That there shall be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended, or so much of the same as may be necessary, from time to time, under the direction of the President and according to his discretion, to meet emergencies arising in the execution of the provisions of this act."

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to suggest to the House the impossibility of carrying out the provisions of this law and making an effective quarantine service at any port or any place in the United States without some money, and this bill carries no appropriation. It seems to me that the amount named in my amendment, or some other amount, ought to be appropriated for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will say to my friend that that difficulty can be obviated entirely in this way: This bill having passed, an appropriation can be put into the sundry civil bill when it is before the House.

Mr. BROSIUS. That is very true, and I have had that in mind; but at the same time I desire the sense of the House upon this amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, in line 3, after the word "fever," these words, "or other contagious or infectious disease." I offer this amendment so that the provisions of the bill may not be limited to cholera or yellow fever. There are other objectionable contagious or infectious diseases—small-pox for example.

Mr. RAYNER. I think that amendment is right.

The amendment was adopted.

Section 8 was read and adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add the following as section 9:

"SEC. 9. That whenever the proper authorities in any State, county, or municipality shall surrender to the United States the use of buildings, structures, appliances, or disinfecting apparatus at quarantine stations at which such authority has possession, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to receive the same and to pay reasonable compensation to the owners thereof for their use.

Mr. RAYNER. I will not make any objection to that.

Mr. BROSIUS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida who offers this amendment whether he would object to modifying it so as to include the acquiring of title and control of local quarantine appliances by arrangement between the Federal and the State authorities.

Mr. MALLORY. I prefer to let the amendment stand in its present shape, and not to complicate it with any other question.

Mr. BROSIUS. The amendment as it is now worded contemplates merely acquiring the use. Would it not be better to acquire control and title if necessary, and if satisfactory to both parties?

Mr. MALLORY. In some instances I think that would require the action of State Legislatures and would therefore take too much time.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding after section 8 the following:

"SEC. 9. That this act shall not take effect until January 1 A. D. 2000."

[Laughter.]

Mr. ANTONY. I offer that amendment because I think the bill ought to take effect in the year 2000, the date from which Edward Bellamy "looked backward," as it is strictly in accordance with his theory of government. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill itself being an amendment, the question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this is a motion to report the bill as amended to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. No; before that question can be put the bill itself must be voted upon as an amendment.

Mr. CHIPMAN. What bill is it, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The one which this committee has been considering during the whole of this legislative day.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I find that a number of gentlemen still misunderstand the exact posture of the question. I hope the Chair will again state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition which the Committee of the Whole has been considering was reported as an amendment to the original bill; it was a proposition to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new measure. To that amendment certain amendments have been offered during the whole of this legislative day. The Committee of the Whole has now finished the consideration of the measure offered as an amendment, and of all amendments thereto. The question is now on agreeing to the bill as amended. That is the question upon which the Committee of the Whole is to vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that question is taken I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Suppose that this substitute as amended should be adopted and reported to the House, will there then be an opportunity to have a separate vote on any of the amendments to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the proposition would come before the House as a single amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is what I was afraid of.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I give notice that I shall demand a separate vote——

Mr. DINGLEY. You can not do it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I hope we shall vote down the present motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question just propounded by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] might more properly be submitted to the Speaker when the matter comes before the House; and the Chair of course leaves the question for his decision.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RAYNER, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 95, noes 31.

Mr. RAYNER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

Mr. TURPIN. Pending that I desire to state, as I have been out of the House for a moment, that I have an amendment which I desire to offer as an additional section. I do not think it will be objected to on either side.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. TURPIN. Then I ask unanimous consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. TURPIN. I think there will be no objection to the amendment if it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TURPIN. Let the amendment be read, subject to objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. ANTONY)—ayes 111, noes 34.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OUTHWAITE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9757) to provide for the better protection of commerce and for the general welfare by the establishment of a national quarantine, etc., and had directed him to report back the same with an amendment.

Mr. RAYNER. I would like to have a moment, with the consent of the House, to make an explanation as to the parliamentary status of this bill. I propose to make a motion now (and I can only do it by unanimous consent) that Senate bill No. 2707, which is upon the Speaker's table, be substituted for the bill which has just been adopted in Committee of the Whole; and then I propose that the provisions of the House bill as agreed to in Committee of the Whole be substituted for the provisions of the Senate bill. It is necessary to do this in order that we may have a conference with the Senate on this question. Otherwise our bill will go the Senate, the Senate bill remaining here on our table; and in that position of the case there can be no conference.

The only way to reach a conference is to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill; and if that be agreed to I will move that the provisions of the bill as just adopted in Committee of the Whole be substituted for those of the Senate bill. The measure will then be in a position to go to a conference. I ask unanimous consent for the purpose I have stated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish it understood that unanimous consent must be contingent upon permission to have a separate vote upon the amendment of which I have already given notice.

Mr. RAYNER. I understand that.

Mr. BURROWS. There can not be any objection to the arrangement proposed.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Maryland yields to me for a moment. I understand that the object of the gentleman is to substitute——

Mr. TURPIN. I will object to the request for unanimous consent, unless I be allowed an opportunity to offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been ordered; the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has the floor, in his own right, and has yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Maryland proposes, as I understand, to ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill and then to amend the Senate bill by substituting the bill agreed upon in Committee of the Whole, the object being, as he states, to refer the whole question to a committee of conference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very bad method of legislation. It takes from the body of this House the opportunity to determine what it wants to do in regard to a bill and refers the whole matter to a committee of conference composed of three Senators and three Representatives; and when the matter comes back to us it comes back with a report from the chairman of the Senate committee and a report from the chairman of the House committee, and in nine cases out of ten, if there are many amendments, although there may be serious difference of opinion, the question is voted upon without a proper understanding of the purpose to be accomplished.

Besides, under the rules, the report of a committee of conference is not amendable. It may be referred back to the committee with instructions on the part of the House or the Senate to insist on a particular amendment, but the report must be voted upon as a whole. Therefore the course proposed by the gentleman from Maryland is calculated to restrict the free action of the House upon this question.

Mr. RAYNER. Under the gentleman's proposition our bill, when it goes to the Senate, will go upon the Calendar and may never be reached; under my proposition the bill when it goes there will be sent to conference, and the bill before the conference committee will be indentical in its provisions with the bill to which the Committee of the Whole has agreed. The only way to get the question properly before the Senate so that it may go to conference is to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill; there is no other method of parliamentary procedure by which the matter can get into conference. If the view of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] be adopted our bill will be sent to the Calendar of the Senate with very little chance of its being reached.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Oh, the Senate has plenty of time and can pass any bill that it is disposed to pass.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senate has not plenty of time, and unless we adopt the course suggested by me the measure may fail. I ask unanimous consent for the substitution of Senate bill No. 2707 for the House bill just adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTONY. I object.

Mr. TURPIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether I shall have an opportunity to offer an amendment as an additional section.

The SPEAKER. That depends upon whether the previous question is ordered.

Mr. TURPIN. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be now read.

Mr. RAYNER. I think I can give you a moment's time. If you will give way a moment I will let you get in your amendment. Mr. Speaker, is there objection to my amendment?

Mr. TURPIN. I give way with that understanding.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made by the gentleman of Texas [Mr. ANTONY].

Mr. RAYNER. I move that the bill which I now send to the Clerk's desk be substituted for the bill just adopted in Committee of the Whole. This is the Senate bill; and if this proposition be agreed to I am going to move to substitute for the provisions of the Senate bill those of the House bill as already agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the position of the question. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported back to the House a bill which had been introduced by the gentleman from Maryland, with the recommendation that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and that an amendment reported by the committee be substituted. This bill, with the amendment of the committee, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which has just reported it back with a recommendation that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and another proposition be inserted. That is the status of the bill now before the House. What is now the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. RAYNER. I propose to substitute a bill which is not only germane but which is almost identical in its terms—the Senate bill upon the same subject. If this proposition be agreed to, then I propose to substitute for the Senate bill the provisions of the House bill as adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAIN. I make the point of order that we can not do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that any amendment which the gentleman from Maryland may think proper to offer to the bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole would be in order.

Mr. RAYNER. I offer the bill which I have sent to the Clerk's desk as an amendment to the bill now before the House.

Mr. REED. In the nature of a substitute?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. As I understand, the Committee of the Whole has adopted certain amendments to the bill as reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Now, the text of this bill must be perfected by the House by the adoption or rejection of the amendments reported before the substitute can be offered.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman again state his point?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. There is now before the House a bill which has been considered in Committee of the Whole and to which important amendments have been recommended by that committee. I submit that before a substitute can be offered those amendments must be acted on, so that the text of the original proposition may be perfected.

The SPEAKER. Under the general practice of the House all amendments reported by a committee are usually disposed of before amendments offered in any other way are considered. The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole stand in the same position as amendments which might be recommended by any other committee.

Mr. REED. But an amendment to an amendment proposed by the Committee of the Whole must be permissible in the House, and the gentleman from Maryland proposes to substitute for the action of the Committee of the Whole an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. CRAIN. But you can not present a substitute for a substitute.

The SPEAKER. There is some confusion in the terms. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did not report a substitute, but an amendment, and expressly so stated. They recommended that all after the enacting clause of what is known as the Rayner bill be stricken out and that something be inserted in its stead. Of course if the committee had reported an amendment in lieu of the Rayner bill this present situation could have been avoided. But they reported an amendment. Now, the Committee of the Whole have reported back that bill with the recommendation that the following amendment be agreed to: striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the action taken by the committee.

Mr. REED. And the gentleman from Maryland now moves an amendment to that amendment in the nature of a substitute, on the recommendation of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to substitute something on the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. REED. Which makes it an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. CRAIN. But before that the amendments of the committee must be acted upon.

The SPEAKER. There is but one amendment from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose the motion of the gentleman from Maryland should prevail, and then he moves to substitute the amendment he has reported from the committee, will the measure then not be in just the same position as if he made none of these motions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Maryland that there is no way except by unanimous consent—the Senate bill being on the table——

Mr. CRAIN. To which we object.

The SPEAKER (continuing). For the gentleman to get action on the Senate bill. He may pass a bill identical in terms with the Senate bill.
